PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 14, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, July 10, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who abidest beyond all change, who art always better than our highest hopes and greater than our noblest thoughts, show us, we beseech Thee, how we may better serve Thee who hast made us in Thine image; and, in all our strivings for the Nation's weal, may we be conscious of our ability to meet the high demands of public service because of Thine indwelling.

Bless every citizen of our beloved country; make us all worthy of our freedom and faithful to our trust; and give us a wide and vivid sympathy for others, lest we forget the long suffering of Thy love toward us. Bestow upon us all the unmeasured gift of peace; keep us pure in thought, in word, and in deed, and grant that we may be a power for righteousness among our fellow men as the lesser things of time and sense fade before the vision of the perfect Man, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MINTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, July 13, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 24

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 12,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 610, a report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 215 (75th Cong.), entitled "Survey of Experiences in Profit Sharing and Possibilities of Incentive Taxation," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance, and 1,000 copies for the House document room.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 25

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representativec concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Finance of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed for its use 10,000 additional copies of the hearings held before a subcommittee of said committee during the Seventy-fifth Congress pursuant to the resolution (S. Res. 215) providing for an investigation of existing profit-sharing systems between employers and employees in the United States.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 26

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed for its use 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the bill (S. 2009) entitled "Transportation Act of 1939."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 29), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress at the unveiling in the rotunda, together with such other matter as the joint committee may deem pertinent thereto, upon the occasion of the acceptance of the statue of Will Rogers, presented by the State of Oklahoma, 5,200 copies, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use of and distribution by the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall provide suitable illustrations to be bound with these proceedings.

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN ALASKA FOR PARK AND OTHER PURPOSES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain public lands in Alaska, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Washington (D. C.) Youth Council, protesting against the lengthening of W. P. A. hours of labor, and favoring the prompt reestablishment of the Federal Theater under the W. P. A., and also that the 25-percent local sponsorship of Federal art projects be withdrawn, and so forth, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Garfield Heights, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation to liberalize the provisions of the recently enacted relief and work relief joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia, signed by its president, L. A. Carruthers, protesting against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the government of the District of Columbia without a reasonable opportunity to study the proposed legislation and to hold hearings thereon, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the City Council of Fall River, Mass., favoring the adoption of a policy that all American flags bought, sold, and displayed be made in America, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATION OF CONDUCT OF FEDERAL JUDGES—PETITION

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, a petition directed to Congress and to all State and local bar associations of the United States, the petition being signed by the special judiciary committee of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. It has to do with the opposition of this bar association to the enactment of the so-called Chandler bill, House bill 4038, to amend the criminal law to make certain necessary lawful official acts of Federal judges high misdemeanors.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Pursuant to resolutions adopted at a regular business meeting of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, held on May 2, 1939, in the Federal courthouse, Foley Square, New York City, at which the association unanimously condemned the Chandler bill, H. R. 4038, the president of the association, Henry Ward Beer, was directed to forward a copy of the resolutions to all members of the Judiciary Committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and to appoint a committee of nine members of the association to draft a petition to Congress on behalf of the association and to invite all State and local bar associations of the United States and other parties interested, to take immediate and active steps to prevent the enactment of the Chandler bill, H. R. 4038.

The petition drafted by said committee is herewith submitted to the Congress. Copies thereof are being sent to all State and local bar associations throughout the United States and to others whom it may concern, urging them to adopt and send to Congress like resolutions and actively to oppose the Chandler bill and all similar bills for the reasons set forth in said petition.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY WARD BEER,
President, Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, 29 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

NEW YORK CITY, May 18, 1399.

In the Congress of the United States of America

PETITION OF THE FEDERAL BAR ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, NEW JERSEY, AND CONNECTICUT

To the Congress of the United States of America.
To all State and local bar associations of the United States.
To all others whom it may concern:

Against the enactment of the Chandler bill (H. R. 4038) to amend the criminal law to make certain necessary lawful official acts of Federal judges high misdemeanors

(By the special judiciary committee of the association)

On behalf of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, and because the judges of the Federal court, whose integrity is impliedly attacked in the Chandler bill, to amend the criminal law, are unfortunately not in a position to defend themselves against the attacks implied in the bill, we are voluntarily writing this protest.

We have carefully read the Chandler bill now pending before the House Judiciary Committee as to the amendment of the law concerning the Federal judiciary. The recent exposures concerning a very few of the many members of that body of splendid men have doubtlessly inspired the presentation of what we regard as about as harmful a piece of legislation as we have known in a long time.

The Federal judiciary, taken as a whole, are the finest body of men to be found in any country. They are able, faithful, industrious and public spirited. This bill we regard as wholly unnecessary, and its passage would be a wanton reflection upon the integrity of the Federal judiciary, against which we feel it our duty to enter our vigorous protest.

The Federal judiciary have not, in our judgment, fallen so low in the estimation of our fellow countrymen as to warrant the serious consideration of this insulting assault. It is an attempt to indict and intimidate the Nation's judiciary. There are ample laws to control and punish a Federal judge who befouls the administration of justice in our Federal courts.

The provisions of the bill that make it a crime for a judge to accept bribes, directly or indirectly, or to practice law while holding judicial office, or to encourage or promote inexcusable delays in the administration of justice, are all eminently well cared for by our present laws.

As illustrating the recklessness and unwisdom of the proposed law—it would make a Federal judge guilty of a high misdemeanor if he were to talk to a lawyer regarding ex parte matters in the absence of the representative of the opposing party. There is no occasion for such an insinuation against the courts as is involved in this provision.

The opportunities afforded by this section for an unsuccessful party to blackmail our judges can readily be imagined.

Another provision of the proposed law makes it a criminal offense for any Federal judge so to administer his judicial duties as to result in his being promoted to a higher court. That is about as loose and foolish a provision as could possibly be imagined. Under the construction apparently placed upon it by the architect of this remarkable piece of proposed legislation, if a judge by honesty of purpose, industry, and understanding of his judicial obligations so exercises his judicial talents as to become, as many are, outstanding and deserving of promotion, he will have violated section 12 of the proposed bill, which provides against administering the office in any respect for the purpose of advancing the personal ambition of the judge or to increase his popularity. If he strikes a popular response from his countrymen by discharging his duty in declaring an act of Congress either constitutional or unconstitutional, as the case may be, thereby meeting with public approval, he stands every chance of being charged with being a criminal.

The whole framework of the bill and its purpose reflect upon the entire judiciary. It is for that reason, and because these gentlemen are so situated that they are unable to protect themselves, that we have ventured to address Congress.

This same section 12 makes it a crime for a judge to take any interest in politics, which is an incident of citizenship and one that should be encouraged. In all the years of the existence of the Federal judiciary, we do not know of a single case where, in the exercise of their rights of citizenship, the participation of judges in politics has been abused. There are many instances in which eminent Federal judges have exercised that right to the benefit of the community and in which their efforts have been rewarded with recognition. As will be remembered, President Taft was a Federal circuit judge who later became President. And the present Chief Justice Hughes was a distinguished member of the United States Supreme Court and of his party before he became Chief Justice, but we never heard of any criticism of either of these gentlemen on that score. There could be none.

All in all the bill is an undeserved rebuke to as fine and courageous a body of men as are anywhere in the world to be found.

In no country have the people's faith in all their judges been so gloriously justified, and in no country are they more highly respected than with us. For a century and a half the United States has grown and developed under a system of jurisprudence unequaled in the world. That peace and order are the keynote of our society is due to the all-abiding faith in our judges and our courts which have guided the destinies of this Republic throughout our history.

We have inherited, and up to this date have enjoyed, an incorruptible judiciary. Those who are sponsoring this bill must be actuated by the fear that our Federal judiciary have suddenly become corrupt, which is untrue. Among the hundreds of Federal judges who have occupied the bench there are only a rare few against whom criticism is aimed. From time immemorial in our glorious history, whenever commotion, distress, and lawlessness shake the country, there is, and there always has been, one safe and quiet haven for our citizens: It is our Federal courts of justice as administered by our Federal judiciary. Nothing has yet happened or will happen in the future to disturb our love, pride, and affection for the men who wear the Federal robes.

To advocate that the Chandler bill become a law is to unjustifiably inflame public feeling, not only against the Federal judges but against the Government.

Accordingly, upon the direction of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, we herewith respectfully petition you to condemn and reject the Chandler bill as a measure that was projected without proper understanding of the patriotic pride of our Federal judges in their daily task. There is not, in our judgment, any basis for such passionate, exaggerated fears that manifest themselves in the proposed bill. To enact such a law would be to gravely reflect, without cause, upon our whole judicial system. The consequences of this implied challenge against the integrity of our Federal courts will, on the whole, be unwholesome, even though Congressman CHANDLER'S motives be of the highest. We, on the contrary, should continue to unite the country by a common affection and good feeling for our judiciary, who, by the way, are not any too well paid for the services they render. The post is considered one of great honor and dignity and will, we hope, continue to be so regarded notwithstanding implied insults of this sort upon the character of our judiciary.

Trusting that further consideration of the bill will lead to its rejection on the ground that it implies an affront to the entire judicial system and that our laws are ample to protect our citizens against every possible breach of faith or duty on the part of our judiciary, we are,

Respectfully,

Samuel Untermyer, chairman; Merritt Lane, vice chairman; Morgan J. O'Brien, William S. Bennet, George W. Grimm, Jr., Arthur B. Weiss, Maxwell H. Goldstein, Harold St. L. O'Dougherty, George A. Arkwright, H. Harvey Harwood, special judiciary committee of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2723) to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 791) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6070) to amend section 5 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 792) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 153) to transfer jurisdiction over commercial prints and labels, for the purpose of copyright registration, to the Register of Copyrights, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 793) thereon.

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (S. 21) relating to the citizenship of Harry Ray Smith, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 794) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2410) relating to the development of farm units on public lands under Federal reclamation projects with funds furnished by the Farm Security Administration, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 795) thereon.

Mr. KING (for Mr. MCCARRAN), from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1982) to amend the act entitled "An act to classify officers and members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 796) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2788) to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor," approved February 23, 1931, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 797) thereon.

SURPLUS PRODUCTS OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY—HOUSE BILL PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the bill (H. R. 5681) to authorize the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase and distribute surplus products of the fishing industry, recently passed the House and was referred to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. It transpires that a similar Senate bill has heretofore been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that it has been reported, and is now on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 5681 and that it be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. NEELY. I will yield to Senators for the purpose of transacting routine business, provided no debate will thereby be occasioned, as I am anxious to proceed with the unfinished business, which is the so-called anti-block-booking and blind-selling bill.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN EASEMENTS TO NEW YORK CITY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on yesterday, during the legislative session of the day, and while the Social Security Act was under consideration, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] asked unanimous consent to have Senate bill 2662, Calendar No. 825, considered. The bill was taken up for consideration and passed. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] made some inquiries as to whether or not the measure had been heard by a committee, and a short discussion—not on the merits of the bill, but as to procedure—took place and is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, before the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, left the city day before yesterday he handed me this bill to report; and, being a member of the committee, I reported it, and found that it was a bill which had been approved by polling the committee. Yesterday morning I received some letters from apparently public-spirited and reputable citizens of New York protesting against the bill. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and other Senators called my attention to similar letters which they had received, and indicated that the bill ought not to be passed without a hearing by the committee.

I thereupon talked with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and showed him some of the letters. He said that they were a small group that were dissatisfied with the location of the bridge but that the authorities were all in favor of it. I asked him, accordingly, to write me a letter which I could show to the Senator from Maine and other members of the committee who had received these letters from New York and let me have the other side of the matter in answer to these protests.

Sometime after that the bill was taken up when I was absent and passed by unanimous consent upon motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who, of course, acted in absolute good faith. Because I had assured the Senator from Maine that the bill probably would not be taken up until the calendar was reached anyway for consideration, and that I would give him a copy of the letter which the Senator from New York was to write me before action was taken, I feel in honor bound to the Senator from Maine and to the others to serve notice that I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I do not want to prejudice the bill. I do not want my action to indicate what my personal position is; but I feel that, as the Senator reporting the bill, I should be betraying a trust and a responsibility I owe to my colleagues here not to take this action, so that they may have ample time to study the bill and consider it and decide whether or not it shoud go back to the committee for a hearing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Parliamentarian informs me that, in addition to entering the motion which I entered for a reconsideration of the vote by which Senate bill 2662 was agreed to, I should make a motion that the House return the papers. I now make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

NOMINATION AND CONFIRMATION OF ELMER D. DAVIES

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, in further connection with the message from the President of the United States addressed to the Senate and submitted yesterday, in which the President stated that he was unable to accede to the request to return to the Senate the resolution advising and consenting to the appointment of Elmer D. Davies to be United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, I would like unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD in further support of the opposition to this nomination an affidavit sworn to by W. S. Noble, a practicing attorney at the Nashville, Tenn., bar for over 30 years, dated April 1, 1939, and witnessed by Mr. Joe L. Jenkins, notary public, attesting to the fact that Mr. Noble became a member of the Ku Klux Klan soon after its organization, and that he was present with Mr. Davies in the Ku Klux Klan Lodge at Nashville during Klan meetings and on a number of occasions. I wish also to have incorporated in the RECORD a similar affidavit signed by C. D. Johns, of the county of Davidson, State of Tennessee, formerly sheriff of Davidson County, and affidavits to the same effect signed by E. B. Wilson, of 1404 Ashwood Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., and an additional affidavit signed by Mr. Noble again, attesting to the Ku Klux Klan membership of Mr. Davies. I wish to have included also in the RECORD resolutions opposing the confirmation of Mr. Davies' appointment passed by the following organizations: Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Forgers, and Helpers; Lodge 154, International Association of Machinists; Nashville Trades and Labor Council; Tennessee State Federation of Labor; and four lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; also, a telegram from Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

There being no objection, the affidavits, resolutions, and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Davidson, ss:

I, W. S. Noble, being first duly sworn, make oath as follows:

That I have been a practicing attorney at the Nashville bar over 30 years and have known Mr. Elmer D. Davies ever since he began practicing law in Nashville.

I became a member of the Ku Klux Klan soon after its organization in Nashville and continued to be a member thereof from that time until it was disbanded in Nashville, Tenn., during the time that it was in active existence in Nashville, and if he ever resigned or severed his connection with it I never knew of it. I have been present with him in the lodge hall during Klan meetings on a number of occasions.

W. S. NOBLE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of April 1939.

JOE L. JENKINS, Notary Public.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Davidson, ss:

I, C. D. Johns, being first duly sworn, make oath as follows:

I have been a citizen of Nashville for 50 years and have known Mr. Elmer Davies only after he began the practice of law in Nashville.

I became a member of the Ku Klux Klan soon after its organization in Nashville, and was actively interested in its work for several years as an organizer.

I know that Mr. Elmer Davies was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, and have seen him in the meeting a number of times. I have no ill will toward Mr. Davies. I was formerly sheriff of Davidson County, Tenn.

I, E. B. Wilson, being first duly sworn, make oath as follows:

That I have lived in Nashville for many years, and at present reside at 1404 Ashwood Avenue, and that I have personally known Mr. Elmer Davies since he began practicing law in Nashville.

I became a member of the Ku Klux Klan soon after its organization in Nashville and continued to be a member thereof from that time until it was disbanded in Nashville, Tenn., several years ago. I know that Elmer G. Davies was an active member of the Ku Klux Klan in Nashville, Tenn., during the time that it was in active existence in Nashville, and if he ever resigned or severed his connection with it I never knew of it. I have been present with him in the lodge hall during Klan meetings on a number of occasions. I have no ill feeling toward Mr. Davies.

AFFIDAVIT

In re: Nomination of Elmer Davies for judge, middle district of Tennessee

William S. Noble, first having been duly sworn, states the following facts:

That he is and has been for more than 35 years a practicing attorney at the Nashville bar. That heretofore he made a sworn statement of fact in affidavit form relative to his personal knowledge of the membership and affiliation of Elmer Davies in and with the Ku Klux Klan in Nashville, Tenn.

That subsequently he gave to a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation a more detailed statement of fact relative to the same matter. That he is informed both said statements were intended to be filed and were in fact filed with the Department of Justice in Washington, D. C., and are today a part of the records of that Department relative to said nomination and judgeship.

That on June 29, 1939, he received a telegraphic notice and invitation from the Honorable TOM CONNALLY, chairman of United States Senate subcommittee to appear before the committee at its hearing July 6, 1939, 10:30 a. m., relative to the nomination of Elmer Davies for said judgeship. That he regrets his inability to be present at the hearing because of his physical condition, and that if present he would be unable to add one statement of fact to those embodied in the instruments of record hereinbefore referred to. That he reaffirms each and all statements of fact set forth in said instruments and refers to, adopts, and makes both of said instruments a part of this affidavit as fully and completely as if said facts were embodied herein by exact word and figure, and respectfully requests that this statement, together with the statements of record hereinbefore referred to be heard and considered by the committee as and for his oral statement if present.

That he has requested the Honorable W. F. Seigenthaler, a citizen and labor representative at Nashville, Tenn., in attendance before the committee, to present these matters to the committee in his behalf.

W. S. NOBLE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of July 1939.

APRIL 11, 1939.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:

Our Nashville branch has telegraphed us requesting we protest nomination of Elmer Davies as judge of middle Tennessee district since there is definite evidence that he recently was member of Ku Klux Klan. We have wired for evidence of such membership. If you are contemplating nomination may we respectfully ask you hold it up until we have opportunity to examine evidence and, if it is found convincing, have opportunity to file formal protest with you based on facts?

WALTER WHITE, Secretary,
National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

RESOLUTIONS OPPOSING THE CONFIRMATION OF THE APPOINTMENT OF ELMER DAVIES

Whereas it is common knowledge that the United States Senators from this State have recommended for district judge from the middle district of Tennessee, Mr. Elmer C. Davies, of Nashville, Tenn., a man whose record—legislative and legal—is one of consistent opposition to everything in the interest of labor, and

Whereas on January 29, 1935, as a member of the State senate, said Davies characterized the T. V. A. planning bills (including housing measures) as "the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills ever introduced in this legislature," thereafter broadening his remarks into a bitter general indictment of New Deal legislation that was designed to reduce unemployment and otherwise better the condition of the workingman, and

Whereas Mr. Davies, as the senate proceedings clearly indicate, not only spoke against the T. V. A. planning bills, but exhausted without success every parliamentary means to bring about their defeat, declaring, at the same time, that the Roosevelt administration—by bribing the States with Federal funds—had done more than the Civil War itself to destroy States' rights, and

Whereas Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee which strangled the child labor amendment without letting it come to a vote, is more than anyone else responsible for the failure of its ratification by the Tennessee Legislature, and

Whereas Mr. Davies has, in speaking of the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, used vile and uncouth language as descriptive adjectives in describing him,

Whereas Local Union, No. —, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Dropforgers, and Helpers is impressed with the importance of having Federal judges who are at least open-minded in regard to liberal measures and who are sympathetic with all classes of people—qualifications in which Mr. Davies is entirely lacking: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we most strongly protest the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the Middle District of Tennessee, and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy, and to Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and A. TOM STEWART.

Resolved, That we most strongly protest the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the middle district of Tennessee; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and A. TOM STEWART.

Whereas notice has been carried in the press that the United States Senators from this State have recommended for district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of this city, one of the bitterest critics of the liberal policies that have distinguished the present national democratic administration; and

Whereas on January 29, 1935, when Mr. Davies was serving as State senator and the senate had under consideration certain planning bills endorsed by the T. V. A. and concerning which the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority had advised the senate, "that the Tennessee Valley Authority felt the planning bills would make possible a State program which would materially assist the T. V. A. in certain of its activities," Mr. Davies said, "In my opinion these are the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills that ever were introduced in this legislature. I, for one, don't want the record to show in the future that I sponsored any of these, if unfortunately they should pass"; and

Whereas Mr. Davies further stated, "The only reason a State N. R. A. was not included was that it was so unpopular that they didn't have the nerve to present that"; and

Whereas Davies said further: "Ah, gentlemen, 'twas a sad day indeed when the several States bartered their birthright for Federal aid. You know and I know that the federalists within the past 2 years have done more by the aid of their money to eliminate all States' rights than the Civil War ever accomplished"; and

Whereas the Nashville Trades and Labor Council realizes the seriousness of placing on the Federal bench here at the heart of the T. V. A. development a man who is one of the most consistent opponents of the enlightened social philosophy which has characterized the present national democratic administration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urgently protest the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge for the middle district of Tennessee; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and A. TOM STEWART.

Whereas it is reported that the United States Senators from this State, disregarding the most urgent representations from organized labor, are continuing their advocacy of the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, as district judge for middle Tennessee; and

Whereas Mr. Davies is rather to be regarded as a lobbyist and contact man for special interests (as shown by his pernicious activities during the recent legislature) than as a lawyer; and

Whereas his social philosophy was well illustrated when on January 29, 1935, as State senator, he characterized the T. V. A. planning bills (including housing measures) as "the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills ever introduced in this legislature," thereafter bitterly indicting New Deal legislation that was designed to reduce unemployment and otherwise better the condition of the workingman; and

Whereas said Davies, while bitterly opposing the T. V. A. planning bills, declared on the floor of the State senate that the present Democratic administration had—by bribing the States with Federal funds—done more than the Civil War to destroy State rights and to pervert the historic form of our American government; and

Whereas it was Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, who was primarily responsible for the strangling of the child labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote; and

Whereas he has not hesitated to characterize the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in language too vile and uncouth for repetition; and

Whereas organized labor bitterly resents this persistent attempt to elevate to the Federal bench, where he could do incalculable harm, a reactionary lobbyist whose whole carreer (public and private) has demonstrated his total lack of sympathy with labor's objectives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Tennessee State Federation of Labor, protest with all the vigor at our command the proposed appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the middle district of Tennessee; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to Senators K. D. McKellar and A. Tom Stewart.

Resolved, That we, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Old Hickory Lodge, No. 833, Nashville, Tenn., protest with all the vigor at our command the proposed appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the middle district of Tennessee and request that all lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in Tennessee concur in this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. H. V. Reid, chairman, Tennessee State Legislative Board, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and Mr. Reid to protest this appointment with all the power vested to his good office and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To Mr. D. B. Robertson, president, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; to President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to

E. F. ROBERTSON,
Recording Secretary, Old Hickory Lodge, No. 833, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said:

Mr. President, I have read the statement which was put into the RECORD this morning by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], together with several affidavits and resolutions coming from Tennessee, concerning the nomination of Hon. Elmer D. Davies as judge of the District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee. Mr. Davies was confirmed the day before yesterday.

I wish to say at the outset that all of these affidavits and resolutions and telegrams, except the one from Walter White dated April 11, 1939, were before the subcommittee and the full committee when they acted upon the nomination of Mr. Davies.

The statements made in these affidavits, resolutions, and letters were absolutely contradicted by the overwhelming testimony taken by the subcommittee. Mr. Noble did not appear before the subcommittee or the full committee at all, although he knew of the proceeding. Only two witnesses protesting the nomination appeared to testify against Mr. Davies.

Inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey has put in the RECORD a portion of the testimony which came before the committee, I, at this point, ask unanimous consent that all of the testimony be printed in the RECORD. It is not very long, and it is absolutely necessary that it should be printed so that the Senate can be absolutely sure that the Judiciary Committee made no mistake whatsoever in reporting favorably the nomination of Mr. Davies. Mr. President, I have spoken to the Senator from New Jersey, and he says he has no objection to my putting in all the testimony as it appears in that case, so that the Senate may see exactly what occurred and on what ground the committee acted.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately after the matter placed in the RECORD by the Senator from New Jersey the record of the hearings before the committee.

I may say, Mr. President, after this testimony was taken, the subcommittee and the full committee reported the nomination which was placed on the calendar. I heard of no opposition to it, and before I brought it up on the floor by a unanimous-consent request, I went to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the then acting leader of the minority, and told him that both my colleague [Mr. STEWART] and I were called out of the city by reason of the unfortunate death of Representative Sam D. McReynolds, and if he had no objection I would like to ask unanimous consent out of order to take up the nomination of Mr. Davies and get it disposed of before I went to Tennessee. He very readily and courteously agreed to my request.

Just a short time before I left the Chamber I asked the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to yield to me while I preferred the request.

I made the request. There was no objection, and the nomination was confirmed; and, inasmch as we have been without a judge in the middle district of Tennesse for 5 or 6 months, I asked unanimous consent that the President might be notified.

I had made many inquiries concerning the nomination of Senators on both sides of the aisle, and I did not have the slightest reason to believe that anyone objected to the confirmation. I did not speak to the Senator from New Jersey about the matter, as he was not on the committee, and I did not know that he had the slightest objection. The case had been pending a long time and I was very anxious to dispose of it before I left for Tennessee.

I hope that the Senators who have any doubt about the matter at all will read the testimony that was adduced before the subcommittee, and I call especial attention to the testimony of the two honorable witnesses who appeared in protest, and who really admitted, in a large part, that they had been misled as to the facts concerning Mr. Davies. If the Senators will look over this testimony just as it appeared before the committee, I am sure that all will agree that Mr. Davies should have been confirmed just as he was confirmed, and that he ought to have been confirmed.

To those who were interested in the matter because of allegations about the Klan, I call their especial attention to the letter of the secretary and treasurer of the Klan at Nashville, Tenn., who declared that there was no record that Mr. Davies was ever a member of the Klan.

I also call attention to Mr. Davies' testimony on the same subject.

Mr. President, I also ask that certain telegrams in relation to the nomination of Mr. Davies be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Senator from Tennessee requests unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain telegrams and the entire hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee in relation to the nomination of Mr. Davies.

Mr. McKELLAR. All except that which is contained in the statement presented by the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The telegrams and hearings are as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 11, 1939.

Senator TOM CONNALLY:
Please make possible appointment of Davies for Tennessee judge.

NOMINATION OF ELMER D. DAVIES

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1939.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to notice, in the committee room of the Committee on the District of Columbia, Capitol, at 10:30 a. m., Senator TOM CONNALLY (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators CONNALLY (chairman) and NEELY.

Present also: Senators McKELLAR and STEWART, of Tennessee.

Senator CONNALLY. This is a hearing on the confirmation of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee.

We will hear the opposition first. You may proceed.

STATEMENT OF T. O. DENHAM, NASHVILLE, TENN., LEGISLATIVE CHAIRMAN, TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. DENHAM. Mr. Chairman, I appear in behalf of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, as legislative chairman and member of the executive board of the Nonpartisan Committee, representing the A. F. of L. organizations in the State.

I first present you with a resolution that was carried in the State Federation of Labor convention held on June 5, 6, and 7.

Senator CONNALLY. That may be incorporated in the record.

I think perhaps I should read it, so that we may know just what the issues are:

"Resolution

"Whereas it is reported that the United States Senators from this State—disregarding the most urgent representations from organized labor—are continuing their advocacy of the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, as district judge for middle Tennessee; and

"Whereas Mr. Davies is rather to be regarded as a lobbyist and contact man for special interests (as shown by his pernicious activities during the recent legislature) than as a lawyer; and

"Whereas his social philosophy was well illustrated when, on January 29, 1935, as State senator, he characterized the T. V. A. planning bills (including housing measures) as "the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills ever introduced in this legislature," thereafter bitterly indicting New Deal legislation that was designed to reduce unemployment and otherwise better the condition of the workingman; and

"Whereas said Davies, while bitterly opposing the T. V. A. planning bills, declared on the floor of the State senate that the present democratic administration had—by bribing the States with Federal funds—done more than the Civil War to destroy State's rights and to pervert the historic form of our American Government; and

"Whereas it was Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, who was primarily responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote; and

"Whereas he has not hesitated to characterize the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in language too vile and uncouth for repetition; and

"Whereas organized labor bitterly resents this persistent attempt to elevate to the Federal bench, where he could do incalculable harm, a reactionary lobbyist whose whole career (public and private) has demonstrated his total lack of sympathy with labor objectives: And therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Caney Fork Lodge, No. 837, Nashville, Tenn., protest with all the vigor at our command the proposed appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and request that all lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in Tennessee concur in this resolution; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. H. V. Reid, chairman, Tennessee State Legislative Board, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and Mr. Reid, to protest this appointment with all the power vested in his good office; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following:

"To Mr. D. B. Robertson, president, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

"To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"To United States Attorney General Frank Murphy.

"To Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and A. TOM STEWART.

"To National Legislative Representative Arthur Lovell.

"To all Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen lodges in Tennessee.

"J. E. MOYERS,
"Recording Secretary, Caney Fork Lodge, No. 837, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen."

Senator CONNALLY. Is Mr. Davies here?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. You may proceed, Mr. Denham.

Mr. DENHAM. I would like next to read a letter from the chairman of the legislative committee of 1937:

TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Nashville, Tenn., July 1, 1939.

STATEMENT

To whom it may concern:

I, W. C. Clark, who was legislative chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor during the legislative term of the year 1937, when Elmer D. Davies was representing Davidson County as a senator, make the following statement of facts relative to my experience in said session with Senator Davies. I concur in the photostatic copy that will be presented to you by our representative and also your reference to the senate journal of the above session on the matter of the senator trying to amend and rerefer all Tennessee Valley Authority bills that came before the senate during this session.

I served in the above capacity along with legislative chairmen representing Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and they, along with me, were unable to have the senator to help us out with his vote in favor of the Federal child-labor amendment.

I am afraid that if Mr. Davies is confirmed by your committee that labor in middle Tennessee will get little consideration.

Very respectfully,

W. C. CLARK.

I would like to have that in the record.

Senator CONNALLY. That will be in the record.

Mr. DENHAM. I also wish to read a telegram from the president of the Central Labor Union of Nashville. I believe they call it the Trades and Labor Council.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5, 1939.

T. O. DENHAM,
Lee Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Nashville Trade and Labor Council protest the appointment of Elmer Davies as Federal judge for middle Tennessee.

J. L. BEYRNE,
President, Nashville Trade and Labor Council.

Also a telegram from the president of the Nashville Building Trades Council.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5, 1939.

T. O. DENHAM,
Lee Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

We wish to protest the appointment of Elmer Davies as Federal judge for middle Tennessee.

C. N. VESTER,
President, Nashville Building Trade Council.

Senator CONNALLY. This is somewhat irregular, inasmuch as these documents are not subject to cross-examination; but unless there is objection they may go in the record.

Mr. DENHAM. This is a telegram from the secretary of Local 386:

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 6, 1939.

T. O. DENHAM,
Lee House, Washington, D. C.:

Use your influence against Elmer Davies appointment.

R. F. BATEY,
Secretary, Local 386.

Senator CONNALLY. These telegrams are addressed to you?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Did you contact these people? Did you ask them to send you these wires?

Mr. DENHAM. They were to send me some stuff, and I told them where to wire me.

Senator CONNALLY. Before you left, you arranged to get these wires?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. You had already contacted them?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead.

Mr. DENHAM. This is a record from the Nashville Banner of January 29, 1935, when the T. V. A. bill came up that the resolution makes reference to.

Senator CONNALLY. We cannot print all this material in the record.

Mr. DENHAM. There are certain parts that ought to go in.

Senator CONNALLY. You may file this as an exhibit, but not for the record.

Do you have any charges against Davies' character or ability as a lawyer?

Mr. DENHAM. None.

Senator CONNALLY. It is just in his political views?

Mr. DENHAM. In regard to labor.

Senator CONNALLY. That is political. You are not attacking his character or his ability as a lawyer?

Mr. DENHAM. Not at all.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Go ahead. We will admit the typewritten sheets, but not the newspaper articles in full.

Mr. DENHAM. I will read that part of it.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. DENHAM. "Elmer Davies on T. V. A. housing and planning bill:

"Consideration was begun after a vigorous attack by Senator Davies on the companion planning and housing bills.

" 'In my opinion,' Davies said, 'these are the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills that ever were introduced in this legislature. I, for one, don't want the record to show in the future that I sponsored any of these if, unfortunately, they should pass.' * * *

"Senator Sam R. Howell (Washington) said he was surprised at the apparent hostility of a great many members to these bills.

"Davies * * * declared that shortly before the legislature met 'coordinated Federal agencies' met in Nashville to consider legislation, and said at that time an agreement was reached on the companion bills. He said the agencies sought to 'put them through on the popularity of the T. V. A.' The only reason a State N. R. A. bill was not included, he continued, was that 'it was so unpopular that they didn't have the nerve to present that.' "

"(Report of State senate proceedings in the Nashville Banner of January 29, 1935.)

"Note: Senate journal, page 194, of this date, 1935."

Here is another I would like to submit, of January 30, 1935.

Senator CONNALLY. We will admit the typewritten statement, but not the article.

Mr. DENHAM. "Elmer Davies on the T. V. A. planning bills.

"* * * However, Elmer Davies, of Nashville, who had assumed the leading role in opposition to the measures along with Senator Atchley, of Knoxville, changed his vote to move reconsideration of the bill, and under the rules will have custody of the measure for reconsideration for 3 legislative days.

"* * * Senator Davies started the fight on the housing-planning measure early in the morning with the request that his name be stricken from the series of bills not strictly T. V. A. power bills, and launching against the others a bitter denunciation of 'socialism, radicalism,' and such. He charged that the planning-housing measures were entirely unrelated to the T. V. A. which he favored, and were attached to the T. V. A. series in order to ride them through on the popularity of the T. V. A. * * *"

"(Report of State senate proceedings in the Nashville Tennesseean of January 30, 1936.)"

Here is another of January 30:

"ELMER DAVIES ON T. V. A. BILLS

"* * * Before the bills were taken up Senator George H. Cate (Davidson) took the floor to endorse all the proposals, some of which had been opposed by his colleague, Senator Elmer D. Davies.

"* * * Davies said: 'Ah, gentlemen, 'twas a sad day indeed when the several States bartered their birthright for Federal aid. You know and I know that the Federalists within the past 2 years have done more by the aid of their money to eliminate all States' rights than the Civil War ever accomplished.'

"(Report of State senate proceedings in the Nashville Banner of January 30, 1935.)"

I will file these photostatic copies with the committee.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. DENHAM. Here is the senate journal of the 1935 session, when the T. V. A. and housing bills were being voted on, which labor was sponsoring 100 percent. The vote was shown on January 29, on pages 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 201, 202, and 235.

Senator CONNALLY. That refers to acts supposed to have been enacted by the legislature?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir; the resolution refers to it.

This is the record of the Tennessee Federation of Labor on resolution 26, on page 65.

Senator CONNALLY. What is that about?

Mr. DENHAM. That is the procedings of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Senator CONNALLY. In regard to these bills?

Mr. DENHAM. In regard to these bills and this resolution. I would like to read this resolution.

Senator CONNALLY. Proceed.

Mr. DENHAM (reading): "Resolution No. 26.

"Referred to the executive council.

"Whereas it is reported that the United States Senators from this State, disregarding the most urgent representations from organized labor, are continuing their advocacy of the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, as district judge for middle Tennessee; and

"Whereas Mr. Davies is rather to be regarded as a lobbyist and contact man for special interests (as shown by his pernicious activities during the recent legislature) than as a lawyer; and

"Whereas his social philosophy was well illustrated when, on January 29, 1936, as State senator he characterized the T. V. A. planning bills (including housing measures) as the 'most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills ever introduced in this legislature,' thereafter bitterly indicting New Deal legislation that was designed to reduce unemployment and otherwise better the condition of the workingman; and

"Whereas said Davies, while bitterly opposing the T. V. A. planning bills, declared on the floor of the State senate that the present Democratic administration had, by bribing the States with Federal funds, done more than the Civil War to destroy States' rights and to pervert the historic form of our American Government; and

"Whereas it was Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, who was primarily responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote; and

"Whereas he has not hesitated to characterize the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in language too vile and uncouth for repetition; and

"Whereas organized labor bitterly resents this persistent attempt to elevate to the Federal bench, where he could do incalculable harm, a reactionary lobbyist whose whole career (public and private) has demonstrated his total lack of sympathy with labor's objectives: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Tennessee State Federation of Labor, protest with all the vigor at our command the proposed appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the middle district of Tennessee; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following:

"To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to Senators K. D. McKELLAR and TOM STEWART."

Senator CONNALLY. That resolution indicates that the Federation supported these bills.

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator CONNALLY. And Mr. Davies did not, and therefore you are against him.

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. DENHAM. In the senate journal that I just referred to, on page 1934, it says:

"Mr. Davies moved that his name be stricken from senate bills Nos. 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, and 124, which motion prevailed.

"Mr. Davies moved that senate bills Nos. 113 to 124, inclusive, be re-referred to the judiciary committee.

"Mr. Todd moved that the motion be amended so as to except senate bills Nos. 113, 121, and 122, and that these bills be taken up at this time, which amendment was accepted by Mr. Davies."

That motion went to the table. Mr. Davies voted "no" on the motion to go to the table.

Then they went ahead with a lot of amendments that were made to senate bill No. 113.

On page 198 of the senate journal it says:

"Mr. Davies moved to amend as follows: To amend by striking out the last sentence in the first paragraph of section 7, reading as follows: 'Such bonds shall not be subject to taxation.'"

Mr. Davies voted for that amendment, but it did not carry.

Then on page 201 of the senate journal, it shows the vote on the passage of senate bill 124, to definite the authority of the utilities commission. Mr. Davies voted "no" on that bill.

Then on page 203 of the senate journal it says:

"Mr. Davies moved that senate bills Nos. 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 123 be re-referred to the judiciary committee."

That motion to re-refer went to the table, too. It shows the vote on the bill on page 204, where Mr. Davies voted "no."

Then on page 235 of the senate journal, it shows senate bill No. 116, to establish housing authorities. Mr. Davies voted "no" on that bill.

I believe that is all at this time.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you know Mr. Davies?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. How long have you known him?

Mr. DENHAM. I have been knowing him as an attorney for 15 or 20 years. I have been seeing Mr. Davies in the legislative halls a number of times, especially at the last session of the legislature.

Senator CONNALLY. During the last 15 or 20 years what has been his reputation as a lawyer?

Mr. DENHAM. Mostly corporation.

Senator CONNALLY. Is he a good lawyer or a bad lawyer?

Mr. DENHAM. He must have been good, or the corporations would not have employed him.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you mean that a man who works for a corporation is a bad man?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Most of labor works for corporations?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Just because a man works for a corporation he is not necessarily a bad man?

Mr. DENHAM. He has never favored legislation that labor wanted that I ever heard anything about.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you want to ask any questions?

Senator McKELLAR. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. All right; proceed.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Lev Loring, of Memphis?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. He is a labor man, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. What position does he hold?

Mr. DENHAM. President of the Central Labor Union.

Senator McKELLAR. He is a man of high character and standing, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. As I know him. I have always known him that way.

Senator McKELLAR. You presented a resolution that you say was passed by your organization.

I have a letter here, Mr. Chairman, that I want to introduce into the record at this time, and read, from Mr. Loring. It is addressed to me at the Senate Building, Washington, D. C., dated June 9, 1939:

"Hon. Senator K. D. McKELLAR,
"Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: I suppose by this time you have heard of the action taken by the executive council of the Tennessee Federation of Labor on the resolution condemning the appointment of Mr. Elmer Davies as Federal judge of middle Tennessee, introduced in the forty-second annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

"I wish, as the chairman of the resolution committee, to state the true facts concerning the resolution, the action taken by the resolution committee, and the action taken by the executive council.

"There was a resolution introduced of condemnation of Mr. Davies' appointment to the Federal judgeship of middle Tennessee. This resolution was very strong in its condemnation of Mr. Davies' appointment and record. As the chairman of the resolution committee, I insisted that we hold a hearing and have those who presented the resolution appear before this committee and state their objections. There were only two who appeared before the committee who signed the resolution. A Mr. Hugh Bonham, a railroad man, appeared."

Do you know him?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. A Mr. W. F. Seigenthaler, who failed to give a business connection and stated that Mr. Millweed sent word to him regarding a resolution. As far as I know Mr. Millweed is not a member of a labor union. A Mr. George H. Cates, who is an attorney and was a commissioner of institutions in the administration of ex-Governor Browning; Mr. G. Q. Millweed, an attorney of Nashville, Tenn., came to testify at the request of someone; Mr. Stanley O'Connor, one of the signers of the resolution, a member of the Machinists' Union and also city elevator inspector of Nashville and a part of Mayor Cumming's administration; Mr. W. C. Clark, a member of the Painters' Union of Nashville, one of the signers of the resolution, appeared before the committee.

"In my opinion, the people who appeared before this committee on resolutions were members of a political faction and opposed his appointment on political reasons rather than for the interest of organized labor. You will find enclosed a copy of the resolution submitted to the Tennessee Federation of Labor. Also a copy of a report from a member of the nonpartisan committee."

The nonpartisan league, immediately after the adjournment of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, met and passed on this resolution without seeing the transcript of the evidence that was given before the committee.

"Summing all of this up, I do not think that Mr. Davies had a fair opportunity to defend himself, and when the record is completed I will forward same to the nonpartisan league and also a copy to you."

That is signed by Lev G. Loring, president.

Senator CONNALLY. President of what?

Senator MCKELLAR. President of the Memphis Trades and Labor Council. He is a man very highly respected and esteemed and admired by all labor people generally in that city, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. I want to read to you this letter.

Senator CONNALLY. You are still examining this witness.

Senator MCKELLAR. I know, but it refers to his statement.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Senator MCKELLAR. It is dated June 9, 1939, and reads as follows:

"I was a member of the nonpartisan committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor in Nashville, Tenn. At this meeting a resolution was presented against the appointment of Mr. Elmer Davies, who has been nominated for Federal judge of middle Tennessee.

"On this particular resolution a hearing was held by the resolution committee. This committee recommended that the resolution be turned over to the nonpartisan committee along with the evidence gathered at the hearing said resolutions committee held."

I pause long enough here to ask you, Mr. Denham, if it is not true that the Federation of Labor meeting did not pass this resolution at all, but simply referred the matter to the nonpartisan committee?

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. And the nonpartisan committee simply passed the resolution. This nonpartisan committee was a State organization, was it not? It was not a Federal organization?

Mr. DENHAM. It was a State organization, composed of the entire State Federation of Labor.

Senator MCKELLAR. Who is the president of the federation?

Mr. DENHAM. Gerald Foley is president.

Senator MCKELLAR. Where is he?

Mr. DENHAM. He is not able to be here.

Senator MCKELLAR. I read on:

"At this meeting of the nonpartisan committee I requested a copy of the record of the resolutions committee. I was informed that the record of this hearing was not complete and in my opinion the stenographer did not have time to complete the record in time for the meeting of the executive board, which was held immediately after the adjournment of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

"I see by the morning press Mr. Carl Vester, vice chairman of the committee, declared Loring's statement was simply an effort to obstruct the will of all other organized labor in the State. I was in constant association with Lev Loring throughout the forty-second annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and it did not appear to me at any time he was trying to obstruct the wishes of labor. If, in my opinion, he was doing so, I would have exposed and opposed his actions. I think he merely requested this matter be held in accordance with the direction of the body of the Tennessee State Federation of Labor."

That is signed by C. E. Miller. Do you know Mr. Miller?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is an excellent man?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. A man of high standing in organized labor, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. I notice in the copy of the resolution which has been read here that a copy was also sent to Mr. Hollis Reid, chairman of the Tennessee State Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a man of high standing, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. Where is Mr. Reid?

Mr. DENHAM. I could not tell you. I didn't know anything about him being a witness.

Senator MCKELLAR. A copy was sent to him, and a copy was sent to Senator STEWART and myself and the President of the United States and Attorney General Murphy. Do you know whether Mr. Reid had anything to do with making this protest?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir; I don't.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Brazzell, a labor man?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. H. V. Reid is the head of the organization to which you belong, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. What position does he hold with it?

Mr. DENHAM. He holds some kind of chairmanship with the Railroad Firemen, but not in the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a member of organized labor, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Oh, yes.

Senator NEELY. What is his standing in the organization? Is it good or bad?

Mr. DENHAM. Good, so far as I know; but he is not affiliated with the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Senator CONNALLY. But he belongs to one of the brotherhoods?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. He is a man of standing?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. And character?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Has he not been the chairman of this Nonpartisan League, composed of the brotherhoods of organized labor—the brotherhoods and the State Federation of Labor?

Mr. DENHAM. He was prior to this convention in June, when the nonpartisan committee was dissolved.

Senator MCKELLAR. It was dissolved after it passed this resolution?

Mr. DENHAM. No; before.

Senator MCKELLAR. Before it passed the resolution?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir. We had a large nonpartisan committee composed of members of the American Federation of Labor.

Senator MCKELLAR. You just pulled away from the brotherhoods.

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir; they pulled away from us. There was too much C. I. O. to suit us.

Senator MCKELLAR. I will ask you about the C. I. O.

Do you know Mr. R. H. Brazzell, a member of the C. I. O., and an attorney in Nashville?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a man of good character, is he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir; personally, I think he is.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not agree with him, but you think that personally he is a fine man?

Mr. DENHAM. That is correct.

Senator MCKELLAR. At this time, Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said here in connection with this resolution, I desire to read a letter from Mr. Brazzell.

Senator CONNALLY. It will constitute a question.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is within senatorial bounds, I know.

It is dated June 9, 1939, and is addressed to Mr. Hugh Bonham, 1106 Gale Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., and reads as follows:

"In reply to certain questions that you asked me yesterday, I am pleased to give you the following information:

"During the 1935 sessions of the Tennessee General Assembly, although I was employed as chief clerk of factory inspection, I also represented the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, as their legislative representative, and was directly responsible for the introduction of certain bills which we felt would strengthen the enforcement of labor laws in Tennessee.

"Senate bill 302 was passed as chapter 73 of the act of 1935, and contained a new provision which required employers to notify employees the amount they were to receive for their labor, making same collectible in a civil action and providing a penalty for the violation thereof.

"Senate bill 303 was to amend section 6717 of the 1932 code to prohibit the words 'and hours' after the word 'wages' in the third line of the section. This gave the department of labor power to ascertain hours worked by men as well as women, authority which the department did not possess before.

"Senate bill 305 amended section 11361 of the code by adding the following: 'no employee shall be required, as a condition of employment, to trade at a store specified by the employer.'

"Senate bill 306 amended code section 6714 by substituting the word 'five' for the word 'twenty' in the third line of this section. This amendment brought the provisions of the pay-day law to apply to all employers who worked as many as 5 people instead of 20, and further clarified the section to conform to the number set out in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

"All of the above-mentioned bills passed the senate, and all with the exception of senate bill 303 passed the house. Senator Elmer D. Davies, who was a member of the 1935 senate, voted for all of these bills."

There is a question I want to ask before reading any further. It is this: Is Mr. Brazzell telling the truth when he says that Mr. Davies voted for all these labor bills?

Mr. DENHAM. I suppose so, if he copied those numbers.

Senator MCKELLAR. He must be telling the truth, then?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. I continue to read:

"At the first extraordinary session of 1935 labor representatives sought to amend the general appropriation bill by increasing the amount of the appropriation to a point where the department of labor could operate on an efficient basis. This was amendment No. 18, senate bill 53, which was passed by the house, but the nonconcurrence of the senate caused the amendment to be referred to a conference committee for adjustment.

"Mr. Davies was a member of this conference committee, supported this amendment, and joined the other members of said committee in recommending that the senate concur therein. As a result of this recommendation by the conference committee the increased request for the department of labor was granted, and this placed the department upon a sound basis, permitting it to render much better service to the working people of Tennessee."

Is it true, as Mr. Brazzell states, that Mr. Davies, in the conference and in the senate, voted for this appropriation bill in the interests of labor?

Mr. DENHAM. If he quoted that correctly, he is undoubtedly telling the truth.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a man of intelligence, a man of good standing, even though he is a member of an organization you do not agree with. Is that not true?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. But as a labor man you know that he is an excellent man. Is that not true?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. I have read the letter. It will not be necessary to put it in the record.

Senator CONNALLY. It will have to be placed in the record. You have read it.

Senator MCKELLAR. All right. It will go in the record, then. That is all right.

Now, we were talking about Mr. Reid. Mr. Reid has taken one of the most prominent stands as a labor man in and around the legislature for a number of years, has he not?

Mr. DENHAM. He has been up there quite a while.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is one of the most vigorous and active labor men in Nashville and in Tennessee. Is that not true?

Mr. DENHAM. He doesn't stay around Nashville all the time and I am not at Memphis.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is around Nashville a good deal, and you know that he has been very active in every legislature for a number of years, do you not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a telegram I received this morning from Mr. Reid. It is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

"MEMPHIS, TENN., July 6, 1939.

"Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
"Senate Building:

"Information received within last few hours indicates that I may have been too severe in condemnation of Elmer Davies on labor record. Statements from sources I regard as reliable indicate that he assisted in passage of brotherhood safety bill and musicians' bill last session."

Is it true that Mr. Davies helped with those bills?

Mr. DENHAM. I couldn't say. If he did, it was not brought to my attention.

Senator MCKELLAR. You cannot say as to that?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Do not the labor organizations keep a record of legislation and the attitude of senators and representatives thereon? Did you not have that available?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir; the secretary has it.

Senator CONNALLY. You know that he has it, and you could have brought it with you? It would show every senator's record on every bill in which you were interested.

Mr. DENHAM. The bill which the Senator read about was enacted in 1939. Mr. Davies was not a member of the State senate at that time. He was there as a lobbyist on various things.

Senator MCKELLAR. What was he lobbying for? You do not recall his lobbying for these particular bills, do you?

Mr. DENHAM. Nobody told me.

Senator MCKELLAR. You were there. You represented the organization before the legislature. It was your duty to know about these things, was it not?

Mr. DENHAM. On that musicians' bill you just spoke of, the president of the National Musicians' Union wanted to withdraw it after they amended it and tore it all to pieces. I told them I wouldn't do that if I was him; that he would have something to work on at the next session.

Senator MCKELLAR. It was passed, but you do not know whether Mr. Davies was for or against it?

Mr. DENHAM. That is correct.

Senator NEELY. Have you any reason to question the truth of the telegram just read by Senator MCKELLAR?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir; I am not questioning the telegram.

Senator MCKELLAR. You differ from what Mr. Brazzell said and what Mr. Reid said, and what Mr. Loring said, and what Mr. Miller said, that Mr. Davies supported a good deal of labor legislation?

Mr. DENHAM. The only thing that I can say about Mr. Miller is that he was a member of the nonpartisan committee of the State Federation of Labor. He was president after the adjournment of the federation.

Senator MCKELLAR. At the time the resolution was passed by the nonpartisan committee, how many people were present?

Mr. DENHAM. There were nine on the committee, and nine present.

Senator MCKELLAR. And the committee had other functions, I suppose.

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir. That was in our own convention. We had nothing to do with outside people.

Senator MCKELLAR. But it was that committee that had been dissolved? Mr. Reid had been discontinued with the committee?

Mr. DENHAM. The former committee, because it went into the C. I. O.

Senator MCKELLAR. The information I want is this: This purports to have been a resolution of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, but, as a matter of fact, it is a resolution of the nine men on the Nonpartisan League.

Mr. DENHAM. After the convention referred it to the committee.

Senator MCKELLAR. After the convention referred it to the committee?

Mr. DENHAM. That is correct.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did the convention adopt that as a resolution of the convention, or take any action on it at all?

Mr. DENHAM. You will find it in the laws.

Senator MCKELLAR. But the federation, as a federation, has not adopted it?

Mr. DENHAM. Absolutely, through the committee.

Senator MCKELLAR. Through its committee?

Mr. DENHAM. The authority granted to the committee.

Senator MCKELLAR. But the convention did not adopt it. I believe that is all on that.

Do you know Mr. Perry Daly?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. He has been in organized labor a long time, has he not?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a man of high standing, integrity, and honesty?

Mr. DENHAM. To my knowledge; yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Speak out. The reporter cannot make a record of your answers when you nod your head.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Hugh Bonham, of Nashville?

Mr. DENHAM. Not very well.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know his reputation as a man of truth and honor and intelligence?

Mr. DENHAM. The short time I have known him; yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. You never heard anything against him?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. He is a man of high standing?

Mr. DENHAM. As far as I know, he is.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Badgett of Knoxville?

Mr. DENHAM. I only know him through the last session of the legislature.

Senator MCKELLAR. You ought to know him. He was friendly to your organization, was he not?

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. You know him as a member of the legislature, as a lawyer, and as a man of good character and standing?

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did he not support your labor bills?

Mr. DENHAM. As far as we were able to get him; yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is all you could ask for. He supported all your bills?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir. A good many of them were lost in the committee.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Badgett did not have anything to do with that, did he?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. I believe that is all.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you any further statement you wish to make?

Mr. DENHAM. I would like to read something from the report of the legislative committee that Mr. Loring was chairman of.

Senator CONNALLY. What committee is that?

Mr. DENHAM. The resolutions committee. They sent out all those laws.

Senator CONNALLY. The report to the convention?

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. And the convention acted on the resolutions?

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. The convention did not act on this resolution.

Mr. DENHAM. It accepted the report of the committee.

Senator MCKELLAR. It was not discussed or voted on in the convention.

Senator CONNALLY. Whatever the record shows. Read it.

Mr. DENHAM:

"Report of resolutions committee

"NASHVILLE, TENN., June 7, 1939.

"To the officers and members of the Tennessee State Federation of Labor:

"This committee on resolutions has endeavored to pass on the resolutions in a fair and impartial manner and always keeping in mind the best interests of the labor movement as a whole.

"I, as chairman of this committee, wish to thank each and every one of the members of this committee for their honesty and sincerity, and each and every member has done his best. This committee recommends to the Tennessee Federation of Labor that in its conventions in the future that all resolutions shall be presented to the secretary of the federation not later than 4 o'clock of the opening day of the federation."

That is on page 51 of these laws adopted by the convention.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there anything further you want to say?

Mr. DENHAM. That is all.

Senator NEELY. Mr. Witness, you made some reference to some alleged lobbying by Mr. Davies. Do you personally know the nature of the legislation that he was supporting or that he was opposing at the time he was going about this lobbying?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir. I didn't think it was good policy to try to find out everything about a man lobbying.

Senator NEELY. How do you know he was lobbying at all?

Mr. DENHAM. He was always in one of the legislative chambers every day.

Senator CONNALLY. You were there, too, when you saw him, were you not?

Senator NEELY. Were you lobbying?

Mr. DENHAM. Probably he talked to the same men I did. I didn't ask any other man what he was talking about.

Senator NEELY. Were you lobbying?

Mr. DENHAM. I was a bona fide representative of the State Federation of Labor.

Senator NEELY. Do you know whom Mr. Davies represented?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator NEELY. And you have no personal knowledge concerning the nature of the duty he performed or the efforts he made either to expedite or obstruct the passage of legislation through the legislature.

Mr. DENHAM. That is right.

Senator NEELY. Do you think it is quite fair to say Mr. Davies was lobbying, and I suppose with the implication he was lobbying for some measure that was inimical to labor, unless you have some definite evidence you can present on that point?

Mr. DENHAM. That is why I said that I didn't ask those people what he was talking about.

Senator NEELY. You do not believe that this committee should be influenced or prejudiced against Mr. Davies' confirmation, by reason of any statement you have made about his lobbying activities, do you?

Mr. DENHAM. Oh, no.

Senator CONNALLY. If he had been lobbying against legislation sponsored by labor, and you found it out, you would have no doubt that he was a lobbyist?

Mr. DENHAM. That is true.

Senator CONNALLY. But you did not find that out?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir; I didn't check it that close. I didn't know I would be called upon.

Senator CONNALLY. It is not a question of your being called upon here. You never heard anything specific about his lobbying against labor bills?

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

Senator NEELY. Can you tell the committee of a single specific hostile act of which Mr. Davies has ever been guilty toward organized labor?

Senator MCKELLAR. Of your own knowledge.

Senator NEELY. Yes.

Mr. DENHAM. The only things I know are those votes in the Senate Journal of 1935, where labor was 100 percent behind all the T. V. A. bills, which was around 15 or 16. The record is there and speaks for itself.

Senator NEELY. I did not reach the room until after you had discussed that matter.

Mr. DENHAM. Yes, sir. I gave the pages to put in the record.

Senator NEELY. Those were not known as labor bills, but were bills of a general character in which labor had an interest?

Mr. DENHAM. That is correct. They involved around $100,000,000 we were going to get for that territory.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you anything further you wish to say?

Mr. DENHAM. I believe not.

Senator CONNALLY. We will hear the other gentleman now?

STATEMENT OF W. F. SEIGENTHALER, VICE CHAIRMAN, TENNESSEE STATE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE, BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to beg the indulgence of the committee.

Senator CONNALLY. First give your name and whom you represent and your business.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. W. F. Seigenthaler, vice chairman of the Tennessee State legislative committee of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen and Firemen.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Proceed.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. There were some charges made by Mr. Loring, of Memphis, that this is a political move. I want to read a letter addressed to Senator MCKELLAR, under date of January 20, 1937, which states the position of my organization on the bill to reform the Supreme and Federal Courts.

Senator CONNALLY. What does that have to do with this?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Just to show the position taken by the organization prior to the nomination of Mr. Davies.

Senator CONNALLY. I do not see the materiality of that. How long is the letter?

Senator MCKELLAR. I have the letter.

Senator CONNALLY. How long is it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Just a couple of pages.

Senator CONNALLY. Read it. Who is it from?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. From myself.

Senator CONNALLY. Just an individual letter representing your views?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Not my own views, but acting as chairman of the legislative board and writing to the Senators and Congressmen to urge them to support the bill.

Senator CONNALLY. Was this something that was acted on by the legislature?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. The chairman of the board is Mr. Reid.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. This is a letter I addressed to you.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Reid is a member of your board. He is chairman and you are vice chairman.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you speak for the board when the chairman is against you?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't know why he isn't here.

Senator MCKELLAR. Who else is on the board?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. There are 13 members.

Senator MCKELLAR. Are any of them here?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Did the board ever meet and pass on this matter?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. We have had meetings since then.

Senator CONNALLY. I mean before then.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir; when the President came out with that propcsition.

Senator CONNALLY. To reform or deform?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. We did it time and time again—write to our Senators and Representatives and request them to support legislation. We did that in this case—wrote to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and requested them to support the President in his propcsition to reform the judiciary.

Senator CONNALLY. And you and the chairman did that? You had no meeting of the board?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. We didn't have to. It was when the board was not in session.

Senator MCKELLAR. The board was not in session, and you were vice chairman and he was chairman.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. I do not see the need of cluttering up the record with this sort of stuff.

Senator MCKELLAR. I have no doubt that the letter came to me, and I voted for the measure.

Senator CONNALLY. And you voted wrong when you did it. [Laughter.]

Senator MCKELLAR. I think I voted right, and I have no apology to make for it in differing from the distinguished gentleman at the end of the table.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. There have been charges made that this is a political move. What I want to get in the record is the fact that we were recorded on that proposition before any Federal judgeship was involved. I don't think it is necessary to read it.

Senator CONNALLY. You wrote to Senator MCKELLAR advocating the President's Supreme Court bill?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. What does that have to do with this matter?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Loring stated that it was a political move.

Senator CONNALLY. You say that it is not?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I say it is not.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead. What else did you do?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I wrote to Senator CONNALLY on January 29.

Senator MCKELLAR. You did not write him about the Supreme Court bill.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. It would not have done any good if he had. I am not as easily influenced as the Senator from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. We will prove that Mr. Davies was an active member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Senator CONNALLY. How do you know. Are you a member?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir; I am not a member.

Senator CONNALLY. Were you ever a member?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. This is a letter addressed to me that I received by air mail this morning.

Senator CONNALLY. Did you endorse the appointment of Mr. Justice Black to the Supreme Court?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. He was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. So they charged.

Senator CONNALLY. He admitted it. Are you in favor of impeaching him and taking him off the Supreme Court?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. It is all right when a man is on the Supreme Court, and all wrong for a district judge.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. May I read this?

Senator CONNALLY. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER (reading):

IN THE SENATE, U. S. A.,
Washington, D. C.

In re: Nomination of Elmer Davies for judge, middle district of Tennessee:

Affidavit

William S. Noble, first having been duly sworn states the following facts:

That he is and has been for more than 35 years a practicing attorney at the Nashville bar. That heretofore he made a sworn statement of fact in affidavit form relative to his personal knowledge of the membership and affiliation of Elmer Davies in and with the Ku Klux Klan in Nashville, Tenn.;

That subsequently he gave to a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation a more detailed statement of fact relative to the same matter. That he is informed both said statements were intended to be filed and were in fact filed with the Department of Justice in Washington, D. C., and are today a part of the records of that Department relative to said nomination and judgeship.

That on June 29, 1939, he received a telegraphic notice and invitation from the Honorable TOM CONNALLY, chairman, United States Senate subcommittee, to appear before the committee at its hearing July 6, 1939, 10:30 a. m., relative to the nomination of Elmer Davies for said judgeship. That he regrets his inability to be present at the hearing because of his physical condition, and that if present he would be unable to add one statement of fact to those embodied in the instruments of record hereinbefore referred to. That he reaffirms each and all statements of fact set forth in said instruments and refers to, adopts, and makes both of said instruments a part of this affidavit as fully and completely as if said facts were embodied herein by exact word and figure, and respectfully requests that this statement, together with the statements of record hereinbefore referred to, be heard and considered by the committee as and for his oral statement if present.

That he has requested the Honorable W. F. Seigenthaler, a citizen and labor representative at Nashville, Tenn., in attendance before the committee, to present these matters to the committee in his behalf.

WILLIAM S. NOBLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of July 1939.

LEO L. JENKINS, Notary Public.

My commission expires June 24, 1943.

And here is another one from Mr. Johns.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Johns is dead, is he not?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Not that I know of. If you doubt this, you can check it.

Senator MCKELLAR. Oh, I am not doubting it. I want to ask you some questions about it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Davidson:

I, C. D. Johns, being first duly sworn, make oath as follows:

I have been a citizen of Nashville for 50 years and have known Mr. Elmer Davies only after he began the practice of law in Nashville.

I became a member of the Ku Klux Klan soon after its organization in Nashville and was actively interested in its work for several years, as an organizer.

I know that Mr. Elmer Davies was a member of the Ku Klux Klan and have seen him in the meetings a number of times. I have no ill will toward Mr. Davies. I was formerly Sheriff of Davidson County, Tenn.

C. D. JOHNS.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 24th day of April 1939.

H. L. JENKINS,
Justice of Peace of Davidson County.

My commission expires 1942.

Senator CONNALLY. Who is Mr. W. S. Noble? Is he here?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. He was invited to be here.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He says in there that he regrets to ask to be excused due to ill health.

Senator CONNALLY. He made an affidavit. He said he is a member of the Ku Klux Klan himself.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. What were you doing getting an affidavit from him to impeach somebody else for being a member of the Ku Klux Klan? It is all right for one man to be a member of the Ku Klux Klan, according to your idea, and all wrong for another. But go ahead. I think we had better have all this copied in the record.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know R. S. Patterson, of Nashville?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. I would like to say that I never was a member of the Ku Klux Klan. I was elected to the Senate on an anti-Ku Klux Klan platform. I make that statement because, in view of some of the things that have been said, someone might think I was affiliated with it.

Senator MCKELLAR. I want to introduce a letter I would like to have both members of the committee listen to.

Senator CONNALLY. Let us see if he has finished about the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That is all I have, so far as the Klan is concerned.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is what I understood.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Senator MCKELLAR. This has a headline "Soveren Klan of the World, Columbian Union, Columbian Union Building, Sixth Avenue North, Nashville, Tenn." In the upper right-hand corner is a black star in a red triangle, and in the upper left-hand corner is a man dressed in white on a white horse. It is dated April 20, 1939, and addressed to me, and reads as follows:

"I just noticed in the Nashville Banner a Washington article that two (2) affidavits had been filed with you stating that Mr. Elmer Davies had been a member of the Klan."

That is the same affidavit—or the same two affidavits—you just submitted.

"I was a charter member, secretary and treasurer (also official photographer) of the Soveren Klan of the World from its organization, and can state that his name was not on any of the lists.

"The Klan was patterned after the original one and like it, was strictly a war measure. After the war, it was disbanded, as its work was over.

"I take issue with you as to his voting for Al Smith; as I not only voted, but contributed and worked for his election; however, as the lesser of two evils, as Cordell Hull was my choice and you no doubt remember how the nomination was secured."

I do not know Mr. Patterson. This came to me in a voluntary way. He says that he is secretary and treasurer and official photographer of the Klan.

Senator CONNALLY. That is not the real Klan, is it?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. He says in the letter it is like the other Klan.

Senator MCKELLAR. He means that it is patterned after the one that followed the Civil War. I offer that at this time in connection with the statement just made.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead, Mr. Seigenthaler.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to read something from the legislative report of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, under the old nonpartisan committee. Senator McKellar calls that the nonpartisan league, but it is the nonpartisan committee.

Senator CONNALLY. What is the date of it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The 1937 session of the seventh general assembly.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. What does the report say?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to bring this out by reading from the report.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. House bill 1360, chapter 227, acts 1937. Authorize a Government-use system for penal institutions, preventing competition resulting from convict labor. That was in relation to the products of the State penitentiary.

Senator CONNALLY. Speak out louder.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. It authorized the Government-use system in penal institutions. The vote on that bill was 20 ayes and 1 no. Mr. Davies voted "no."

Senator NEELY. Was that a convict labor bill?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir; that was a convict labor bill.

Senator CONNALLY. Permitting State use or preventing State use?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. To take the products of the penitentiary and use them for State institutions and take them out of competition with free labor.

Senator CONNALLY. And he voted against that?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He voted against that.

Senator MCKELLAR. Before you leave the Ku Klux matter, was there not a judgeship fight in which Mr. Noble was a candidate, and in which you took an active part?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Which one are you speaking of?

Senator MCKELLAR. Judge Gilbert and Mr. Noble.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir; I didn't take any part in that fight.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Noble was a candidate against Judge Gilbert, and Mr. Davies supported Gilbert?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I have no recollection about that.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is what is the matter with Mr. Noble. All right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Here is what the report of the legislative committee says on this other matter:

"After many years of effort on the part of the officers of organized labor, the convict labor question has been settled, and the State-use system adopted. It will take about a year, however, before the law passed will go into effect. The fight that organized labor has made to eliminate the convict from competing with free labor and free manufacturers is not that we wanted convicts kept in idleness, because we think that they should be kept employed, but our principal argument has been that the evil of convict labor has permitted political favorites to build up enormous fortunes at the expense of unfortunate human beings, which brought about a shameful condition that prevented any true rehabilitation of the criminal."

That has been our attitude on that question for years and years and years. I want that to go into the record.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Now, may I say——

Senator NEELY. Have you a copy of the bill to which that report refers?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. I copied this from the Senate Journal. It is hard to get a copy of it.

Then there was Senate bill No. 99, at the special session in 1935, to authorize the University of Tennessee to cooperate with Federal agencies. That meant the T. V. A. and A. A. A. and all those other agencies. On that bill the vote was 24 ayes and 4 noes. Those who voted "no" were Davies, Morgan, Sprouse, and Wright.

During the 1937 session they had up Senate bill 1011, to establish a national-employment system. The vote on that was 22 ayes and 7 noes. Davies voted "no." I don't have a list of the others.

That is all the records we have of Mr. Davies while he was a member in those two sessions.

Senator MCKELLAR. Have you finished with that particular subject? I mean in relation to the bills on which he voted "no."

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Let me ask you if it is not a fact that all of those bills you referred to as T. V. A. bills were not T. V. A. bills, but some of them were bills that were presented by the State planning commission?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, to the best of my recollection I will tell you exactly what happened. When those bills were introduced in the State legislature, they ran from No. 112 to 126. No. 113 was the main T. V. A. bill. The question was raised by Mr. Davies whether the T. V. A. authority was behind these bills. Governor McAllister wired Chairman Morgan, of the T. V. A., and he wired back that they were not behind it. All this information is in that photostatic copy that Mr. Denham furnished. All I know is that I was in and out from time to time when these bills were up.

Senator CONNALLY. Let us talk about bill No. 113. What was that bill?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I haven't got that in mind.

Senator CONNALLY. You supported it. Do you not know what was in it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. It was the main bill of the T. V. A.

Senator CONNALLY. Can you not give us something besides that in the way of a description of the bill?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. It was called the main T. V. A. bill.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Davies voted for it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The record doesn't show that.

Senator MCKELLAR. The record shows that he voted for the T. V. A. bills. Why are you complaining of him if he voted for the T. V. A. bills?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. What happened was this: Mr. George Cate was in the senate at the same time.

Senator MCKELLAR. Let me ask you about Mr. George Cate. He is a bitter personal and political enemy of Mr. Davies, is he not, and came up here and raised a roughhouse about his appointment?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't know about that.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you not know that the papers in Nashville contained the statement that Mr. Cate was here seeking to block the appointment of Mr. Davies?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, I don't know.

Senator MCKELLAR. Is not that true?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I am not in Nashville all the time.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not remember anything about that?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Tell us what Mr. Cate did.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Mr. Cate introduced bills from 114 to 124. They were known as T. V. A. planning bills.

Senator CONNALLY. Did he know what was in them? Was it just because they were T. V. A. planning bills?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I will give you a general outline of what they covered. The main T. V. A. bill was one giving power to municipal corporations to deal with the State R. E. A. They were taking authority away from the public utilities commission and giving it to the T. V. A. I am honest when I say that I don't know what those bills were. That was 4 years ago. Very few men can pick out now just what they were.

When Mr. Davies came back to Nashville he took the roof off about his name being on these bills. That is shown on page 194 of the senate journal, where it says: "Mr. Davies moved that his name be stricken from senate bills Nos. 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, and 124, which motion prevailed."

Then it says:

"Mr. Davies moved that Senate bills 113 to 124, inclusive, be re-referred to the Judiciary Committee."

Senator MCKELLAR. That does not say that they were T. V. A. bills.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. They were known as T. V. A. planning bills.

Senator CONNALLY. Who sponsored that group of bills?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The Railway Brotherhood did.

Senator CONNALLY. Who introduced them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I couldn't tell you. That has been 4 years ago.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Hollis Reid was head of the Railway Brotherhocds in the State at that time.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. You heard Mr. Reid's telegram that I read.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir. On page 198 of the senate journal, Mr. Davies submitted an amendment to the main bill to read as follows: "To strike out 'such bonds shall not be subject to taxation.'" When that came to a vote one of the three Senators that voted for it was Davies.

Senator CONNALLY. What is the significance of that?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That would have destroyed the whole thing.

Senator CONNALLY. All the T. V. A. bonds are tax-free. Why should not the others be?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He made a move to subject the bonds to taxation.

Senator CONNALLY. I thought you said he moved to exempt them from taxation.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. Here was the idea of it. The amendment was to strike out the last sentence reading as follows: "Such bonds shall be subject to taxation." His amendment was to strike that out. Is that clear?

Senator CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to read something from page 201.

Senator CONNALLY. I think I can save some time. These are already in the record. You say he was against all of them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I should say that he consistently fought these bills.

Senator CONNALLY. From 114 to 126?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He said he was for 113, and then tried to hamstring it.

Senator CONNALLY. What was that?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. What I just read.

Senator CONNALLY. He voted to strike that out?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He voted to strike it out.

Senator CONNALLY. He offered an amendment to strike out a certain clause, and it failed to carry. Did he still vote for the bill?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you not know that Mr. Davies voted for the bills? Do you not know that there were three principal T. V. A. bills, and that the Tennessee Planning Board undertook to graft onto them these other bills in which the planning board was interested, but in which the T. V. A. was not interested? Do you not know that Mr. Davies voted for all the T. V. A. bills and only voted against the bills of the State planning board?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I beg to differ with you. On page 204 of this appears——

Senator CONNALLY. What appears? Go ahead.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No; it is on page 203. Mr. Davies moved a rereference of all these bills, and you know what that means.

Senator MCKELLAR. You think because of that he was opposed to them? You would not tell the committee that Mr. Davies voted against the three T. V. A. bills in which the T. V. A. was interested, would you?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I can answer that in this way.

Senator MCKELLAR. Would you make that statement?

Senator CONNALLY. Let him answer to the best of his ability.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Let me answer in my own way.

I can say, in a broad sense, that in my study of this record I have been unable to find where he supported the T. V. A., but he fought it.

Senator CONNALLY. Did you not put in the record the numbers of the bills you claim he voted against? And those he voted for?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. It would take some time to do that.

Senator CONNALLY. I know it would. You say, on the whole, he voted against all of them, and Senator MCKELLAR says he voted for three of them.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Those bills were numbered from 113 to 124.

Senator CONNALLY. Which ones did he vote for?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I couldn't say.

Senator CONNALLY. Which ones did he vote against?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The only record is on page 194 of the senate journal of 1935, and on pages 198, 201, 203, and 205.

Senator CONNALLY. You contend that, because he made an amendment to modify certain language, that indicates that he was against the bill? Make your statement more accurately. We cannot go by those general statements.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't know how I could phrase it to give it any better than I have. I know we were for the bills.

Senator CONNALLY. You were for all of them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. We were for all of them, and we know there was opposition that developed and an attempt was made to hamstring them. Coming to the final point, he made a move to re-refer these bills, and they would have died in the committee. I am honest about this. I don't believe in making statements about something I don't know anything about.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Go ahead.

Senator MCKELLAR. To keep the record straight, is it not a fact that there were three T. V. A. bills, and the rest of them were State planning bills which they tried to hitch onto the T. V. A. bills; and that the motion to which you refer was a motion by Mr. Davies to rerefer these bills that were not T. V. A. bills; that he voted for all the T. V. A. bills, but did not vote for some of these planning bills that were purely State matters?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. May I beg leave to make this statement?

Senator MCKELLAR. All right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The way we looked at it, these State bills were absolutely necessary for the T. V. A. to function in Tennessee.

Senator MCKELLAR. Every one of them was passed by the legislature, and not one of them has functioned as yet.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I will agree with you.

Senator MCKELLAR. Go ahead.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. This hasn't been read out. Senator MCKELLAR asked some questions about it. This appeared in the Nashville Banner of January 29, 1935. This is Mr. Davies' statement in the press, and it hasn't been denied.

Senator MCKELLAR. Go ahead and read it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. "In my opinion," Davies said, "these are the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills that ever were introduced in this legislature."

Senator CONNALLY. To what was he referring?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The T. V. A. and companion measures.

Senator CONNALLY. Let the statement speak for itself.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not mean to say he was making a statement against the three T. V. A. bills he voted for and to which his name was attached, do you?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, I am confused on what bills you have in mind.

Senator MCKELLAR. I think you are.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead and read the statement. Read what the paper said he said.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. "In my opinion," Davies said, "these bills are the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills that ever were introduced in this legislature. I, for one, don't want the record to show in the future that I sponsored any of these, if unfortunately they should pass."

Senator CONNALLY. Is that all of his statement?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. "He moved that all but the bills authorizing cities and counties to operate their distribution system and fixing the venue for appeals from the railroad and public utilities commissions' orders be referred to the judiciary committee."

That I pointed out a few minutes ago.

Senator CONNALLY. Is that all of his statement?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I am not very familiar with this record, Senator.

Senator CONNALLY. If you are going to introduce the statement, read all of it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator MCKELLAR brought up the question.

Senator CONNALLY. Read the statement.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. "Davies wanted to know 'if these 12 bills had been so much a part of the T. V. A. program, why it was necessary for the Governor of Tennessee to wire Dr. Morgan to find out whether they were or not.

" 'Why did he have to send a wire to find out whether these bills were a part of the T. V. A. program?' Davies asked. 'He could not find out by reading them, and I couldn't find out by reading them. I don't believe yet that a great number of these bills are a part of the T. V. A. program.' "

Senator CONNALLY. Is that all of the statement?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That is all.

Senator MCKELLAR. The Governor was McAllister?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. And he was referring to Governor McAllister wiring Dr. Morgan?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. And Dr. Morgan's reply to the Governor?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there any other statement you want to make?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. There is one other statement, but I haven't been able to find it yet.

Senator CONNALLY. Can you find it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I probably can by looking for it.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you anything further to submit?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to put that in the record.

Senator NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to leave to keep another appointment. I should like to ask the witness a few questions.

Senator CONNALLY. You may proceed.

Senator NEELY. How long have you been acquainted with Senator MCKELLAR?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Speaking of me?

Senator NEELY. Yes.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. For years.

Senator NEELY. You personally know, do you not, that Senator MCKELLAR has been one of the two or three most active members in the United States Senate in behalf of everything that pertains to the success of the T. V. A. project?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator NEELY. Do you not know that ever since he came to the House, away back 30 years ago, he has been an active supporter of almost every prominent labor measure before Congress?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I do.

Senator NEELY. Do you believe, from your knowledge of Senator MCKELLAR and your long intimate acquaintance with him that he would for a moment recommend or support the appointment of anyone as a judge, or any other high place in the Federal service, who, in his opinion, was either hostile to organized labor or in the slightest degree to the T. V. A. project?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He has been our consistent friend all these years, and the only quarrel we have ever had was over this appointment. Does that answer your question?

Senator NEELY. You have been and still are a loyal supporter of the President?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator NEELY. Just as Senator MCKELLAR and I have been, and still are?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator NEELY. And Senator MCKELLAR and I were both, of course, rather enthusiastic supporters of what you referred to as the court reform bill, although our distinguished chairman was very much opposed to it. You have no doubt, do you, that the President is friendly to organized labor and the T. V. A.?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir; I have not.

Senator NEELY. Do you believe Mr. Roosevelt would appoint Mr. Davies, or nominate him, as he has nominated him, for judge of a Federal court if he thought he was unfriendly to labor or to the success of the T. V. A. project?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't think he would if he knew the facts.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you not know that he had a most careful examination of the facts made through the Office of the Attorney General?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, I am a little confused as to what happens in Washington.

Senator MCKELLAR. I think you are.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I have always tried to be fair and impartial. I have nothing against Mr. Davies personally. I know him as a perfect gentleman. The only conflict we have ever had was about political views and what I would call New Deal legislation.

Senator NEELY. Mr. Seigenthaler, I do not know what the remainder of this testimony will disclose; but as one who has consistently voted for labor measures for many, many years, and whom the railroad brotherhoods have, through their paper known as Labor, which I consider one of the best weekly papers in the world, given me a rating of 100 percent, because of my loyalty to labor legislation, I would not think of voting for a man who had the slightest prejudice against members of organized labor or any laboring men. I am an enthusiastic friend of what is known as labor organizations and their high objectives. I am also a warm supporter, and have been for years, of legislation in regard to the development of the T. V. A. and Muscle Shoals.

I should like to be with labor in this matter but candor compels me to tell you that it does not seem to me that you have so far made out a case of hostility to labor against Mr. Davies. You and I discussed this matter a week or two ago, and I felt at the time that you had not stated any specific acts on the part of Mr. Davies that constituted any sort of disloyalty or even remote hostility to labor. I even took it upon myself to discuss by telephone with prominent officers of one of the railroad unions, and also with officers of the American Federation of Labor, the matters you have discussed concerning Mr. Davies' record.

It does seem to me that unless you can point out to this committee—and I am saying this as your friend and one who knows nothing about Mr. Davies, never saw him until this morning—unless you can show this subcommittee that in some specific case Mr. Davies voted against some particular bill that had in it, not something you might say would be favorable to the labor movement, but something that would specifically indicate that it was a labor measure; unless you can tell us where we can find a record that will really show not just the opinion of one person but where some labor organization as a whole has held that Mr. Davies had in a particular case indicated a prejudice against labor, or has taken a position that resulted in some injury to or was calculated to injure it or impede its progress; unless you can point out something definite of that kind, I feel that the members of this subcommittee should not be expected to report adversely upon this nomination.

I have perhaps said more than I should have said, Mr. Chairman, but I want to make my position clear. I am obliged to go to keep another appointment. My mind is open and I shall be governed by the record as a whole, but in the light of our conversation and what I have heard this morning, unless further specific evidence along the lines I have suggested is produced, I feel that I cannot support the opposition to this nomination.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I want to answer this way: In telling this story I have told the truth so far as I know it.

Senator NEELY. I do not entertain any doubt about that.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I am very sincere. I made two trips to Washington. I have nothing against Mr. Davies, with the exception of his votes in the senate, where he voted "no" on the convict-labor law and the other laws that authorized the University of Tennessee to cooperate with Federal agencies.

Senator NEELY. I think you have been very courteous and truthful, so much so that you have almost talked yourself out of a case. I feel that you have been consistent with your belief, which I feel is inconsistent, in the light of the few facts brought forth this morning.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator McKellar has questioned Mr. Denham as to Mr. Davies' lobbying. I have heard quite a bit about his lobbying.

Senator MCKELLAR. I do not think that is relevant.

Senator CONNALLY. If you know anything about it, you may tell it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I am not accustomed to accepting gossip. So far as my personal knowledge goes, I know nothing where I could connect him directly with lobbying in the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, but I want to add further that I have been suspicious of him.

Senator CONNALLY. You have been around the capitol in Tennessee yourself a good deal, have you not?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. And you have been doing some lobbying yourself?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. If you want to call it lobbying.

Senator CONNALLY. You were lobbying for what you thought was right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. In a true sense.

Senator CONNALLY. Any kind of sense. You have been lobbying for labor legislation.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Labor legislation looks toward what we are all interested in, and what is in the interest of humanity.

Senator CONNALLY. You were lobbying for labor legislation because you believe it is in the interest of humanity. That is all right. If you know anything about Mr. Davies' lobbying, you may tell it. The labor people lobby just as well as anybody else. They are around the lobby room all the time. I do not think there is any harm in lobbying.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. These people I speak of are paid lobbyists.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you not get a regular salary?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. You are not working for nothing.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That is true.

Senator CONNALLY. You get paid for lobbying?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there any more harm for these other people to be paid than for you to be paid?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I do not agree with you. It is the motive that causes them to lobby.

Senator CONNALLY. Your motive is honest, and that of somebody else is dishonest?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No; I do not say that. I am talking about working for corporations and people who are seeking special privileges. We are not seeking special privileges.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Seigenthaler and I have been together a long time. I want to make a suggestion in the form of a letter

I just received. It is on the letterhead of the Memphis Trades and Labor Council, dated July 5, 1939, and addressed to me, as follows:

"DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed please find copy of telegram sent to President William Green of the American Federation of Labor.

"Our mutual friends, who are also desirous of seeing the confirmation of Mr. Elmer Davies as Federal judge of the middle district of Tennessee, and some who were in the Tennessee Legislature with Senator Davies have vouched for his labor record and say that he was friendly to labor legislation.

"In the last legislature he worked hard to override the Governor's veto of the local musicians' bill, and worked hard to assist in passing railroad safety-appliance bill.

"We are still for Mr. Davies, and if we may be of any assistance to you or Mr. Davies please do not hestitate to advise.

"With kindest regards, I am,

"Sincerely yours,

"LEV G. LORING, President."

Senator CONNALLY. President of what?

Senator MCKELLAR. Of the Memphis Trades and Labor Council.

One or the other of you gentlemen wrote Mr. Green, and Mr. Green very courteously sent the letter down to the committee, and the committee held these hearings, one of the reasons being that Mr. Green asked it. This is the telegram from Mr. Loring to Mr. Green:

565 BEALE AVE.,
Memphis, Tenn., July 5, 1939.

President WILLIAM GREEN,
American Federation of Labor Building,
Washington, D. C.:

As local president Memphis Trades and Labor Council, wish to advise that interview with various friends of labor who know the facts establish that Elmer Davies has been friend of labor legislation. He worked to override Governor's veto of local musicians' bill. Also worked hard to assist in passing railroad safety-appliance bill. Complaints against Davies come from purely political sources. Labor will make a mistake in opposing his confirmation.

LEV G. LORING,
President, Memphis Trades and Labor Council.

I want that in the record.

Senator CONNALLY. It may go in.

Senator MCKELLAR. Of all those who made complaints against Mr. Davies, only you two gentlemen have come here. Is Mr. Denham an attorney?

Mr. DENHAM. I am not an attorney.

Senator MCKELLAR. Of all the complaints that have been made, you two are the only gentlemen who have appeared to testify. You have been fair in furnishing the information, which I wish to commend; but do you not feel that, under the circumstances, you gentlemen have been misled about the facts as to Mr. Davies being hostile to you? The labor organizations of Tennessee have the approval of the people generally, and of the courts. I would not recommend any man who, in my judgment, was opposed to any organization of labor. Do you not think it is your duty to withdraw this protest to this nomination and let this committee report favorably on the nomination of Mr. Davies? I address that question to both of you.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator McKellar, I have talked to Horris Reid over long-distance about this, time without number. At the last convention he made the statement that you and he went round and round about this appointment, and you asked him to withdraw it.

Senator MCKELLAR. Withdraw what?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The objection to Mr. Davies. So long as Mr. Reid's objection stands, and the copy of the telegram to our international president that was not withdrawn——

Senator CONNALLY (interposing). Where is Mr. Reid? Why has he not come here to testify?

Senator MCKELLAR. Here is his telegram to me, saying he has been misled about it. You heard that telegram read, did you not, Mr. Seigenthaler?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. I read it. He says he has been misled about it. You have both testified to the high character and standing and ability of Mr. Davies. Senator Neely, who is your friend, just as I am, feels that way. Do you not think that you gentlemen have not sufficient facts on which to base this protest? I am a friend to labor, and I have no apologies for it. I have been your friend, and I am your friend in this instance, although you may not think so. There are a good many people in labor who do not agree with you two gentlemen.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. May I answer that?

Senator CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. When you ask that you put me on a limb. I would like the best in the world to do that, but here is what I am confronted with: I have a copy of a resolution from my local lodge and from three other local lodges in Nashville. I haven't got the authority to do that. I want the Senator to understand that.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Here is the position I am in, with the resolution by my lodge and two other local lodges.

Senator MCKELLAR. I have no doubt, if they had heard your testimony, they would be in favor of withdrawing it. That is my judgment.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. So long as they did that——

Senator MCKELLAR. You have no authority to withdraw it.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. It seems to me it ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. When I drew that I had to notify the lodges.

Senator MCKELLAR. It seems to me, in the interest of good government and every other interest, you should withdraw the protest. Would you do it if you could?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I wouldn't like to say, Senator.

Senator MCKELLAR. All right. I will not press it any further.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I haven't made up my mind on that.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there anything further?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I would like to leave a copy of the resolutions from the local lodges.

Senator CONNALLY. Who prepared them? Do you know who prepared them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. There have been quite a number of changes around there. I will be truthful and say that resolution did not originate in my lodge. I had nothing to do with it, or with any of the others that came up.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The first one is the resolution that was adopted by the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

The next one is from the local lodge of the International Association of Machinists:

"Resolution

"Whereas it is common knowledge that the United States Senators from this State have recommended for district judge from the middle district of Tennessee Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of this city, a man whose record—legislative and legal—is one of consistent opposition to everything in the interest of labor; and

"Whereas on January 29, 1939, as a member of the State senate, said Davies characterized the T. V. A. planning bills (including housing measures) as 'the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills ever introduced in this legislature,' thereafter broadening his remarks into a bitter general indictment of New Deal legislation that was designed to reduce unemployment and otherwise better the condition of the workingman; and

"Whereas Mr. Davies, as the senate proceedings clearly indicate, not only spoke against the T. V. A. planning bills, but exhausted without success every parliamentary means to bring about their defeat, declaring at the same time that the Roosevelt administration—bribing the States with Federal funds—had done more than the Civil War itself to destroy States' rights; and

"Whereas Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, which strangled the child-labor amendment without letting it come to a vote, is more than anyone else responsible for the failure of its ratification by the Tennessee Legislature; and

"Whereas Rock City Lodge 154, International Association of Machinists, is impressed with the importance of having Federal judges who are at least open-minded in regard to liberal measures and who are sympathetic with all classes of people—qualifications in which Mr. Davies is entirely lacking: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we most strongly protest the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge of the middle district of Tennessee; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following: To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; to United States Attorney General Frank Murphy; to Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and A. TOM STEWART."

Senator MCKELLAR. Were they not drawn up by Mr. Cate, who came up here in a tremendous flurry by airplane to tell the President he could not do that and could not do this?

Senator CONNALLY. If you know, answer the question.

Senator MCKELLAR. Were not these resolutions drawn up in Mr. Cate's office?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir; I don't think so.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not know whether they were or not?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I am most sure they were not.

Senator MCKELLAR. You did not draw them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Who did draw them?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. They were sent out by the recording secretaries of the lodges.

Senator MCKELLAR. Somebody originally drew them up. I may be mistaken, but my recollection is that Mr. Cate had resolutions from some of you gentlemen.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, I think you have been misinformed.

Senator MCKELLAR. Maybe I have been.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't think that Mr. Cate had anything to do with those resolutions. I think they originated in the local lodges.

Senator CONNALLY. Attached to these resolutions is a slip handed "Robert E. Lee dining room, Washington, D. C.," and this pencil notation: "Thirteen lodges requested to concur; three in Nashville." You asked 13 and got 3.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. There are four now.

Senator CONNALLY. Somebody sent them out. This memorandum indicates that somebody did prepare them and sent them to the lodges. Who was it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. The recording secretary.

Senator CONNALLY. Who is he?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. J. E. Moyers.

Senator CONNALLY. Did he draw these three resolutions?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't know who drew them. The original resolutions were drawn up by lodges on the Tennessee Central Railroad. The secretary drew them up and sent them to the other lodges, asking them to concur.

Senator CONNALLY. Did you ever see these resolutions before they went to the lodges?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. You did not see them in the office of the secretary?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. No, sir. The only thing I have knowledge of, the secretary of my lodge called me up and told me about this resolution and Mr. Davies, and asked me if it was all right for the lodge to act on it, and I told him to go ahead. Is that clear?

Senator CONNALLY. Yes. Is there anything else?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I have one other thing. I don't know whether that would be of any use or not.

Senator CONNALLY. What is it?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. An item that appeared in the press, where Reid called me over the long-distance phone and asked me for information as to Mr. Davies' political record.

Senator CONNALLY. Who did that?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Mr. Reid, our chairman.

Senator CONNALLY. I do not think that is material. Is there anything else?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. That appeared in the press in Nashville.

Senator CONNALLY. That was a request that Mr. Reid made of you?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir; that is what he asked me.

Senator MCKELLAR. What did he say to you?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. He wanted to know what evidence we had of Mr. Davies' public record. That came out in the Tennesseean, I think. I don't have the date.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you give it to the Tennesseean?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Yes, sir; I gave it to the Tennesseean.

Senator MCKELLAR. You have already testified to that.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. I don't know about that.

Senator CONNALLY. No; I do not think so. Is there anything further?

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Not that I know of.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there anybody else here opposed to this nomination?

FURTHER STATEMENT OF T. O. DENHAM, LEGISLATIVE CHAIRMAN, TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. DENHAM. He asked about withdrawing the complaint.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. DENHAM. In reply to that, I want to call attention to the report of the legislative committee of 1937, of which Mr. Reid was chairman and Mr. Daly was a member of the committee. I want to read that record.

Senator CONNALLY. Is that already in the record?

Mr. DENHAM. Not that point. This is the committee's own report, and Mr. Reid was chairman and Mr. Daly was a member of the committee.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. You may read it.

Mr. DENHAM. "Your committee desires to call attention to the following members of the general assembly who stood ready at all times to promote our legislation:

"Senators Thomas L. Cummings, of Davidson; Claude C. Toler, of Paris; Wesley Harville, of Shelby; Bland Maxwell, of Shelby; Gerald Stratton, of Shelby; A. J. Graves, of Knox; one lady member, Mrs. Ruth O'Dell, of Cocke County, incidated a responsive spirit."

Then there is a list of members of the house, but this only has to do with the senate.

Senator CONNALLY. That does not say anything about Senator Davies.

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir. He was not worthy of mention.

Senator MCKELLAR. There were 132 members of the senate. How many are there on your honor roll?

Mr. DENHAM. Seven. That was signed by Chairman Reid, Chrisman of the Engineers, Daly of the Railroad Trainmen, Clark of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and Archer of the Railway Conductors.

Senator MCKELLAR. There were 132 members of the legislature, and you do not mention all of them. Were those the most prominent members?

Mr. DENHAM. That was in the senate. There was another group in the house that I didn't read.

Senator MCKELLAR. At any rate, they did not condemn Mr. Davies.

Mr. DENHAM. They didn't give him any place.

Senator CONNALLY. Answer the question.

Mr. DENHAM. No, sir.

I want to say that the first time I voted I voted for you, and I am not too old to vote for you yet.

Senator MCKELLAR. I thank you very much. I thank you on my own behalf and on behalf of Mr. Davies.

Mr. DENHAM. But I cannot withdraw the protest. I don't have the authority.

Mr. SEIGENTHALER. Senator, you and I understand each other?

Senator MCKELLAR. Oh, yes.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you any witnesses, Senator MCKELLAR?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes; I have several.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you want Mr. Davies to make a statement?

Senator MCKELLAR. I do.

Senator CONNALLY. You may proceed with your witnesses.

STATEMENT OF PERRY DALY, ESQ., KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is Perry Daly?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Where do you live?

Mr. DALY. Knoxville.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you lived there?

Mr. DALY. Fifty years.

Senator MCKELLAR. Are you connected with organized labor?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. In what capacity?

Mr. DALY. State legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you held that position?

Mr. DALY. Since 1925.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you take an active interest in that work?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Elmer Davies?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you recall when he was a member of the State senate in 1935; also, I believe, in 1937?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir. I was there during the whole time he was in the senate.

Senator MCKELLAR. Was he opposed to labor measures?

Mr. DALY. I tried to find out and searched my recollection, and I can't find anything that would indicate that he was opposed to our legislation.

Senator MCKELLAR. As a labor man, you would endorse him?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know him as a man?

Mr. DALY. My acquaintance with him is very casual, Senator.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not know him intimately?

Mr. DALY. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. What is his reputation as a lawyer?

Mr. DALY. Excellent.

Senator MCKELLAR. And as a man?

Mr. DALY. Good; of the best.

Senator MCKELLAR. He has the reputation of being an honest, upright man?

Mr. DALY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Will you state to the committee what you know about organized labor, in connection with this matter?

Mr. DALY. So far as I know, I don't have any acquaintance with it, except as it has been brought out here this morning by the State federation of labor. We have in Tennessee a State federation of labor, and we also have the four railroad brotherhoods. I represent the biggest of the four in Tennessee and in the United States. Mr. Reid represents the firemen and enginemen, Mr. Jacobs the conductors, and Mr. Chrisman the engineers. So far as I know, the local lodges around Nashville are the only ones that raised any objection. There was something said about Mr. Reid, but I think his position has been explained.

Senator MCKELLAR. So far as you know, there is no other opposition?

Mr. DALY. Not that I know of.

Senator MCKELLAR. And you believe that Mr. Davies is in every way worthy of this position?

Mr. DALY. I certainly do, or you would not have recommended him.

Senator CONNALLY. Do your duties require you to be around the capitol during sessions of the legislature?

Mr. DALY. I am paid by my organization to be there.

Senator CONNALLY. While you are not a member of the American Federation of Labor, is there not a community interest in labor measures?

Mr. DALY. Up until the last primary election we had what we call the nonpartisan committee in Tennessee, composed of the four transportation brotherhoods and three members of the State federation of labor. We made certain endorsements, and the State federation of labor later tried to repudiate them, and we kind of pulled apart.

Senator CONNALLY. I mean around the legislature, when so-called labor bills are up, the brotherhoods as well as the federation would support them, or oppose them if they contained antilabor legislation?

Mr. DALY. Our brotherhood would cooperate with the federation.

Senator CONNALLY. And being around the legislature, is it not likely that you would have ascertained the attitude of Mr. Davies, if he had been opposing labor legislation?

Mr. DALY. He was not so regarded. I regarded him as rather inclined to be friendly.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you, Mr. Daly.

STATEMENT OF HUGH BONHAM, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. BONHAM. Hugh Bonham.

Senator MCKELLAR. You live in Nashville, Tenn.?

Mr. BONHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. To what labor organization do you belong?

Mr. BONHAM. Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you been a member of that organization?

Mr. BONHAM. Thirty-five years.

Senator MCKELLAR. Were you present at the recent convention of the State federation of labor in Nashville?

Mr. BONHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Elmer Davies?

Mr. BONHAM. Mighty well.

Senator MCKELLAR. Does he live in Nashville?

Mr. BONHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Have you known him for a good many years?

Mr. BONHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know his reputation as a lawyer and as a man in that community?

Mr. BONHAM. As an excellent and very fine gentleman.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you believe that he would make an excellent judge?

Mr. BONHAM. I believe so.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you think that he would be unfair to organized labor?

Mr. BONHAM. No, sir. He has always been for the under dog, as the fellow says, in every kind of a case that I ever knew anything about. They talk about him lobbying. He was trying to get a law repealed about the water rights, but it was killed in the house. He has always been friendly to labor.

Senator MCKELLAR. His ability as a lawyer is excellent, I believe you stated.

Mr. BONHAM. That is his reputation.

Senator MCKELLAR. And his character is fine?

Mr. BONHAM. Very good.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, have you any questions?

Senator CONNALLY. No.

Senator MCKELLAR. That will be all, Mr. Bonham. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF A. B. NEIL, ESQ., PRESIDING JUDGE OF THE CIRCUIT COURT OF NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is A. B. Neil?

Judge NEIL. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Judge Neil, of what court are you the judge in Nashville?

Judge NEIL. I am presiding judge of all three of the circuit courts.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you been on the bench at Nashville?

Judge NEIL. Twenty-nine years.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is longer than any of the rest of them, is it not?

Judge NEIL. Yes; too long.

Senator MCKELLAR. Oh, no, Judge; oh, no. Judge Neil, are you acquainted with Mr. Elmer Davies?

Judge NEIL. Very well.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Judge NEIL. Since he was first admitted to the practice.

Senator MCKELLAR. Does he practice in your court?

Judge NEIL. He does.

Senator MCKELLAR. Is he considered an excellent lawyer?

Judge NEIL. He is so regarded by all the courts.

Senator MCKELLAR. And you so regard him, yourself?

Judge NEIL. I do.

Senator MCKELLAR. He has been nominated by the President for the position of district judge in the Middle District of Tennessee, as you know. What do you have to say in reference to that nomination and appointment?

Judge NEIL. I think he will make an excellent judge, based upon his character as a man and his reputation as a lawyer. I think it is a good appointment, a splendid appointment.

Senator MCKELLAR. You think it is a splendid appointment?

Judge NEIL. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. Does he have any bias or prejudice of any kind against labor?

Judge NEIL. No. I never heard of any prejudice he ever had against organized labor. I do not feel that organized labor should feel the slightest uneasiness about appearing in his court.

Senator CONNALLY. You have testified that he is a very fine lawyer and a very fine man. What do you have to say as to his judicial temperament? Is he a man you would consider to be fair and impartial on the bench, rather than to follow the prejudices which sometimes affect men in the practice?

Judge NEIL. I think he is a man of poise and dignity. I do not think he has any prejudices of any kind. I do not think he would be influenced by any past connections or clients he may have had.

Senator CONNALLY. These gentlemen who have appeared here for the labor movement seem to have some doubt about it. In your view, if Mr. Davies were on the bench, and a matter came before him affecting labor, do you think he would act in a fair and impartial manner?

Judge NEIL. I am sure he would.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you very much. We appreciate your coming here.

STATEMENT OF R. B. C. HOWELL, ESQ., JUDGE OF CHANCERY COURT, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is R. B. C. Howell?

Judge HOWELL. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. And what position do you hold?

Judge HOWELL. I am judge of part 1 of the chancery court at Nashville.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you held that position?

Judge HOWELL. Eleven years last spring.

Senator MCKELLAR. Have you known, during that time and before, Mr. Elmer Davies?

Judge HOWELL. I have known him since he was admitted to the bar, and while he has practiced at the Nashville bar. Since I came on the bench he has had a good deal of business in my court. I know him well.

Senator MCKELLAR. How do you regard him as a lawyer and as a prospective judge?

Judge HOWELL. Elmer Davies is an honorable gentleman, a fine lawyer, is well educated, and in my opinion he would make a splendid judge.

Senator MCKELLAR. You heard the questions asked of the chairman of Judge Neil as to judicial poise and temperament. What would you say as to that?

Judge HOWELL. I agree fully with Judge Neil. I do not think that it would be possible for him to let anything that has happened in connection with this matter influence him in the least.

Senator MCKELLAR. Judge, I am a little tender on the subject of age.

Judge HOWELL. I think I know what is in your mind.

Senator MCKELLAR. I do not know whether to ask you this question or not.

Judge HOWELL. Senator, let me take care of that.

Senator MCKELLAR. I will let you explain it.

Judge HOWELL. I am sure that what you have in mind is that I was an applicant for the appointment, and had the endorsement of all these gentlemen; but a few months ago I became 60 years old. I found that old age had crept up on me. I had to bow to old age. I think the Senators from Tennessee have rendered splendid service in the recommendation of Elmer Davies.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you very much, Judge Howell.

STATEMENT OF S. L. FELTS, ESQ., ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, COURT OF APPEALS OF TENNESSEE

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is S. L. Felts?

Judge FELTS. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. What position do you hold?

Judge FELTS. Associate justice of the Court of Appeals of Tennessee.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you held that position?

Judge FELTS. A little over 2 years.

Senator MCKELLAR. Are you acquainted with Mr. Elmer Davies?

Judge FELTS. Very well.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Judge FELTS. Ever since he got out of law school and started practicing law in Nashville.

Senator MCKELLAR. About 20 years ago?

Judge FELTS. As I recall it.

Senator MCKELLAR. What is his standing and reputation at the bar as a lawyer and an honest, upright, and conscientious man?

Judge FELTS. He enjoys the very best reputation as a lawyer and as an honest man.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you think he has judicial poise and character to make a good district judge?

Judge FELTS. I think he has the character as a man, the learning as a lawyer, and the judicial temperament to make a splendid judge.

Senator MCKELLAR. You have heard the questions that were raised by two of our leading labor representatives concerning Mr. Davies. Do you think he would be prejudiced against organized labor in any way if he were selected as judge?

Judge FELTS. No; I am satisfied he would not.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF CHARLES GILBERT, ESQ., JUDGE OF THE CIRCUIT COURT, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Judge GILBERT. Charles Gilbert.

Senator MCKELLAR. You are one of the circuit judges at Nashville?

Judge GILBERT. One of the circuit court judges.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is the State court in Nashville?

Judge GILBERT. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. What other places have you held in Nashville?

Judge GILBERT. I was formerly an assistant prosecutor, and also assistant city attorney.

Senator MCKELLAR. You have heard some question raised this morning about Mr. Davies being connected in some way with the Ku Klux Klan. Do you happen to know anything about that? Let me explain just what I have in mind. You are a Jew, are you not?

Judge GILBERT. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. And the Ku Klux Klan was supposed to be opposed to Jews.

Judge GILBERT. That is correct.

Senator MCKELLAR. Can you say whether or not Mr. Davies supported you as a candidate for judge?

Judge GILBERT. He did.

Senator MCKELLAR. And against whom did he support you?

Judge GILBERT. He supported me every time I ran. In one particular instance Mr. Noble, whose name has been mentioned here, ran against me. He was a Klansman, and Mr. Davies was active for me.

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Noble was a Klansman?

Judge GILBERT. He was.

Senator MCKELLAR. And was running against you?

Judge GILBERT. That is correct.

Senator MCKELLAR. And you are a Jew, and Mr. Davies supported you actively?

Judge GILBERT. Openly; yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. May I read into the record a letter which you wrote to Attorney General Murphy some time ago concerning this matter?

Judge GILBERT. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. This is on the letterhead of Charles Gilbert, judge of division 2 of the criminal court, dated at Nashville, Tenn., June 10, 1939, and addressed to Hon. Frank Murphy, Attorney General of the United States, reading as follows:

"HONORABLE SIR: Some several months ago, Senators McKELLAR and STEWART, of this State, recommended Hon. Elmer D. Davies for appointment as judge of the United States District Court for the Middle Division of Tennessee. I understand their selection is now before you for your consideration.

"According to reports in the local press, an accusation has been made by Mr. W. S. Noble, an attorney of the Nashville bar, that Mr. Davies was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

"I am a Jew and was born and reared in Nashville, Tenn., within a stone's throw of this courthouse. I am 50 years of age, was formerly an assistant prosecutor of this county, and also an assistant city attorney of Nashville. I was elected judge of division 2 of the Criminal Court in 1930, to fill out the unexpired term of the late Hon. Frank Garard, and reelected in 1934 for the constitutional term of 8 years. Insofar as I can ascertain, I am the only Jew ever elected to the judiciary south of the Ohio River. I might add that I was one of the original Roosevelt Democrats in Tennessee, as the correspondence in Mr. Farley's office will show.

"I am a member of the Vine Street Temple, have been for a number of years, have never renounced my religion, and never intend to; and every person in this community knows that I am a Jew.

"Back in 1925, when I first ran for the judgeship, the Klan was at its height, and at that time, and every time since then, Mr. Davies supported me. He knew I was a Jew then, and he knows that I am still a Jew. In 1934, in the Democratic primary, my opponent was Mr. W. S. Noble; and in all of his advertisements and in all of his public utterances, his motto was: "Put none but Americans on guard." Mr. Noble was a Klansman then and, insofar as I am informed, is still one, and a most active one. I do not know whether Mr. Davies ever belonged to the Klan, but I do know that he is free from religious prejudices of any kind. I have visited in his home time and time again, and he has visited in my home; and I cannot conceive of this man being imbued with any prejudices or disqualifications of any other nature that would render him unfit for the position of judge.

"His support of me was not a secret one, but he was actively engaged during the campaign and at the polls. If he believed in the principles of the Ku Klux Klan, certainly he would not have taken such active part openly here in the South.

"I would not have you believe for 1 minute that I am asking favorable action at your hands in the selection of Mr. Davies because he supported me; but I want you to understand distinctly the spirit in which this letter is written, that is, in fairness to an honorable, upright, Christian gentleman whose character and reputation are above reproach.

"Further than this, I would have you know that I bear no bitterness of any kind toward Mr. Noble. In fact, we are on friendly terms, and I believe him to be an honest man; but I can not subscribe to tactics which are being resorted to in an effort to defeat this appointment.

"This letter is being written by me without the knowledge of Mr. Davies."

Senator McKELLAR. In your opinion, what kind of a judge of the United States district court at Nashville would Mr. Davies make?

Judge GILBERT. He would make an excellent judge.

Senator McKELLAR. You have heard some question raised here concerning labor organizations. Would he be prejudiced against labor organizations?

Judge GILBERT. I would say no. I think he is very honorable and fair. He would be as fair to labor as he could.

Senator McKELLAR. He would be as fair as any man could be that was selected as judge?

Judge GILBERT. I think so.

Senator McKELLAR. What about his judicial poise and temperament?

Judge GILBERT. He possesses those qualities.

Senator McKELLAR. In a marked degree? Or how?

Judge GILBERT. To a marked degree.

Senator McKELLAR. Is there anything else you would like to say?

Judge GILBERT. He is an excellent lawyer and a fine gentleman. I think every member of the Nashville Bar will say the same thing about him.

Senator McKELLAR. How was his proposed nomination generally received at Nashville, if you know?

Judge GILBERT. It was generally acceptable.

Senator McKELLAR. Did you know that he was an applicant at the time he was appointed or nominated?

Judge GILBERT. It came as a surprise to me. I knew Judge Howell was an applicant. Most of the lawyers were for Judge Howell, as I understand it. He was precluded because of his age. I was surprised when Mr. Davies' name was mentioned. I saw it in the papers, the first I knew of it.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF ROY O. BEELER, ESQ., ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

Senator McKELLAR. State your name to the committee.

Attorney General BEELER. Roy Beeler.

Senator McKELLAR. You live in Knoxville?

Attorney General BEELER. That is my home. I have been in Nashville for 13 years.

Senator McKELLAR. You are attorney general of the State of Tennessee?

Attorney General BEELER. I am.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you held that position?

Attorney General BEELER. Since 1932.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Elmer Davies?

Attorney General BEELER. I do.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known Mr. Davies?

Attorney General BEELER. Approximately 15 years.

Senator McKELLAR. What is your estimate of him as a man, as a lawyer, and as a prospective judge of the United States District Court at Nashville?

Attorney General BEELER. He is a man of splendid integrity, fine legal attainments, excellent judicial poise; and I think he would make a splendid judge of the United States district court.

Senator McKELLAR. You heard the objections raised here by two members of organized labor. What would you say as to those objections?

Attorney General BEELER. I think when Judge Davies is sworn in he will be absolutely fair to every litigant that comes before him and will fairly and impartially discharge his duties as a judge.

Senator McKELLAR. What is his standing generally at the bar of Nashville?

Attorney General BEELER. He is one of the leading members of that bar, especially for his age.

Senator McKELLAR. You have know him virtually since he came to the bar?

Attorney General BEELER. Practically ever since then.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much, General Beeler.

STATEMENT OF HON. HILL M'ALLISTER, FORMER GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is Hill McAllister?

Mr. McALLISTER. That is correct.

Senator McKELLAR. And you were formerly Governor of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. McALLISTER. Yes.

Senator McKELLAR. When were you Governor of Tennessee?

Mr. McALLISTER. From January 1933 to January 1937.

Senator McKELLAR. Governor McAllister, do you remember what were known as the T. V. A. bills, which were spoken of here this morning by two of our excellent labor men in Nashville?

Mr. McALLISTER. Very well.

Senator McKELLAR. Were all those bills T. V. A. bills?

Mr. McALLISTER. No. Only three, or possibly four, were known as T. V. A. bills. The rest of them were bills in which the State planning board was interested. They were primarily bills to enable divisions of the State to get advantage of certain public funds from Washington. The question arose as to whether all those bills were T. V. A. bills. I communicated with Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, who was Chairman of the T. V. A. at that time. He told me that the T. V. A had no interest, except those three or possibly four; that they had possibly approved the others, but they were not their bills.

Senator McKELLAR. They were all passed, were they not?

Mr. McALLISTER. The T. V. A. bills?

Senator McKELLAR. The T. V. A. bills.

Mr. McALLISTER. Oh, yes.

Senator McKELLAR. And the others?

Mr. McALLISTER. Two were not introduced, because, if I recall correctly, Attorney General Beeler advised me there was some constitutional defect. They were not even presented to the legislature. The others were.

Senator McKELLAR. The others were passed?

Mr. McALLISTER. They were.

Senator McKELLAR. But have they ever been utilized?

Mr. McALLISTER. Some of them, which had a time limitation on them. They expired January 1, 1936.

Senator McKELLAR. It was temporary legislation?

Mr. McALLISTER. It was temporary legislation.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Elmer Davies?

Mr. McALLISTER. Very well.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Mr. McALLISTER. Since he has been a member of the Nashville bar, where I live, some 15 or 18 years.

Senator McKELLAR. What is his reputation as a member of the bar and as a man?

Mr. McALLISTER. The very best.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you recall what the letters following his name are in Martindale's Directory, the letters that indicate the standing of a man?

Mr. McALLISTER. I do not recall, but they could not be anything but the very best.

Senator McKELLAR. They are AB, and that means the best.

In your judgment, does he have judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. McALLISTER. Yes.

Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, would he be unfair to labor or to any other organization or group of people?

Mr. McALLISTER. I do not think so, in any sense.

Senator McKELLAR. You believe he is very well qualified for this position?

Mr. McALLISTER. I feel certain of it.

Senator McKELLAR. What was the attitude of Mr. Davies in the two legislatures in which he served while you were Governor, in respect to labor, as to whether he cooperated or opposed?

Mr. McALLISTER. He was cooperative and friendly.

Senator MCKELLAR. What about the national program, the T. V. A. program?

Mr. MCALLISTER. He was known as an advocate of that. We were all elected in the fall of 1934; you, Senator Bachmann, myself, and Mr. Davies, and the national T. V. A. program was discussed in that campaign.

Senator MCKELLAR. And all of us were speaking in favor of the T. V. A.?

Mr. MCALLISTER. That is true. In my opinion, the same cooperation was given by Mr. Davies after the legislature convened.

Senator MCKELLAR. And he was for these T. V. A. bills?

Mr. MCALLISTER. Undoubtedly.

Senator MCKELLAR. His name was signed to them, was it not?

Mr. MCALLISTER. I would not be certain about that.

Senator MCKELLAR. Is there anything else you would like to say?

Mr. MCALLISTER. Nothing else.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF F. M. BASS, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is F. M. Bass?

Mr. BASS. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Where do you live?

Mr. BASS. Nashville, Tenn.

Senator MCKELLAR. You served in the late war, did you not?

Mr. BASS. To a limited extent.

Senator MCKELLAR. You were a major in that war?

Mr. BASS. I was.

Senator MCKELLAR. Would it be embarrassing to you to tell how long you have practiced law at Nashville?

Mr. BASS. Not in the presence of our gray-haired friends here. I have practiced law in Nashville for 42 years.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you known Elmer Davies?

Mr. BASS. Since he was a school boy at Vanderbilt University.

Senator MCKELLAR. In your judgment, if confirmed as United States District Judge, to which position he has been nominated by the President, would he make an excellent and fair and able judge?

Mr. BASS. I am quite of the opinion that he would.

Senator MCKELLAR. Does he have judicial poise and temperament, in your judgment?

Mr. BASS. He has, to much more than the average extent.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you know whether he has ever had any clients in the past in the way of corporations or others, that would tend to prejudice him in any way in the performance of his duty as United States district judge?

Mr. BASS. I don't think so. Mr. Davies has had a general practice. He has not been a corporation lawyer, in the sense usually referred to. He is a young man, widely known among the middle class, more especially, by the man in the street. His practice has been more largely with individuals rather than with corporations. His high sense of justice, his inherent honesty, and his pride in his character and reputation as a lawyer would combine to make him a fair and impartial judge, free from bias or prejudice.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you every much.

STATEMENT OF SETH WALKER, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Your name is Seth Walker?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. What is your business?

Mr. WALKER. Attorney at law, Nashville.

Senator MCKELLAR. How long have you been practicing law in Nashville?

Mr. WALKER. Twenty-six years.

Senator MCKELLAR. Have you known Mr. Elmer Davies during that time?

Mr. WALKER. I have known Mr. Davies since 1919, when he was in Vanderbilt University.

Senator MCKELLAR. He was educated at that institution?

Mr. WALKER. He was.

Senator MCKELLAR. He has been nominated by the President for the position of United States distict judge for the Middle District of Tennessee, and his confirmation is now pending before the Senate. In your judgment, if confirmed and made a United States district judge, would he make a fair and impartial judge?

Mr. WALKER. In my opinion, he would make an excellent district judge.

Senator MCKELLAR. What about his judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. WALKER. My reasons for the statement just made that he would make an excellent district judge are several. In the first place, I think that Mr. Davies has a fine knowledge of men. I think that he is a good judge of human nature. I think he is eminently fair. I think he is a strong man, strong in his convictions. He has principle and courage. He is a good student. I think he possesses all the essentials to make a splendid judge.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you think he would be prejudiced against organized labor or any other body of our people?

Mr. WALKER. I think not.

Senator MCKELLAR. How was his appointment received in Nashville? Was it generally approved or not?

Mr. WALKER. Of course, his appointment or recommendation by the Senators from Tennessee was quite a surprise, for the reason that Mr. Davies was not an applicant. However, when the news was flashed that he had been recommended, I can truthfully say that I never heard anything other than the finest things said about him and about the appointment. Everyone commended it.

Senator MCKELLAR. Something has been said here about the Ku Klux Klan. Do you know Rabbi Julius Mark, of Nashville?

Mr. WALKER. Yes. He is an able man.

Senator MCKELLAR. I will read a telegram from him, addressed to Senator STEWART and myself.

JULY 6, 1939.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR and Hon. A. T. STEWART,
United States Senate:

Earnestly hope you will vote for confirmation of Hon. Elmer D. Davies, who, in my opinion, is eminently qualified by training and experience and temperament for Federal judgeship.

JULIUS MARK.

He is rabbi of the Vine Street Temple of Nashville, is he not?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir. He stands high and has the confidence and respect of all those who know him.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you ever observed anything in the character of Mr. Davies that would indicate intolerance or any danger of his becoming a tyrant on the bench?

Mr. WALKER. No, sir. On the other hand, I think his elevation to the bench would not take away from him what he has today.

Senator CONNALLY. There is a feeling over the country that some Federal judges, who have lifetime jobs of which they cannot be deprived, become more or less tyrannical and arbitrary.

Mr. WALKER. Yes. Mr. Davies is a kind-hearted man and has no evidence of bigotry about him.

Senator CONNALLY. Thank you, Mr. Walker.

STATEMENT OF W. D. MOSS, ESQ., JACKSON, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. MOSS. W. T. Moss.

Senator MCKELLAR. You are a lawyer?

Mr. MOSS. Yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. Of Jackson, Tenn.?

Mr. MOSS. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. Were you ever in the State senate?

Mr. MOSS. Yes; I was in the Tennessee Senate in 1933 and again in 1935.

Senator MCKELLAR. Were you speaker at either of these sessions?

Mr. MOSS. I was speaker in 1935.

Senator MCKELLAR. Was Mr. Elmer Davies a member of that body?

Mr. MOSS. He was.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you know him intimately?

Mr. MOSS. I knew him very well. He and I went to college together at Vanderbilt University.

Senator MCKELLAR. And you have been friends ever since?

Mr. MOSS. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. During all that time?

Mr. MOSS. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you have occasion to witness the conduct of Mr. Davies in the State senate in 1935?

Mr. MOSS. I did.

Senator MCKELLAR. You have heard the testimony that has been adduced here concerning his opposition to labor. Did you have that understanding?

Mr. MOSS. If he was ever opposed to any measure recommended by organized labor, I did not know it.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did he support the T. V. A. bills?

Mr. MOSS. He did. He talked to me about them. I remember he consulted me about them, because he said part of his platform pledge was that he would support the T. V. A. The bills that Governor McAllister referred to were understood by everybody to be T. V. A. bills, but later we learned most of them were not. I told Mr. Davies I thought he could feel free to oppose about 11 of them. There were three or four that were T. V. A. bills, and he voted for every one of them.

Senator MCKELLAR. But he opposed those proposed by the planning commission?

Mr. MOSS. He and a good many other members of the senate.

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you believe he will make an impartial and honest and faithful judge?

Mr. MOSS. I think undoubtedly he will.

Senator MCKELLAR. Does he have judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. MOSS. Yes; he has a good deal of poise. Knowing him as I do, if he is confirmed and takes the oath as judge, he will have the ability and industry to learn what the law is and the integrity and the courage to enforce it.

Senator MCKELLAR. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF J. D. MOSBY, ESQ., SOMERVILLE, TENN.

Senator MCKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. MOSBY. J. D. Mosby.

Senator MCKELLAR. You live in Somerville, Tenn.?

Mr. MOSBY. I do.

Senator MCKELLAR. You are engaged in the practice of law and have been for many years?

Mr. MOSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you ever serve in the legislature?

Mr. MOSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. What branch?

Mr. MOSBY. In the Tennessee Senate in 1935 and 1939.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you know Mr. Elmer Davies, who served in that same body?

Mr. MOSBY. I knew him very intimately.

Senator MCKELLAR. Some question has been raised as to his support of the T. V. A. bills. Is that your recollection?

Mr. MOSBY. Senator and Mr. Chairman, he supported all of the so-called T. V. A. bills. He did oppose certain bills which were first designated as T. V. A. bills, but which later developed to be planning bills. He opposed the planning bills. The gentleman said this morning those bills were designed to bring $100,000 to Tennessee.

Senator McKELLAR. One hundred million dollars.

Mr. MOSBY. Yes. When you get up that high, I don't know much difference. The bills they had in mind were the so-called T. V. A. bills which were passed at the extra session in 1935, and Senator Davies supported every one of them. I know because I assisted in piloting them through the legislature.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you mean the bills by which the counties and the cities took advantage of the 45 percent of the Federal appropriation?

Mr. MOSBY. Yes. I know he supported those bills. He was partly responsible for getting them through the senate. I consulted with him.

Senator McKELLAR. You were speaker at that time?

Mr. MOSBY. Not in 1935. I was in 1939.

Senator McKELLAR. But you worked and consulted with him about those bills.

Mr. MOSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you think he would make a good judge?

Mr. MOSBY. I think he would make an excellent judge. I think I told you when I was here shortly after his name was suggested that you could not have made a better appointment. At that time you said he was not an applicant, and I said it made no difference, but I would still stick to what I said first.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF H. FRANK TAYLOR, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. H. Frank Taylor.

Senator McKELLAR. You are a lawyer?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. In Nashville, Tenn.?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you practiced law?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have lived there for 39 years, and have practiced law for 12 years.

Senator McKELLAR. You have lived there all your life?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have lived there all my life.

Senator McKELLAR. You were born there?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. What position do you hold now?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am now assistant district attorney for the tenth judicial district of Tennessee—prosecuting attorney.

Senator McKELLAR. At Nashville, Tenn.?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Federal or State?

Mr. TAYLOR. State.

Senator CONNALLY. How long have you held that position?

Mr. TAYLOR. Approximately 18 months.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you hold any position in the Knights of Columbus?

Mr. TAYLOR. Not at present. Well, I do. I am a member of the board of directors of the local Knights of Columbus. I was formerly grand master in 1935 and 1937, and I was formerly district deputy for the middle district of Tennessee, district State deputy.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Elmer Davies?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mighty well.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have known him practically ever since he came to the Nashville bar.

Senator McKELLAR. He has been nominated for United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and his nomination is now pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee and before the Senate. In your judgment, would he make an excellent district judge?

Mr. TAYLOR. He most certainly would.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you regard him as having judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. TAYLOR. I certainly do.

Senator McKELLAR. What about his character as a lawyer and as a man?

Mr. TAYLOR. He stands as one of the highest in the city of Nashville as a lawyer and as a man.

Senator McKELLAR. Something has been said about the Ku Klux Klan. Do you recall the election in 1928?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir. I was in close association with Mr. Davies in that election, and I personally know that he stumped the State for Governor Smith. I might further say that before I came here I discussed Mr. Davies with the church authorities at Nashville. The bishop was not in the city, and I talked to Rev. George Flanigen, who is the superintendent of the Catholic schools. He is also editor of the Register, the Catholic paper in Nashville. He stated to me that someone had called his attention to the fact that Mr. Davies was not a proper man to be Federal judge, so far as Catholicism was concerned, and might be a member of the Ku Klux Klan. He said he took it up with the church authorities and it was referred to him and he personally made an investigation and found those rumors to be untrue, and told me he was going to wire you to that effect.

Senator McKELLAR. He did. This is a telegram from him addressed to Senator STEWART and myself:

JULY 5, 1939.

Senators K. D. McKELLAR and A. T. STEWART:

After careful investigation we find no objection to Davies' qualifications and fitness for Federal judgeship.

GEO. J. FLANIGEN,
Superintendent of Catholic Schools.

That is the same Father Flanigen to whom you refer?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Senator McKELLAR. I believe you said you thought Mr. Davies had proper fitness for that place.

Mr. TAYLOR. I certainly do.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM HUME, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. HUME. William Hume.

Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer at Nashville?

Mr. HUME. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you been practicing law there?

Mr. HUME. Since 1910.

Senator McKELLAR. What is your firm name?

Mr. HUME. Trabue, Hume & Armistead.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Elmer Davies?

Mr. HUME. I do.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Mr. HUME. From the time he became a member of the Nashville bar.

Senator McKELLAR. About 20 years?

Mr. HUME. I don't think quite that long.

Senator McKELLAR. About 18 years?

Mr. HUME. I think so.

Senator McKELLAR. He has been nominated for United States district judge of the middle district of Tennessee, and his nomination is now pending before the Senate. In your judgment, is he well qualified and a fit man for that place?

Mr. HUME. I would say so, without qualification. I have had a good deal of business with him, never on the same side of a question, I think. I regard him as a man of unusual moral courage and fine intellectual honesty.

Senator McKELLAR. Does he have judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. HUME. Yes, sir. I think he has the honesty and intelligence and the poise to be a fair and impartial judge.

Senator McKELLAR. Some question was raised about his prejudice against labor organizations. Would you say, from your knowledge of Mr. Davies, that he has any such prejudice against labor or any other organization?

Mr. HUME. I would say not. I would say any litigant would get a fair and impartial hearing before him.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF W. R. MANIER, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is W. R. Manier?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. And you live at Nashville, Tenn.?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. You are a lawyer?

Mr. MANIER. I am a lawyer.

Senator McKELLAR. You are interested in the Rotary Club, I believe?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir. About 2 years ago I was more of a Rotarian than a lawyer, but I have returned to the practice.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Elmer Davies?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known him?

Mr. MANIER. I have known him almost ever since he came to the bar at Nashville. I don't think I knew him before.

Senator McKELLAR. What is your judgment of him as a lawyer and as a man?

Mr. MANIER. I think he is an excellent lawyer, studious, industrious, and an excellent man.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know of any reason why he would not make a fair and impartial judge?

Mr. MANIER. None whatever.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you think he has judicial poise and temperament?

Mr. MANIER. He has all the necessary qualities.

Senator McKELLAR. He stands high at your bar?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Were you at one time international president of the Rotary clubs?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. That is the highest office they can give anyone, is it not?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. It is a very large organization?

Mr. MANIER. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF CECIL SIMS, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Please state your name to the committee.

Mr. SIMS. Cecil Sims.

Senator McKELLAR. Where do you live?

Mr. SIMS. Nashville.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you lived there?

Mr. SIMS. Since 1914.

Senator McKELLAR. What is your business?
Mr. SIMS. I am a lawyer.
Senator McKELLAR. How long have you been practicing law?
Mr. SIMS. Since 1914.
Senator McKELLAR. Have you known Elmer Davies during that time?
Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir; I have known him ever since he has been practicing law.
Senator McKELLAR. He came to Nashville about 1920?
Mr. SIMS. Approximately.
Senator McKELLAR. He is a Vanderbilt man?
Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. Was educated there?
Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. And you have known him ever since?
Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, would he make a good United States district judge?
Mr. SIMS. I think he would make an excellent United States district judge.
Senator McKELLAR. What are your reasons for saying that?
Mr. SIMS. They are based on my intimate personal knowledge of his ability, integrity, industry, and general character as a man.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you believe he would be prejudiced against any class of people in the world?
Mr. SIMS. I don't think so. I am quite sure he would not.
Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF JOHN HOOKER, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is John Hooker?
Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. And you are a lawyer at Nashville?
Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer there, and your firm is what?
Mr. HOOKER. Walker & Hooker.
Senator McKELLAR. Mr. Walker has already testified?
Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. And you have been practicing there how long?
Mr. HOOKER. Fifteen years; before I was of age.
Senator McKELLAR. I remember when you came. Mr. Hooker, do you know Elmer Davies?
Mr. HOOKER. Very well.
Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, would he make a good Federal district judge?
Mr. HOOKER. An excellent one.
Senator McKELLAR. What is your estimate of him?
Mr. HOOKER. He is a man of the highest character, courage, ability; splendid gentleman in every respect.
Senator McKELLAR. Has he any bias that would prejudice him against any class or organization of people?
Mr. HOOKER. None whatever that I know of.
Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF THOMAS TEMPLETON, ESQ., WINCHESTER, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. State your name to the committee.
Mr. TEMPLETON. Thomas Templeton.
Senator McKELLAR. Where do you live?
Mr. TEMPLETON. Winchester.
Senator McKELLAR. How long have you lived there?
Mr. TEMPLETON. All my life.
Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer there?
Mr. TEMPLETON. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. How long have you been practicing law there?
Mr. TEMPLETON. For 42 years.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Elmer Davies?
Mr. TEMPLETON. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, would he make a good United States district judge?
Mr. TEMPLETON. I think so.
Senator McKELLAR. Would he be fair and impartial as a judge, in his conduct, or would he be partial?
Mr. TEMPLETON. I don't think he would be partial. I observed him some years ago in court. I didn't know him at that time, and I later made inquiry about him, because he had so impressed me in his manner of handling the lawsuit and the conduct of it that I thought very favorably of him. He impressed me as a young man of great ability, and I wanted to know more about him. Later on he was a member of the senate, and I was up there a number of times and observed his conduct there, and he impressed me very favorably.
Senator McKELLAR. And you believe that he would make a fine United States district judge?
Mr. TEMPLETON. I think he would.
Senator McKELLAR. Thank you, Mr. Templeton.

STATEMENT OF JACK NORMAN, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is Jack Norman?
Mr. NORMAN. It is.
Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer at Nashville?
Mr. NORMAN. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Davies?
Mr. NORMAN. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. How long have you known him?
Mr. NORMAN. Ever since I have been at the bar; 13 years.
Senator McKELLAR. Tell the committee what sort of a United States district judge he would make.
Mr. NORMAN. I think he would make an excellent judge. I know him to be an excellent gentleman. I know something of his home life—and that goes a long way with me, and I know that is excellent. As a lawyer, we young lawyers have always regarded him as one of the leaders and have looked up to him in that way. There is no question in my mind, and I think I voice the opinion of all of our lawyers, particularly the younger group, that he would make an excellent judge. He possesses all the qualifications.
Senator McKELLAR. Thanks, Mr. Norman.

STATEMENT OF W. E. BADGETT, ESQ., KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. State your name to the committee.
Mr. BADGETT. W. E. Badgett.
Senator McKELLAR. You live in Knoxville?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer there?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. Were you a member of the last legislature?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. Were you a member when Mr. Davies was a member?
Mr. BADGETT. No, sir. Last term was my first term.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Davies?
Mr. BADGETT. I do.
Senator McKELLAR. Are you interested in labor?
Mr. BADGETT. I am, very much.
Senator McKELLAR. Are you a member of an organization?
Mr. BADGETT. No, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. But you are interested in labor?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir. I know the musicians' bill mentioned this morning was backed by labor, and I worked for all the labor organizations. I know Mr. Davies was active in getting that bill passed over the Governor's veto.
Senator McKELLAR. It was passed over the Governor's veto?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. And Mr. Davies was active in getting it passed over the veto?
Mr. BADGETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you believe he would make a good, fair United States district judge?
Mr. BADGETT. I think he will make an excellent judge. I don't believe you could have made a better choice.
Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF SYDNEY KEEBLE, ESQ.

Senator McKELLAR. State your name to the committee.
Mr. KEEBLE. Sydney Keeble.
Senator CONNALLY. Do you know Mr. Davies?
Mr. KEEBLE. Yes, sir.
Senator CONNALLY. How long have you known him?
Mr. KEEBLE. About 15 years.
Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, would he make a good Federal judge?
Mr. KEEBLE. I think he would. I think he is a splendid lawyer, has a splendid character, and possesses the judicial temperament to make a good judge.
Senator McKELLAR. I want to ask you a question or two on my own hook. I am always interested in history and biography. You are a great grandson of John Bell, of Tennessee, are you not?
Mr. KEEBLE. Yes, sir. He was my father's grandfather.
Senator McKELLAR. And your father's name is John Bell Keeble?
Mr. KEEBLE. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. And you have a brother bearing the same name?
Mr. KEEBLE. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. I am asking that question for two reasons, Mr. Chairman.
Senator CONNALLY. One of which is to show your knowledge of Tennessee history. [Laughter.]
(Discussion off the record.)
Senator McKELLAR. Do you think Mr. Davies would make an excellent Federal district judge?
Mr. KEEBLE. I do.
Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF B. B. GULLETT, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is B. B. Gullett?
Mr. GULLETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. You live in Nashville?
Mr. GULLETT. Yes, sir.
Senator McKELLAR. What is your occupation?
Mr. GULLETT. I am an attorney and clerk of the State senate.
Senator McKELLAR. Were you clerk of the State senate when Mr. Davies was a member?
Mr. GULLET. I was assistant clerk in 1935, when Mr. Davies was in the senate.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you know him very well?
Mr. GULLETT. Very well.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you think, from your knowledge of him, that he would make a good Federal judge?
Mr. GULLETT. I think that he would make a fine Federal judge.
Senator McKELLAR. Something has been said about his record against the T. V. A. bills when he was in the Senate. Do you know anything about that?
Mr. GULLETT. I prepared the Journal the gentleman quoted from here this morning, and I know that he very actively supported the bills that were the T. V. A. bills. He opposed some of the State planning bills, but I know he supported and was very active in behalf of the T. V. A. bills. These other bills were at the special session, by which they were to get the $100,000,000 that has been discussed, and he very actively supported them.

Senator McKELLAR. Has he ever been against organized labor?

Mr. GULLETT. I never heard of it.

Senator McKELLAR. Was he ever against Catholics or Jews?

Mr. GULLETT. He is one of the fairest and most impartial men I ever knew, and has never indicated any bias toward anyone.

Senator McKELLAR. And you think that he would make an excellent judge?

Mr. GULLETT. I certainly do. When the report came out, I felt that his appointment was fine and would be 99.44-percent satisfactory, and I still feel the same way about it.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you, Mr. Gullett.

STATEMENT OF JOHN S. GLENN, ESQ., MADISON, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is John S. Glenn?

Mr. GLENN. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Where do you live?

Mr. GLENN. At Madison, 7 miles from Nashville.

Senator McKELLAR. How did you happen to come up here?

Mr. GLENN. On my own account.

Senator McKELLAR. You were not asked to come?

Mr. GLENN. No, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Why did you come?

Mr. GLENN. I read about some opposition against Mr. Davies, whom I have known for several years.

Senator McKELLAR. What do you know about him?

Mr. GLENN. I have had occasion to be connected and associated with Mr. Davies in several matters, and knew his appointment was up, and knew his character and family, and thought it my duty to come up here.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you think he would make an excellent judge?

Mr. GLENN. I do.

Senator McKELLAR. To what church do you belong? The reason I ask that is because some question has been raised in regard to Mr. Davies being a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. GLENN. In the name of Al Smith, I belong to the Irish Catholic Church. Some call it "Roman." I represent the Irish.

Senator McKELLAR. You were for Al Smith in 1928, as I was, and as Mr. Davies was?

Mr. GLENN. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. You take no stock in the rumor that he was a Klansman?

Mr. GLENN. I wrote you a letter in regard to that.

Senator McKELLAR. I will take the liberty of reading that letter into the record.

Senator CONNALLY. If it is agreeable to you.

Mr. GLENN. Yes, sir; I want it there.

Senator McKELLAR. This is dated April 20, 1939, addressed to Senator STEWART and myself, and reads as follows:

"DEAR SENATORS: Upon your recommendation of Mr. Elmer Davies for the Federal judgeship of the Middle District of Tennessee, I wired you as follows:

" 'Congratulations to you and Senator STEWART for your selection of Elmer Davies for United States district judge. Comment on the streets is that the selection gives entire satisfaction to one and all.'

"My attention is directed to a news article in which Mr. Noble, admittedly a member of the Klu Klux Klan and possibly a violator of his own oath to that organization, has filed an affidavit against Mr. Davies.

"As an Irishman and a Catholic I feel it is my duty to state that I have known Mr. Davies for many years. I met him under adverse circumstances. He was defending a Catholic (and his client stated to me his financial circumstances and further stated Mr. Davies defended him without compensation) while I was acting under court orders to show certain facts from records against his Catholic client, and for a period of more than 30 days straight running Mr. Davies fought like a tiger in defending his Catholic client and was successful in his undertaking, even though I am of the same opinion I was then that his client, who was a Catholic, was guilty.

"From that time on I admired Mr. Davies and became a very close personal friend of his, and have had the honor of being a guest on an extended trip by automobile with Mr. Davies, his wife and children through Louisiana.

"Many years ago Mr. Davies, knowing that I was a Catholic and knowing his client was a Catholic, stated to me in sum and substance that when he was a kid, I believe in Arcadia, La., they got him to join the Klan. Later he came to Vanderbilt University, and while a student there at Vanderbilt at Nashville, Tenn., he visited the Klan one time and he saw enough of it to satisfy himself, and, as he termed it, he was like many a good citizen whose name had been appended to the roster of the K. K. K., and when they found out about the organization they took out, or, in the famous language of Al Smith, 'They walked out or took a walk,' and never considered the organization enough to even tender a resignation.

"When Al Smith was a candidate for the Presidency, I think it is a matter of record that only one Congressman from the State of Tennessee, namely, our deceased personal friend, Joseph W. Byrns, made a speech for Al Smith, and Mr. Elmer Davies was one of the very few lawyers in Tennessee who made a speech for the candidacy of Al Smith. Mr. Elmer Davies was also very active in the election of Judge Gilbert, a Jewish citizen, to the criminal bench in Davidson County, Tenn. If he were a Klansman, as some would have you believe, how could he have stood up gallantly for 30 consecutive days without compensation and defended a Catholic client, and how could he have openly taken the stump for Al Smith, a Catholic candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and how could he have taken the stump and worked diligently to elect Judge Gilbert, a Jew, to the judgeship?

"Certainly those who are now filing affidavits against him showing his purported Klan activities knew of these matters years ago. It would be interesting if some of the lawyers of the Nashville Bar Association would advise you correctly if there were at any time any suits filed against these same people who are so anxious to attach their names to affidavits and what was the basis of such suits. I am sure it would be interesting reading matter.

"Personally, I hope that any insinuations or reflections on Mr. Davies' character will be entirely removed, and that his appointment will be made and confirmed immediately, which I am sure will meet with the entire satisfaction of all good citizens except those living in glass houses.

"Sincerely,

"JOHN S. GLENN."

STATEMENT OF H. R. YOUNG, ESQ., NASHVILLE, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. Your name is H. R. Young?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. You are a practicing lawyer at Nashville?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you been practicing law there?

Mr. YOUNG. Six or seven years.

Senator McKELLAR. Do you know Mr. Davies?

Mr. YOUNG. Very well.

Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, what kind of a United States district judge would he make?

Mr. YOUNG. I think he would make an excellent judge.

Senator McKELLAR. You think he has the judicial temperament and poise and ability?

Mr. YOUNG. I think he has all the qualifications necessary, and has the courage of his convictions.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF SAM R. HOWELL, ESQ., JOHNSON CITY, TENN.

Senator McKELLAR. State your name to the committee.

Mr. HOWELL. Sam R. Howell.

Senator McKELLAR. Where do you live?

Mr. HOWELL. Johnson City, Tenn.

Senator McKELLAR. How long have you lived there?

Mr. HOWELL. All my life.

Senator McKELLAR. Have you ever served in the Tennessee Senate?

Mr. HOWELL. In 1935.

Senator McKELLAR. When Mr. Davies was a member?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. Did you ever know Mr. Davies to be prejudiced against labor organizations?

Mr. HOWELL. I never did, but quite the contrary. He is a very fair man, free from antagonism of any kind. I remember that Senator Davies asked me to vote for the T. V. A. bills. I said, "I don't want to support all of these, because some are not T. V. A. bills."

Senator McKELLAR. You are referring now to the State planning bills?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. In your judgment, what kind of a United States district judge would he make?

Mr. HOWELL. Excellent. He is an excellent gentleman, well informed. In my opinion, he would make a splendid judge.

Senator McKELLAR. You were not asked to come here, were you?

Mr. HOWELL. No, sir. I was not asked to come. I was in the city, and heard about this, and thought I would come up.

Senator McKELLAR. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, every Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Tennessee, except Representative McReynolds, who is ill, is here, irrespective of politics, in order to testify in approval of this nomination. I want to name those gentlemen: Hon. Walter Chandler, Hon. Herron Pearson, Hon. Jere Cooper, Hon. Clarence W. Turner, Hon. Joseph W. Byrnes, Jr., Hon. Albert Gore, Hon. J. Will Taylor, Hon. B. Carroll Reece. They are all here except Representative McReynolds, who could not come, on account of illness. They are all here and ready to testify, if desired.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read to you a few of the telegrams and letters which have been received. The first is from the Governor of the State of Tennessee, dated at Nashville, July 5, 1939, addressed to me, reading as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5, 1939.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Will appreciate your doing all in your power to secure confirmation of Elmer Davies' appointment as United States district judge tomorrow.

PRENTICE COOPER.

The next one is from two justices of the Tennessee Court of Appeals, of which court Judge Phelps is a member. This telegram is dated at Nashville, July 5, 1939, addressed to me, and reads as follows:

"We desire to commend Elmer Davies as well qualified for district judge in character, legal ability, and temperament, and you may use this endorsement wherever you may desire.

"W. W. FAW,
"ARTHUR CROWNOVER,
"Tennessee Court of Appeals."

The next one is from Hugh C. Anderson, an associate judge of the Tennessee Court of Appeals, dated at Jackson, Tenn., July 6, 1939, addressed to Senator STEWART and myself, and reads as follows:

"I heartily endorse the appointment of Hon. Elmer Davies as United States district judge and urge his confirmation.

"HUGH C. ANDERSON,
"Associate Judge, Court of Appeals of Tennessee."

We have five members of the supreme court of our State. Here is a letter from three of them, including the chief justice. It is dated at Nashville, July 3, 1939, addressed to the Senate Judiciary Committee, and reads as follows:

"This is to say that we have known Mr. Elmer Davies of the Nashville bar for a number of years and cordially testify as to his high character and fine professional ability. He has ably represented his clients in the cases in which he has appeared in our court. He is a gentleman of poise and fine manner and we are satisfied he would adorn the Federal bench."

This is signed by Hon. Grafton Green, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee; Hon. Colin P. McKinney, associate justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee; and Hon. William L. Cook, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

Then we have two additional telegrams from the other members of the court. The first one is from Hon. Alexander W. Chambliss, dated at Chattanooga, July 6, 1939, addressed to me, as follows:

"I join my court associates in endorsing heartily Hon. Elmer Davies.

"ALEXANDER W. CHAMBLISS."

And here is another from Hon. D. W. Dehaven, an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, dated at Memphis, July 5, 1939, addressed to me, as follows:

"Heartily endorse Elmer Davies for United States judge middle Tennessee."

Protests were received including the resolution that was inserted in the record by Messrs. Denham and Seigenthaler, who appeared at the hearing, and from the following men and women: D. O. Skaggs, Memphis; Thomas J. Leech, Memphis; James Johnson, Nashville; M. L. Halmontaller, Nashville; Miss Griselda Kuhlman, Nashville; C. Vernon Hines, Nashville; Curry Drake, Nashville; John Garner, Nashville; J. E. Moyers, Nashville; Carl V. Vester, Nashville; Leonard P. Skeggs, Nashville; T. R. Cuthbert, Chattanooga; F. T. Carter, Chattanooga; G. F. Barnett, Nashville; W. L. Maraman, Nashville; and R. M. Walker, Nashville.

To all of these protestants I sent a copy of a letter similar to the letter to W. L. Maraman, which is as follows:

MAY 20, 1939.

Mr. W. L. MARAMAN,
Legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, Nashville, Tenn.

MY DEAR MR. MARAMAN: Your letter of May 16 has been received. It requires a frank answer.

Senator STEWART and I had many applicants who desired our recommendation for the vacant middle Tennessee judgeship. We considered them all, and after the most careful examination we asked the Department, in accordance with the usual custom, to investigate several applicants whom we were thinking of recommending.

The applicant whom you recommend and my friend was one of these, and both Senator STEWART and I had the very definite idea in our minds that if the Department reports, after investigation, were favorable to him that we would recommend him. However, when the reports came in, the Department advised us that it would not consider him whether we recommended him or not.

We followed the usual course in such cases. Judges are always investigated by the Department before the names of the applicants are cleared and sent in to the President. The Department refusing to clear the application of the gentlemen you recommended, it became necessary for us to recommend someone else. After again very carefully considering the matter, we had the Department investigate Mr. Elmer Davies and some others. The Department investigators found Mr. Davies to be all right, and we recommended him to the Attorney General and to the President.

Mr. Davies was not an applicant for the place and did not know that he had been recommended until after Senator STEWART and I had recommended him.

I quote from your letter:

"May we remind you by repeating we are determined to keep a continued and jealous watch as to the type of the individual, his views and background, when he seeks office or aspires to the Federal bench."

In turn, I wish to remind you that you cannot be more watchful or more jealous in the interest of the Government and the people in the matter of appointments to the Federal judiciary than I am.

I supported very heartily the President's proposal to reform the judiciary. I have supported the President very heartily in practically all of his proposals. In recommending Mr. Davies, I did not act in any way in conflict with a previous position concerning the President's proposal to reform the judiciary. I believed at the time we recommended Mr. Davies, and still believe, that his appointment would conform in every way to the President's views concerning Federal judicial appointments, and that Mr. Davies' appointment would be timely and proper and in every way satisfactory to all fair-minded and honest men. The charges against him have been investigated and have not been found true.

Incidentally, at this point, I wish to say that the investigators reported, after making an examination of Mr. Davies, that he was in every way worthy and satisfactory to the Department, and the Department so assured us.

Mr. Davies is not opposed to the principles you lay claim to, or to the principles which I lay claim to. You will find that he will be an honest, upright, straightforward, and liberal-minded judge if he is appointed and confirmed, and I believe he will be. He has all the elements which make a good judge, and I believe he should be appointed and confirmed. I cannot imagine why you or your organization should be opposed to Mr. Davies, unless somebody has misled you as to his character and views.

You say that Mr. Davies has declared himself against President Roosevelt. I cannot but wonder where you got your information. As you know, I am a devoted friend of President Roosevelt's, was one of his first openly announced supporters, my announcement having been made at a great gathering of Democrats in east Tennessee on September 28, 1931. Very few in our State were outspoken for him then. I am still his devoted friend. I was present at our Democratic headquarters in Nashville a great deal of the time in 1932 and 1936. Mr. Davies made speeches for Mr. Roosevelt in both campaigns. He was around the headquarters almost daily when he was not out speaking and was tremendously enthusiastic. There were the two occasions when support was effective, and Mr. Davies was present and active then. I do not speak from hearsay, but from what I saw and heard myself. For this additional reason, I am quite sure you gentlemen from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, for whom I have the highest respect and esteem, are misled as to Mr. Davies.

Of course, you know that I have uniformly stood with labor during my public life. I have done so because I honestly and conscientiously believe in the organization of labor for the purpose of protecting its rights. I am still of the same mind. If I had any idea that Mr. Davies was opposed to labor as an organization, you ought to know from my past record that I would not be for him. I am absolutely sure that you have been misinformed as to Mr. Davies' real attitude on matters of this kind.

You speak of having aided in defeating the Browning regime, and you did. My interest in defeating the Browning regime, among other things, was to aid the cause of labor, which I believe he violently opposed. In defeating Mr. Browning, I believe you were acting in your own best interest. Indeed, I know you were. It never occurred to me that it was a trading proposition of any kind, nature, or description. I certainly gave you and your organization credit for being conscientiously and honestly opposed to the policies and actions of Mr. Browning, just as I was.

Regretting that you and your organization have seen fit to take the attitude that you have, I am,

Very sincerely, your friend,

Mr. Chairman, I wish also to read into the record a letter I wrote to Mr. R. M. Walker, of Nashville, which is as follows:

JULY 5, 1939.

Mr. R. M. WALKER,
Mission Ridge Lodge No. 444, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Nashville, Tenn.

DEAR MR. WALKER: I have received the resolution adopted by your national organization.

I doubt if you could find the record of any Senator who has more regularly and actively supported organized labor than I have. I have done it because I have felt that labor was not being treated fairly, and I honestly believe all American citizens should be treated fairly. I have a natural sympathy that way and it has shown in practically all the votes I have cast on the subject of labor. I would not recommend a man for appointment as judge who I thought would be unfair to labor. I am absolutely certain that Mr. Davies has not been unfair to labor and is not now. I am not criticizing those who take a different view because I believe you are honestly misled concerning Mr. Davies. I have known him a long time, and I believe he has the same views I have and that every fair-minded man has toward labor. I believe he will make a splendid judge. There are a great many laboring people who feel just as I do about this.

The record shows that Mr. Davies voted for all true T. V. A. bills, but he did vote against bills brought forward by the State planning commission. One of these, I am informed, was abandoned by the planning commission itself. I am informed also that when the T. V. A. wanted legislation passed the planning commission seemed to think that was a good time to get their special legislation through. I understand that all but one of the planning-commission bills passed but few of them have been actually used.

A careful investigation of Mr. Davies' record has been made by the Department of Justice; a careful investigation was made by me before I recommended him, and I had a special investigation made as to his views on labor before I recommended him. You can, therefore, see that I did not act carelessly or thoughtlessly.

Of course, Mr. Davies was not responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment. I am sure you cannot believe that because you were in Nashville and know it was voted on first in the house, where it was defeated. It was not even introduced in the senate. In the next place, you also know that Governor Browning came out very vigorously against it. He had at that time much power with the legislature and it was almost entirely his influence which defeated the measure in the house.

As you know, the child-labor amendment has been my hobby since I first came to the House of Representatives in 1911. I voted for it every time it came up, and it came up many times. President Taft vetoed it, as I recall, and I voted to pass it over his veto but we did not have enough votes. I voted for it again when Mr. Wilson was President—it was passed, and President Wilson vetoed it. Although I am a strong Democrat, as you know, I voted to pass the bill over President Wilson's veto. In season and out of season I have been for this legislation, and it was the source of the greatest disappointment to me that the legislature did not ratify the bill. I hope it will yet do so.

You speak of Mr. Davies having denounced Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Davies says he never did such a thing in his life. In addition, to this, to my certain knowledge, Mr. Davies supported Mr. Roosevelt vigorously and actively, both in 1932 and 1936. He was at our headquarters in Nashville almost every day, except when he was out speaking for the ticket.

Your statement about Mr. Davies being a lobbyist is wholly incorrect. You have not gone into the matter carefully. As a matter of fact, some public-service corporations offered him a very substantial fee to aid them in some measures they had before the legislature, and he turned the offer down. He declined to represent them. I am afraid someone having a selfish interest in the matter has misled some of you gentlemen in the labor organization, and I say this in friendship and not in criticism.

I am quite sure Mr. Davies will be confirmed by the Senate, that he will make a splendid judge, and will be entirely fair to labor. I write as the friend of labor and my record in both the House and the Senate shows my uniform friendship for labor.

Very sincerely yours,

———— ————.

Mr. Chairman, you will no doubt remember a letter I read into the record a while ago from R. H. Brazzell to Mr. Hugh Bonham, setting out a number of senate bills and stating Mr. Davies' attitude on them. This is a letter from Mr. Bonham, addressed to me under date of June 15, 1939, stating how that letter came to be written, and elaborating somewhat upon the testimony he has given before the committee:

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 15, 1939.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you know, I was for many years a locomotive engineer and was employed as such by numerous railroads. I later quit running engines and accepted employment in another line of work, in which I received an accidental injury that has incapacitated me from any active work.

During the years that I was a locomotive engineer I was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and am still a member of that organization. I have always been interested in labor matters and always will be.

I have known Elmer Davies since he began the practice of law at Nashville; that is, throughout his professional life. When you and Senator STEWART united in recommending him for the Federal district judgeship for middle Tennessee I was very much gratified, and I promptly so advised you. I have never known of any suggested appointment to any Federal office that has been more universally acclaimed as a fine appointment by our citizens of all classes, and I was mighty glad to learn that hundreds of lawyers and citizens throughout the middle district of Tennessee had written to both you and Senator STEWART warmly commending your recommendation of Mr. Davies for the vacant district judgeship.

I was surprised and felt outraged when I learned that there were a few persons whose selfish interests I had no trouble in understanding were protesting Mr. Davies' appointment and were even charging when he served in our State senate in the 1935 and 1937 legislatures that he had not been friendly to labor, and were even charging that he had been opposed to T. V. A. and the humane and enlightened policies of President Roosevelt. Of course, you and Senator STEWART know, as I know, that there is no higher type man or Democrat in Tennessee than Mr. Davies, nor anyone who has been any more a warm or consistent supporter of President Roosevelt in the past.

I read in one of our local Nashville newspapers that the charge was being made that Mr. Davies, as a State senator in the 1935 legislature, had been opposed to labor legislation; and knowing that Mr. R. H. Brazzell at that time held a position as clerk in the Labor Department of Tennessee, and also knowing that he was the active legislative representative, at that time, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, I sought a talk with Mr. Brazzell, and found out from him that Senator Davies, as a member of that State senate, had supported and voted for the program of organized labor, as I felt sure would be the case. After my talk with Mr. Brazzell I requested that he write me a letter, over his signature, telling me these facts, so as to "nail" the false charge that had been made against Mr. Davies. Mr. Brazzell complied with my request, and I am herewith enclosing you the original letter that he wrote me under date of June 9:

"From the beginning I have been a warm supporter and admirer of President Roosevelt, just as you have been; and I am proud of the honor that I have a personal acquaintance with President Roosevelt, and have visited with him at both Warm Springs and at the White House; and, of course, I was familiar with the fact that you have always felt the same way about the President and were among the first, if not the first, public man in Tennessee who spoke out and advocated his election as President for his first term, and all Democrats in Tennessee know that this is your history; and the fact that you and Senator Stewart would agree on recommending Mr. Davies for this judicial appointment is sufficient, I think, in itself to answer all the false charges that have been made against that fine man."

With my very best wishes, I am,

Sincerely your friend,

HUGH BONHAM.

Senator MCKELLAR. I will not read all of these telegrams and letters. I do not think it is necessary; but I want to put them in the record. There are telegrams and letters from nearly all the lawyers in the various districts in middle Tennessee; not all but most of them. Some of them are from the opposition. I want to be fair to them, and ask that their letters and telegrams be placed in the record.

Senator CONNALLY. They will be admitted to the record.

(The various telegrams and letters referred to by Senator MCKELLAR are here printed in full, as follows:)

SENATE CHAMBER, STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Nashville, April 6, 1939.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Having heretofore wired you relative to my personal reaction concerning your recommendation of Elmer Davies for Federal judge, I now desire to advise you of the general reaction concerning this appointment. Since this announcement was made public I have seen in Nashville many of the political leaders throughout middle Tennessee, who have been here seeking jobs for their various friends, and I have not heard one single dissenting vote in this matter. I have seen prominent lawyers from practically every county seat in middle Tennessee, and they are unanimous in their praise of you for naming Mr. Davies to the judgeship. The average man's reaction to the appointment is that you have named an able lawyer, who has been thoroughly honest in his dealings, both public and private, and in addition that he is a "regular guy."

Truly I do not believe that there is a single individual in middle Tennessee who could have been named to this high position who would have brought more favorable reaction and caused more people to sing the praise of Senator MCKELLAR.

I was never so pleased about a political appointment in all of my life, and thousands of others feel the same as I about it. Again, may I congratulate you on this selection.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

B. B. GULLETT, Chief Clerk.

COLUMBIA, TENN., April 5, 1939.

Senators K. D. MCKELLAR and TOM STEWART,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATORS: It has come to our attention that some protest has been filed by George Cate, a member of the Nashville bar, as to the appointment of Elmer Davies to the Federal bench for the middle district of Tennessee.

Although this bar had two applicants for this appointment and we were somewhat disappointed that neither were selected, we do wish to be put on record as now endorsing Mr. Davies and condemning the objections filed by Mr. Cate. Of course, I am not attempting to speak for the entire bar of Columbia, but I have discussed this with quite a few members of the bar, and I am expressing the sentiments of those with whom I have discussed the matter.

I have known Mr. Davies for a number of years and think he is of the highest type citizen, as well as lawyer, and I think I owe it to one of his type and standing to condemn an unwarranted protest filed against him.

Yours very truly,

HUGH T. SHELTON.

SPARTA, TENN., April 6, 1939.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR,

DEAR SENATOR: Since you were not in position to recommend the appointment of Judge Pat Officer, you could not have pleased us better than the selection of Elmer Davies for the Federal judgeship. He is a "man after my own heart". I am personally very fond of Elmer. He is able, capable, and courageous, and I feel sure will measure up to the responsibilities of the office and that you will find no reason to regret your action.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely your friend,

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: I have been out of the city and this is my first opportunity to write you, expressing my commendation of the designation by you and Senator STEWART of Judge Darr and Mr. Davies for Federal judgeships in Tennessee.

I know both of these gentlemen well and feel sure that you have done the public a service in recommending them.

Yours sincerely,

WM. H. SWIGGART.

CUMMINGS & MELTON,
WOODBURY, TENN., April 5, 1939.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I wish to say to you that I am very much pleased and our people generally are satisfied with the recommendations which you and Senator STEWART have made for the filling of the two vacancies in Federal judgeships in Tennessee.

Senator Davies and I served together in the Tennessee General Assembly both in 1935 and 1937, and I have practiced in the court of Judge Darr. Both are lawyers of outstanding ability and men of the very finest type.

We of this county wanted Judge Officer to succeed Judge Gore, but appreciated the fact that you and Senator STEWART had many things to consider in the matter.

I see in the papers that some protest has been made against Senator Davies on account of his Tennessee legislative record relative to New Deal legislation. As you know, I was a Roosevelt man and voted for his nomination at Chicago. There is nothing in the record of Senator Davies even remotely justifying a challenge of his devotion to duty, integrity, or ability. His open fighting and ability made him a leader in his own right. Should these protests against his nomination and appointment be taken seriously I should welcome the opportunity to speak whereof I know in his behalf as a lawyer and as a man, and particularly as a legislator, recommending him for the duties and responsibilities of this high judicial office.

Yours very truly,

JAMES H. CUMMINGS.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: My friend, Mr. A. L. Dorsey, of Springfield has sent me a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by the quarterly court of Robertson County on Monday, Apri 13, 1939, approving the recommendation of Elmer D. Davies for United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and I am enclosing a copy of this resolution herewith.

With kindest regards, I am,

QUARTERLY COUNTY COURT,
Robertson County, Tenn., April 3, 1939.

Resolution regarding Hon. Elmer D. Davies

Be it Resolved by the County Court of Robertson County, Tenn., in quarterly session assembled at Springfield on the first Monday in April 1939, That we approve the selection of the Honorable Elmer D. Davies for the position of judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee, and most respectfully petition that he be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate.

Mr. Davies is an outstanding citizen and lawyer who has a wide range of experience in the affairs of the public, including his work as a legislator in the General Assembly of Tennessee, and his integrity is unimpeachable.

Passed:

----------:
County Court Clerk.

Approved:

----------:
Judge.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is with a great deal of pleasure I notice you have recommended Mr. Elmer Davies for appointment as Federal judge for the middle district of Tennessee. I think you are to be congratulated upon this selection, and I earnestly hope the appointment will be approved by the Senate.

Very sincerely yours,

C. F. STITH.

LEVINE & LEVINE, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Nashville, Tenn., April 1, 1939.

In re appointment of Elmer Davies.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Senator from Tennessee, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read in the papers that a protest has been made against the confirmation of the Honorable Elmer Davies for the Federal judgeship in Nashville, and that the same has been presented to you.

Unsolicited by and unknown to Mr. Davies, I am writing this letter.

I did not support Mr. Davies in his candidacy (if such could be termed any activities prior to his recommendation). In fact, I affirmatively endorsed another applicant. On the other hand, the appointment of Mr. Davies reacted upon myself, and upon other members of the bar to whom I have spoken, as being a splendid choice, and I do not think any protest should be made, or could be made with any reason, in regard to his capacity, his ability, and his absolute fitness.

Elmer Davies is one of the finest gentlemen I have ever known and one of the most capable lawyers—he will grace the bench with dignity and poise. There is no reason for any objection from a judicial standpoint and I see no reason why this man should not be confirmed. I sincerely trust that he will not be embarrassed by any proceedings, however futile, attempting to keep him from assuming his position on the bench, where he is needed and where the bar of Nashville, regardless of whether they were for him or not for him, will be happy to have their affairs in this court presided over by such a capable gentleman.

Respectfully yours,

ALFRED T. LEVINE.

JACOBS H. DOYLE, ATTORNEY AT LAW,
306 Exchange Building, Nashville, Tenn., June 14, 1939.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a copy of a letter that I have today written to the Honorable Frank Murphy, urging the appointment of Mr. Elmer Davies of the Nashville bar.

You and Senator STEWART could make no better appointment than that of Senator Elmer D. Davies. I certainly hope that you will be able to see that appointment through. Mr. Davies, when appointed and confirmed by the Senate, will never be a discredit and will stand out as a living example of the kind and caliber of men that you recommend to fill such important offices.

With every good wish, I remain,

Yours truly,

JACOBS H. DOYLE.

JUNE 14, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The two distinguished Senators of Tennessee, MCKELLAR and STEWART, nominated Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of the Nashville bar, for Federal judge to fill the vacancy which now exists in the middle district of Tennessee as a result of the death of Judge John J. Gore.

I have heard a rumor to the effect that the hitch in Mr. Davies' appointment going through is that he is believed to be a member of the Ku Klux Klan. In order that you might know my stand on the Ku Klux Klan, may I inform you that I am a member of the Roman Catholic Church and attend the parish of the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Nashville, a member of the Altar Society of that parish, a member of the Knights of Columbus, Council No. 544 at Nashville, and a former officer of the Nashville Council. I have known Mr. Davies for many years and I know that he is anything but a member of the Ku Klux Klan. In 1928, when the Democrats had as their standard bearer Mr. Alfred Smith as President and when the anti-Catholics were very bitter against Alfred Smith, Mr. Davies stumped this territory for Mr. Smith and his speeches were on tolerance. He and I served on several committees of the local and State Democratic committee for the election of a Democratic President. He was also on the finance committee and he, personally, raised $1,200 for that campaign fund. Mr. Davies and I were delegates, along with others, to the State convention to select delegates to the national convention to choose a Democratic President. Mr. Davies, at that time, was a supporter of Mr. Alfred Smith. He tried to get the State convention to go on record as pledging its unanimous support to Mr. Smith. However, the convention pledged its delegation to support the Honorable Cordell Hull and, in the alternative, to support Mr. Smith which was the result of the efforts of Mr. Davies in the convention along with that of others.

I know these facts because I was a member of that convention. Mr. Davies and I also attended the conventions for the selection of Democratic nominees in 1932 and 1936 in which we supported the Honorable Franklin D. Doosevelt for President of the United States.

I have been informed that several persons, whose names have been referred to me, have been sending letters or affidavits to the effect that Mr. Davies is a member of the Ku Klux Klan and I know that these informants whose names I have are members of that order themselves, or at least that their beliefs lean in that direction and, if they regard Mr. Davies as a bad Ku Klux, in my opinion, that recommends him as a good citizen, because the Ku Klux doesn't want him.

I have been informed that, when Mr. Davies was going to high school in a rural district, a crowd of boys suggested joining the Ku Klux Klan and that he, like the rest of the boys, followed the leader and joined and attended several meetings, and dropped out. At about the same age, I joined the Knights of Columbus. I have retained my membership in the Knights of Columbus, but Mr. Davies repudiated his membership in the Ku Klux Klan after he had attended maybe a couple of meetings which indicates his disapproval of that order. The manner in which he has conducted himself since the time he began practicing law until now proves conclusively to me that he is anything but a Ku Klux.

Mr. Davies does not know that I am writing this letter, but I am writing to inform you of my opinion of Mr. Davies because I know he would make a good judge. He is a reputable citizen and he is anything but a Ku Klux and I would certainly hate to see that alleged obstacle stand in his way and have the appointment go to some other person who would be friendly to the Ku Klux Klan.

Respectfully,

JACOBS H. DOYLE.

OFFICE OF THE STATE ADMINISTRATOR,
Nashville, Tenn., June 19, 1939.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: I want to congratulate you on putting over Elmer Davies. It was a splendid selection and he will make a fine judge.

A most unjust fight was made upon him, and a fight that was cleverly managed, but I felt confident all along that the administration would have to go along with you in the matter.

Sincerely your friend,

HARRY S. BERRY,
State Administrator.

TENNESSEE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I want to offer my congratulations upon the wonderful and untiring work you have done in the fight for Hon. Elmer Davies here in Tennessee. I have watched you very closely from the day that you suggested his name, and I have said all along that we will have to stick to the guns and have him nominated regardless of time and cost.

This is a great victory for you and our party here in Tennessee. I feel now like we are more on our way to victory in 1940.

Again congratulating you, I am,

Your friend,

JOHN W. HARTON.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As one of your friends I am much gratified that the President has followed your recommendation and sent to the Senate the name of Hon. Elmer Davies for the position of United States district judge.

You are to be commended for your steadfast and persistent effort in this matter, and it reveals your loyal, energetic nature in every matter you undertake. I read your estimate of Mr. Davies, published in the Nashville paper, and I think it is quite appropriate. I have no doubt that Mr. Davies will fill the position with honor and credit, and that he will be known as a just judge, giving justice to all alike without regard to race, creed, religion, class, or group, and that he will interpret the Constitution in a spirit of true liberalism.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely your friend,

J. M. GARDENHIRE.

P. S.: I have not had any intimation as to what shake-up there may be under the reorganization bill. Presumably, Mr. Jesse Jones will be the head of the lending agency. Naturally, I am hoping that your friends will not be disturbed, and I am sure that you are on the watchtower.

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. THOMASON: You will doubtless remember me as district manager of the Texas Co. at El Paso, Tex. when you ran for mayor of that city. Your law partners, Tom Lee and Gene Edwards, were very close personal friends of mine, and, as you doubtless remember, I heartily supported you in this race against Charlie Davis.

My object in writing you this letter is in the interest of my long-time personal friend, Elmer D. Davies, who has been nominated by Senators MCKELLAR and STEWART for Federal district judge of the middle district of Tennessee. I have known Mr. Davies many years. He is a straightforward, honest gentleman; is a lifelong Democrat, having supported Gov. Al Smith in 1928, and was very active in the campaigns for President Roosevelt in 1932 and 1936.

On June 7 the Tennessee Federation of Labor met here in Nashville and some of the members, through the instigation of former State Senator George H. Cate, introduced a resolution in the Tennessee Federation of Labor condemning Mr. Davies' record while he was a member of the Tennessee Senate with George H. Cate on his labor record. This resolution was turned over to the resolutions committee, and I personally appeared before the resolutions committee and, as a result of our discussion, the resolutions committee recommended to the federation meeting that this matter be turned over to the nonpartisan committee of the labor organizations, which included the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Order of Railway Telegraphers, and the Order of Railway Conductors. After the convention was over the nonpartisan committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor had their meeting and did not call in a single one of the committeemen of the railroad brotherhoods, and the resolution which was sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee does not represent, by any manner of means, the labor vote in this State.

Former Senator George H. Cate served in the senate with Senator Davies in 1935 and was afterward commissioner of institutions in this State under former Governor Browning, who engineered a county-unit bill through the house and senate, which Senator Davies did not support and which former Senator Cate did support, with the result that in last year's election Governor Browning and his entire cabinet, including former Senator Cate, were repudiated at the polls and the county-unit bill was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court of this State. This is the first time in history that a Democratic Governor only served one 2-year term as Governor of this State. This whole controversy is being fostered by former Senator Cate against Mr. Davies through personal and political jealousy.

I myself raised the question in the resolutions committee as to whether the committee had the authority to endorse or condemn a candidate for any office without the approval of the entire nonpartisan committee, and I was backed up by the resolutions committee.

Mr. Cate has never been a friend of Senator MCKELLAR or of President Roosevelt, and is only speaking for a small faction, including a small minority of the labor group in this State that is trying to condemn Mr. Davies.

My object in writing you is that I would appreciate it very much if you will speak to Senator TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, and Senator SHEPPARD, if he is on the Judiciary Committee, regarding this matter, and I feel that I am not taking any liberty in writing you, as I first went to Long View, Tex., in August 1907 as a locomotive engineer on the Texas & Pacific Railroad, between Long View and Fort Worth and between Long View and Texarkana, and, while I have not railroaded since May 1, 1918, I am still a member in good standing of Division No. 473, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and I certainly do not like to see a good, honest, true Democrat crucified on a cross of lies.

I would indeed appreciate it very much if you will show this letter to Senators CONNALLY and SHEPPARD and explain to them that my purpose in writing is to see that an honest and true Democrat is not mistreated.

With my very kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HUGH BONHAM,
1106 Gale Lane, Nashville, Tenn.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I just want to tell you that, in my opinion, you have appointed one of the best men available for the local Federal judgeship when you appointed Elmer Davies.

I have known Elmer since 1922, and I know that he is intelligent, capable, and honest, and I want to congratulate you on your firmness in appointing a man that I consider really an excellent man.

Yours very truly,

DAVID L. MCQUIDDY.

JUNE 8, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
United States Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: As a member of the Roman Catholic Church, I am taking the liberty of voicing my protest of the recent attempt from certain sources to reflect upon the character of Mr. Elmer Davies, of this city, who is now being considered for the appointment of Federal judge in this district.

I might say that anyone that knows me knows that I am rather prominent in the affairs of my local church and that I am a Roman Catholic. Mr. Davies has been my personal friend for many years, and has favored me with all his personal business, and extended me other favors, and the question of my religious beliefs has never entered into our relations. I know Mr. Davies so well that I consider it a rank injustice that an attempt has been made to injure his chance of confirmation by charging that he was at any time a member of the Ku Klux Klan. Mr. Davies has very frankly, at my request, explained his connection with the Ku Klux Klan, and he is so straightforward and honest in his statements on this issue as he is on all matters that his explanation of his connection with this society as a youth would not be doubted by anyone with any sense of fairness. Those who brought these charges against him know the full facts yet were willing to stoop so low as to turn it into a political weapon against him.

One of the first comments that I had to make upon learning of the nomination of Mr. Davies for this judgeship was my expression of confidence in his ability and broad sense of justice. I fully agree with the leading members of the bar in this community that he is a man who will lend dignity to this office; and to one who is not a politician and who has no ax to grind, there can be no question in my mind as to his toleration and eminent fairness and justice to all that might come before him.

This letter is entirely voluntary upon my part, was not even suggested by Mr. Davies, and without his knowledge.

Very respectfully yours,

HAYES H. HARTNETT.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 13, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
United States Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am a member of the Davidson County Democratic Executive Committee and for a number of years served as secretary of this committee. I was secretary of the committee during the Al Smith campaign.

I do not know of anyone in Davidson County who was a more loyal supporter of Al Smith than Elmer D. Davies. He not only took the stump in favor of Al Smith but worked many days at the headquarters and did everything within his power to help elect Governor Smith to the Presidency.

In a county election involving a criminal judgeship that was a contest between Charles Gilbert, who is a Jew, and W. S. Noble, who was an active klansman, Elmer D. Davies actively supported Judge Gilbert and materially assisted in his election.

I know few men who are freer from religious or racial prejudice than Elmer D. Davies. In addition thereto, he is a man of character and ability and has a fine legal training and experience.

I know he actively supported President Roosevelt and actively participated in the campaign for his election and reelection. During the last campaign I was candidate for Presidential elector and his work for President Roosevelt came under my observation.

Very respectfully,

ELKIN GARFINKLE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 17, 1939.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We notice the President has recommended Leslie Darr for the Federal bench in Tennessee. We think that in justice he should also have recommended Elmer Davies for the middle district of Tennessee.

There is no man who has been suggested thus far for this position who approximates its qualifications so nearly as the gentleman recommended by the Senators from Tennessee.

We trust that you will reexamine his qualifications and insist upon his appointment to this post. We make this recommendation in the public interest. We believe that there is no name backed by as much popular approval and public good will as the name of Elmer Davies.

Sincerely yours,

WHITWORTH STOKES,
JAMES C. R. MCCALL, JR.

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 17, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We notice there is some delay in the appointment of Elmer Davies to the bench for the middle district of Tennessee. It is difficult to understand this attitude because we know of no valid objection to Mr. Davies.

The recommendation of Mr. Davies for this position caused nearly universal approval in middle Tennessee among the people generally and members of the bar particularly. The situation in middle Tennessee demands the service of a judge as soon as possible. It also calls for a youthful judge because of the necessity of traveling.

No person has been mentioned for this position who is as well qualified for it as Mr. Davies. So, in the interest of Tennessee, we urge a speedy and favorable report by your Department to the President.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES C. R. MCCALL, JR.

THIRD NATIONAL BANK,
Nashville, Tenn., April 14, 1939.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: Several weeks ago I wrote you in the interest of Hon. Lee Douglas, who is an aspirant for appointment to the Federal judgeship of middle Tennessee district. Since then it has been announced through the papers, and has been considerably discussed locally, that you, together with Senator STEWART, had recommended Hon. Elmer D. Davies for the position of Federal judge, to succeed the late Judge Gore.

Following your and Senator STEWART'S decision to recommend Davies, there has been a handful of small people who are conducting somewhat of a whispering campaign against Mr. Davies, and I am writing this letter to urge upon you not to change your recommendation, but to stand firmly upon it, because I sincerely believe—as do many others in this section—that his appointment to the bench would give more general satisfaction among all factions than any appointment which has thus far been suggested.

You unquestionably know that Davies has been an ardent Democratic supporter throughout his residence in Tennessee. He is impartial, charitable, and tolerant, and possesses great ability. He also possesses poise and dignity, and I am confident that he would so conduct the affairs of the Federal court that great respect would be maintained therefor.

With kindest regards, I am

Very truly yours,

F. M. FARRIS.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There seems to be considerable discussion in our local papers relative to exceptions which have been made to your recommendation of Elmer Davies for United States district judge here.

I wanted to say to you that I have discussed this matter with quite a number of attorneys here, and am frank to say to you that a survey of the bar here will disclose that the bar generally is well pleased with your choice.

I have no personal interest in this matter; nor do I have any "crows to pick" nor "nest to feather."

Yours very truly,

ALFRED W. TAYLOR.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
July 1, 1939.

Senator TOM CONNALLY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to impart to you a statement made by Judge W. L. Cook, of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, several months ago, at the time Senator KENNETH D. MCKELLAR recommended the Honorable Elmer Davies for appointment as United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee.

Judge Cook was in conversation with several gentlemen while attending court at Jackson, Tenn., and he stated, in substance, that he thought Senator MCKELLAR had made a very wise endorsement, and he considered Mr. Davies a splendid lawyer, thoroughly qualified, energetic, and a man of the very highest integrity.

Inasmuch as there has been a protest filed before your committee against Mr. Davies, I wanted to impart this statement of Judge Cook, who I consider one of the outstanding jurists in the United States. He has for many years occupied the place of associate justice of our supreme court. Before his appointment he was an outstanding circuit judge, and before that a successful practitioner at the bar of Tennessee.

I have only been connected with the attorney general's office of Tennessee for the past 3 months. Before that time I was an assistant United States attorney for the eastern district of Tennessee. I do not know Mr. Davies personally. I have met him and have a great many friends who are interested in his appointment to the Federal judiciary. Mr. Davies knows nothing of this letter and it is entirely unsolicited by any of his friends.

Very sincerely yours,

ERNEST F. SMITH.

JUNE 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have known Hon. Elmer D. Davies, who has been suggested to the President by our two Senators for Federal judge of the middle district of Tennessee, for many years, and I consider him an able lawyer and a high-class gentleman. However, I am taking the liberty of writing you this letter because of one particular objection to his selection that I understood had been made by a few persons, viz, that he is narrow and illiberal in his religious views and is in sympathy with the Ku Klux Klan, etc.

I am a member of the Catholic Church; was grand knight of the Nashville Council of Knights of Columbus for 2 years, 1935 to 1937, was district deputy for the middle district of Tennessee for 1 year, 1938, and was quite active in the 1928 Presidential campaign, when the flames of religious prejudice were aroused in Tennessee and elsewhere, with great effect, as you know. The result was that many of those in this vicinity in political life or having political ambitions were either silent or in instances evidently quietly and unobtrusively opposed to Governor Smith because he was a Catholic. Mr. Davies was one of the few here who took the stump for Governor Smith, both in this and adjoining counties. He has always evidenced a liberal attitude and has given no indications of any prejudice against Catholics or others because of their religion. Indeed, I know that some Methodist preachers were so active in their opposition to Governor Smith in 1928, wholly or partially on account of his religion, that Mr. Davies, although a Methodist, was so outraged that for some time he refrained from attending his church.

He may or may not many years ago, when a youth in school or college, have joined the Ku Klux Klan, just as many young men join other organizations without thinking. But I am sure that since he became active as a lawyer in Nashville, which must have been some 18 years ago, at least, not only has there been no participation on his part in such activities and views, but quite the reverse.

Feeling that the few persons who have raised this objection to the selection of Mr. Davies as judge were, to say the least, misinformed, and feeling that I know the facts I thought in justice to Mr. Davies, the people of this district and Catholics in general I should write this letter. Indeed, I feel that I know the Catholics in Nashville as well as anyone else and can safely state that the great majority of them in this city who take any interest at all in such matters would be delighted in having Mr. Davies appointed and have the utmost confidence and faith in him. I further come in contact with the public generally in different ways and particularly in the practice of law and as an assistant State attorney general for the tenth judicial district, and what I have said above, I believe also meets the views, ideas, and feelings of the preponderant majority of the people here.

Respectfully yours,

H. FRANK TAYLOR.

JUNE 10, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Under date of April 20, 1939, a letter was addressed to Senators MCKELLAR and STEWART relative to Mr. Elmer Davies for the Federal judgeship for the middle district of Tennessee, the letter being signed by John S. Glenn, of Nashville, Tenn., a copy of which is attached hereto. In this letter he refers to Mr. Elmer Davies defending a Catholic without compensation and that for a period of more than 30 days Mr. Davies fought like a tiger in defending his client without compensation and was successful in his undertaking.

I am the Catholic client referred to in that letter. I wish to state it was considerably more than 30 days that Mr. Davies defended me without compensation and at the time he was defending me he knew I was a Catholic, that Mr. Glenn, who was working under court instructions, was a Catholic, and was bitterly opposing me to almost persecution and if it had not been for the loyal and legal talent of Mr. Elmer Davies, who is a non-Catholic and who was defending me without compensation and was successful in his efforts, I may have found myself in a bad fix.

I read an article in the papers recently making mention of Mr. Elmer Davies being a member of the Ku Klux Klan. Whether he was at one time when he was a kid or a Vanderbilt student I am not advised, but I hardly think he would have stood up and defended me without compensation knowing I was a Catholic if he was a Klansman, as some would have you believe.

I agree with Mr. Glenn's letter with the exception of the statement on the first page in which Mr. Glenn states "even though he was of the same opinion that I (the Catholic client) was still guilty," I heartily endorse and hope and pray that the appointment of Mr. Elmer Davies will be made.

Further, I wish to state that I personally know Mr. Davies made speeches for Al Smith for President of the United States as I, a Catholic, went on many occasions with Mr. Davies while he was making speeches. Mr. Davies was one of the few lawyers in Nashville who made speeches for Al Smith, a Catholic.

This letter is being forwarded to you without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Davies.

Sincerely yours,

C. E. WEIS,
128 Eighth Avenue N., Nashville, Tenn.

Affidavit of B. B. Gullett

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Davidson, ss:

Personally appeared before me, Rachel Ogilvie, a notary public in and for said State and county, duly commissioned and acting, B. B. Gullett, who makes oath as follows:

I have just read an item in the Nashville Tennessean, published on June 12, 1939, purporting to be a letter written by the nonpartisan committee of the Tennessee State Federation of Labor, protesting against the appointment of Elmer D. Davies to the United States district judgeship for the middle district of Tennessee, wherein it is stated that as a member of the State senate, Mr. Davies opposed ratification of the child-labor amendment, and as chairman of the senate rules committee was largely instrumental in preventing a vote on the amendment.

I am also advised that the resolution adopted by said nonpartisan committee, forwarded with said protest, also states that it was Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, who primarily was responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote.

I held the office of assistant clerk of the senate of the Tennessee State Legislature in 1935, at which session Mr. Davies was chairman of the senate rules committee; he was not chairman of this senate committee in the Tennessee Legislature for 1937, although he was a member of that body.

I have made a personal search of the official journal of the State Senate for the years 1935 and 1937, and any statement to the effect that Mr. Davies as chairman of the senate rules committee was primarily responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote, or that as chairman of said committee he was largely instrumental in preventing a vote on the amendment is absolutely false and without any foundation in fact.

In the 1935 session of the Tennessee Legislature, the resolution proposing ratification of the child-labor amendment originated in the house of representatives, as house joint resolution No. 10; the adoption of this resolution was defeated in the house of representatives on January 30, 1935, by a vote of 24 for adoption and 72 against adoption, and thereupon, on proper motion the resolution was rejected; the proceedings in this respect will be found on pages 274 and 275, official published house journal of 1935. The resolution having been defeated in the house was never transmitted to the senate and the senate journal for the year 1935 shows that said resolution was never introduced or voted on in the senate, and consequently was never referred to the rules committee of which Mr. Davies was chairman.

I have also made a search of the committee references on bills and resolutions and find that during the session of 1935, when Mr. Davies acted as chairman of the rules committee, there were no resolutions or bills referred to said committee.

In the session of 1937, the resolution proposing ratification of the child-labor amendment, originated in the house, as house joint resolution No. 21, and on May 7, 1937, a vote was taken on the adoption of the resolution with 34 votes for adoption, and 58 against adoption, and subsequently upon proper motion, the resolution was rejected by the same vote, and having been rejected by the house, was never transmitted to the senate.

Proceedings relative to the rejection of said resolution by the house may be found on pages 1160 and 1161 of the official published house journal for 1937.

I have also examined the senate journal for the year 1937, and I find that there was no resolution introduced in the Senate that year for the adoption of the child-labor amendment and none was ever voted on by the senate in 1937.

TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 3, 1939.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Mr. T. O. Denham, of Nashville, Tenn., legislative representative of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, is hereby authorized to represent the Tennessee Federation of Labor in all hearings pertaining to the appointment of Mr. Elmer Davies to the Federal judgeship for middle Tennessee.

GERALD FOLEY,
President, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

BROTHERHOOD LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN, CANEY FORK LODGE, No. 837, TENNESSEE CENTRAL RAILWAY, Nashville, Tenn.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We, the legislative representatives of the two Railroad Brotherhoods, wish to register protest to the appointment of Elmer Davies to succeed Judge Gore to the middle Tennessee district Federal judgeship. We are of the opinion he would be totally unfit to occupy a seat on the Federal bench. We base this opinion upon his public record. This record and other data has been placed in your hands for consideration. To state it as a simple proposition we know that he is a person who is reactionary in his views, rabid anti-New Deal; acting as a paid lobbyist for corporations during the last session of legislature and on numerous occasions has expressed himself publicly in rather forceable language against reform legislation and referring to the President in an uncouth and profane manner. May we remind you by repeating, "we are determined to keep a continual and zealous watch as to the type of individual, his views and backgrounds when he seeks office or aspires to Federal bench." In the past very little attention has been paid to the remote consequence of bias and unfair judges. We have seen the results of unjust decisions of such judges wherein our boasted declaration of freedom was rejected utterly and without precedent or parallel insofar as the law is concerned.

We are very much disturbed over this appointment for it is in direct conflict with a previous position stated in your letter in reference to the President's proposal to reform the judiciary, you stated, "You would support the President because you believed it to be timely, constitutional, and most necessary." We wish to direct your attention to the fact that in the past we have supported you and were largely instrumental in the removal of Senator BERRY from the picture, helped to defeat the Browning regime, and put TOM STEWART in the United States Senate. In turn, we are requesting we be paid in like coin and urge that you select a person who is not opposed to the principles which we both lay claims to. We wish to reaffirm our endorsement and support which we gave to our first choice, Mr. Jay G. Stephenson. We are not retreating from this position.

We would like to know why it is that he did not get the appointment? We would also like to know if he is out of the picture. These two questions are not unfair and we believe you will agree they are worthy of an answer.

If conditions be such that Mr. Stephenson cannot be appointed, the only avenue of redress left open to us would be to submit other persons. The following gentlemen would be acceptable—Mr. Edward Walsh, Mr. J. G. Lackey, Mr. Houston Roberts, Mr. Thomas A. Shriver. In submitting these names for your consideration we are prompted solely by a desire to serve and place upon the Federal bench men whom we know will be found unbiased.

Sincerely yours,

W. L. MARAMAN,
Legislative Representative, Brotherhood Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

W. W. FIDLER,
Legislative Representative, Brotherhood Local Enginemen.

Senator MCKELLAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, if you would like to hear Mr. Davies, he is present.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you want him to appear?

Senator MCKELLAR. I do not care to ask him anything. You may ask him such questions as you wish.

Senator CONNALLY. You have been conducting the examination. You may go ahead with it, if you care to.

Senator MCKELLAR. I believe, as I have been instrumental in securing his nomination by the President, I will let you ask such questions as you desire.

STATEMENT OF HON. ELMER D. DAVIES, THE NOMINEE HEREIN

Senator CONNALLY. State your name, residence, and age.

Mr. DAVIES. Elmer D. Davies, Nashville, Tenn.; 40 years of age.

Senator CONNALLY. How long have you been a member of the bar?

Mr. DAVIES. Since 1921.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you been actively engaged in the practice?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. What character of business?

Mr. DAVIES. I have had a general practice. I have represented some corporations. I have also represented litigants in damage suits. Most of my practice has been in chancery, in reference to estates and questions of that nature.

Senator CONNALLY What other positions have you held than State senator, if any?

Mr. DAVIES. I have been chairman of the Democratic executive committee for the district where I live, and was also secretary-treasurer of the Nashville Bar and Library Association for 5 or 6 years.

Senator MCKELLAR. Have you held a place with the R. F. C.?

Mr. DAVIES. I was agency counsel for the national agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation about 4 years.

Senator CONNALLY. You never held any judicial office?

Mr. DAVIES. No.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you practiced in the Federal courts?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. And the State courts as well?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. Chancery and law dockets?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you ever been in the criminal practice?

Mr. DAVIES. Very little. I had one murder case and a few other small cases.

Senator CONNALLY. You know something about criminal law?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. A district judge would have to try a good many criminal cases, I would think.

Mr. DAVIES. That is true.

Senator CONNALLY. You may state anything you desire about your legislative experience.

Mr. DAVIES. I went to the State senate in 1935, which was the first legislative experience I had ever had. At the beginning of the session, before any of us had hardly got our feet on the ground, except some of the older members, while I was away there were some 12 bills introduced in the State senate. You have the record here that you can refer to. They were introduced on January 12, 1935, and were senate bills Nos. 113 to 124, inclusive.

Three of these bills were admittedly T. V. A. bills: No. 113, to authorize cities and counties to operate electric systems; No. 121, to regulate appeals from the Utilities Commission; and No. 112, to authorize municipalities to make certain contracts with Government agencies for the acquisition of electric power systems.

When I got back and looked over these bills I found the claim was being made that they were all T. V. A. bills, or T. V. A. planning and zoning bills. I did not know much about it at that time, but I got hold of the bills as soon as I could. They were introduced on January 12. At that time no permanent committees had been appointed by the speaker. The bills were held without reference. They passed second reading.

Senator CONNALLY. All of them?

Mr. DAVIES. All of them were held and passed second reading on January 22, a short time after they were introduced. On that day they were referred to the committee on public utilities. One day elapsed, and the committee reported back to the senate the following morning that they had carefully considered all those 12 bills and recommended them for passage. They were set for special order at 10:45 a. m. That was about 45 minutes after the session had convened.

When the time for the special order was reached, no one seemed to know anything about the bills. The committee had not held any hearings on them. By general consent, more or less, the matter was postponed over the week end, until the next Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

I went over the bills, and I found that one was a bill to enable the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to purchase ferry landings. At that time in our State we had just finished a comprehensive highway program, and a large number of highway bridges had been built over some of the larger rivers. An attempt had been made by the owners of some of the ferries to have the State take over these ferries, as the bridges were operating in competition with them. Those attempts had been unsuccessful. I could not see how that was a T. V. A. bill. I talked with some of the other senators, and we felt that somebody was trying to put some of these bills through on the popularity of the T. V. A.

I went over all the bills as well as I could in that length of time. Not only that, I talked to Governor McAllister. I wanted to cooperate with the Governor in his program and the T. V. A. program. He said he was not sure that some of these bills were really T. V. A. bills.

In the session of 1933 the legislature had by a joint resolution authorized the Governor to appoint a temporary State planning board. Most of these bills, outside of the T. V. A. bills, had been drawn up by the State planning board, which had become almost a permanent body and made some positions for some people. So many senators made inquiry relative to the source of the bills that Governor McAllister sent the telegram he mentioned in his testimony to Dr. Morgan to ascertain whether or not the T. V. A. was backing these bills. The Governor was anxious to cooperate with the T. V. A., but he wanted us to be satisfied.

The entire Davidson County legislative delegation, which was composed of both the house and senate members, about nine in all, met on Monday afternoon in my office to go over these bills. We had with us the city attorney of Nashville and the county attorney of Davidson County. We made as good an examination as we could in that time, and the county attorney and city attorney advised us that they thought the bills were too comprehensive in their scope and that we should not support them. Furthermore, they pointed out that when we ran for the legislature, our platform provided that we would not make any changes in the governmental affairs of Davidson County and the city of Nashville, except upon request and by consent and absolute approval of the county court and the county judges and the mayor, as well as the board of public works, and in their opinion these bills violated our pledges, as they did make drastic changes.

So when the senate met on Tuesday morning I made a motion to refer these planning or zoning bills, all except the admittedly T. V. A. bills that I have just described, to the judiciary committee, so we could have time to examine them and study them and see where they would benefit our particular section. These bills were new to our section of the country. They contained legislative ideas that were new. We were not familiar with them. There was no reason for any undue haste. The session was only about 16 days old at that time. I wanted an opportunity to go into them and find out what they were, and so I made that motion to rerefer.

Senator CONNALLY. I think that so much detail is not necessary. You finally supported the T. V. A. bills?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes; I voted for them.

Senator CONNALLY. And some of the others you opposed?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Have you ever had any prejudice against labor unions as such?

Mr. DAVIES. I have not. At the last session I was in the legislature a good deal. I had some clients I represented in some matters. I knew all the senators and a good many of the house members. Most of them were friends of mine. I liked to be around them.

I remember on one occasion, toward the end of the session, that Bill Gerber, from Memphis, came to see me and said the labor boys had a musicians' bill they were very much interested in, and the Governor had vetoed it. He said he thought the bill was a good bill, would not hurt anybody, and would help the musicians, and asked me to go around and get some votes to override the Governor's veto. I told him I would be glad to.

Senator CONNALLY. While you were in the legislature, were there any bills affecting labor against which you voted?

Mr. DAVIES. No, sir. As shown in the letter to Mr. Bonham that was read here, there were six labor bills before the senate, which were the only labor bills voted on at that session. They came up for a third and final reading, and I voted for every one of them. I served on the conference committee between the house and the senate on the appropriation for the department of labor. The house had put an amendment on the general appropriation raising the appropriation for the department of labor, and the senate refused to concur and appointed a conference committee. The committee brought in a report suggesting that the senate recede and the house amendment be adopted, which was done.

One matter was mentioned a few minutes ago about the Tennessee Employment Commission, I believe it was. There was a bill in the 1935 session to establish that commission. That bill made an appropriation of $25,000 a year to establish the commission and to appropriate the money. This was the amendment that was offered:

"Be it further enacted, That the sum of $25,000 annually for the next biennium is hereby appropriated for the purpose of establishing public employment offices under the supervision of the department of labor, and for the purpose of cooperating with the United States Employment Service."

The amendment was adopted, and the bill as amended passed the third and final reading and was adopted. I voted for that bill.

Senator CONNALLY. If you should go on the bench, would you or not entertain any prejudice against labor or any other organization or interest of any kind that would in anywise influence you in your judicial acts?

Mr. DAVIES. I have no prejudice against labor or any other organization.

Senator CONNALLY. This other matter is up to you. You may testify about it or not, as you please.

Mr. DAVIES. The Ku Klux Klan?

Senator CONNALLY. I don't know anything about it. You might or might not want to tell it. Mr. Noble made some reference to it.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir. I am very well satisfied to go into it.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead.

Mr. DAVIES. I joined the Ku Klux Klan. I was living in Louisiana at that time. I was approximately 20 years of age, and was preparing to go to school at Vanderbilt University. Some of the boys I knew told me they had a new lodge they wanted me to join. I asked what it was, and they said it was a patriotic organization. I said, "Well, what is it?" They said it was the Ku Klux Klan. I told them I did not know whether I wanted to join it or not. They told me that So-and-so and So-and-so were going to join, and they were all friends of mine, and I said, "Well, all right; I will join it."

They took me down to the hotel, and there was one of these traveling organizers there. Whoever took me down introduced me to him. He swore me in up in the hotel room, and I left within the next 2 or 3 days and came to Nashville to go to school.

Some time after that—I do not recall whether it was the same year or the following year—one of these organizers came over to the fraternity house where I was living. He was soliciting the boys out there to join the Ku Klux Klan. When he came to me, I thought I was a big shot, and I told him I was already a member. He asked me where I had joined, and I told him down in Louisiana. He said, "We have two boys over in one of the other houses from Louisiana. We are going to have a meeting in a night or two. You get together with these boys and come." I said I would be glad to. I never had been to a meeting. I did not know what it was all about. We got together and went down to that meeting, on the top floor of a large building.

Senator CONNALLY. It was not out in a pasture?

Mr. DAVIES. No. I never did go out in the pasture. I could not get in. I did not have the password. They sent and got the organizer, and he vouched for me and got me in. I think we had an initiation there that night. I am not just sure about that. I stayed there and left after the meeting. It did not particularly appeal to me.

That is the entire extent of my connection with the Klu Klux Klan. I never went to another meeting. I never participated in any of their activities whatever.

Senator CONNALLY. You are not now a member in good standing?

Mr. DAVIES. I think I have been dropped for nonpayment of dues. I never did pay any dues. That is my recollection.

Senator CONNALLY. I will ask you whether or not, since that time, you have approved or participated in intolerance and things of that kind that are supposed to be sanctioned by the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. DAVIES. I have not.

Senator CONNALLY. And whether or not you believe in religious freedom and the right of everybody to choose his own religion.

Mr. DAVIES. I certainly do, and my entire life will testify to that.

Senator CONNALLY. You have not been intolerant to any race or creed of any kind?

Mr. DAVIES. I have not.

Senator CONNALLY. And you would be fair and impartial in discharging your duties as a judge? And you would disregard any conditions of the character I have mentioned?

Mr. DAVIES. I certainly would. My friends, the labor boys, would get a square deal. I have no prejudice against them. They are only doing what they had a right to do, and it is perfectly all right.

Senator CONNALLY. That is a very generous attitude for you to take.

Senator MCKELLAR. Senator STEWART wants to ask some questions.

Senator CONNALLY. You may proceed, Senator STEWART.

Senator STEWART. Are you acquainted with the president of the A. and I. College, the Negro college?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes; very well. That is Dr. Hale of the Agricultural and Industrial College. I have a copy of a telegram that he sent.

Senator STEWART. I have a letter here from him.

Senator MCKELLAR. I suggest you put it in the record.

Senator STEWART. Do you want it in the record?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, Senator.

Senator STEWART. He is president of the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial College at Nashville, a colored school there?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, sir.

Senator STEWART. I want to read into the record this letter from Dr. W. J. Hale, president of this college:

APRIL 13, 1939.

Hon. TOM STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice from the press that you have nominated Hon. Elmer Davies for judge of this district. The Agricultural and Industrial State College and many friends join in congratulating you on the excellence of your selection. He has a passion for justice and has displayed it many times in Tennessee. He has the courage of his convictions.

With heartiest congratulations on the wisdom of your choice, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. J. HALE, President.

Mr. DAVIES. The telegram is more comprehensive than the letter.

Senator STEWART. I will also read this telegram from him, addressed to Senator MCKELLAR:

JULY 10, 1939.

Senator KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Am informed a protest is being made of appointment of Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, based upon charges that he is prejudiced against Negro race. Such protest must surely come from persons who do not know and have never had any dealings with him. I have known Mr. Davies for several years, and as president of the A. & I. State College for Negroes, I desire to state that during the two terms that he was a member of the State senate I always found him to be sympathetic, courteous, fair, and willing to do everything he could to help our college. When efforts were being made to cut appropriations Mr. Davies fought and made it possible for us to receive similar appropriations as given white schools. During his entire term of office in legislature on all occasions he willingly and ably fought for the interest of Negro education. According to our knowledge of him and his record he is fair-minded and unprejudiced. When I saw the unfair statement being made about him in the press, I voluntarily wrote you on April 11, congratulated you on your recommendation, and I want you to know that I feel that the attacks on Mr. Davies are not in keeping with his record and are resented by those of us who know him.

W. J. HALE.

Senator MCKELLAR. Dr. Hale is one of the outstanding colored educators of the country, is he not?

Mr. DAVIES. There is no doubt about that.

Senator MCKELLAR. And a very splendid American citizen.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. Are there any other questions?

Senator MCKELLAR. That is all.

Senator STEWART. That is all.

Senator CONNALLY. Is there anything further you want to say?

Mr. DAVIES. There is one thing I want to answer in reference to that resolution. It is stated in the resolution that was adopted that—

"Whereas, Mr. Davies is regarded as a lobbyist"——

Senator CONNALLY (interposing). Is that the resolution that was read into the record?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes.

Senator CONNALLY. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. DAVIES. "Whereas Mr. Davies is rather to be regarded as a lobbyist and contact man for special interests, as shown by his pernicious activities during the recent legislature, than as a lawyer."

I did represent some clients that had been connected with the firm I have been connected with for many years. On one matter I went to the Governor, and he approved it, and a bill was introduced in the legislature. In another matter I worked out a bill with the insurance commissioner, and it was introduced. On another matter I had it up with the commissioner of agriculture about his bill, and he approved what I wanted, and the bill went through the legislature. I did not take any active part in these matters, but was watching them to see that they got through. At the end of the session we got into a jam. The commissioner of insurance asked me to look after some of his bills, which I was glad to do, and helped get them through so that they would not be killed in the last-minute rush.

Then Senator Mosby asked me to look after some matters, and I was glad to do it. It was voluntary on my part. That is the extent of my lobbying.

The resolution also refers to the senate T. V. A. bills, but I think that I have already answered that. It further said:

"Whereas said Davies, while bitterly opposing the T. V. A. planning bill, declared on the floor of the State senate that the present democratic administration had—by bribing the State with Federal funds—done more than the Civil War to destroy States' rights and to pervert the historic form of our American Government."

I did not make any such statement.

The resolution further said:

"Whereas it was Mr. Davies, as chairman of the senate rules committee, who was primarily responsible for the strangling of the child-labor amendment without allowing it to come to a vote."

The facts are that in the 1935 and the 1937 sessions the resolution for the ratification of the child-labor amendment was introduced as a house joint resolution in the house. In each session it was defeated in the house and never came to the senate. Not only that, but no such resolution was ever referred to the rules committee, and no bills or resolutions were referred to that committee. We just made the rules, and that was all that committee did. Further, the resolution said:

"Whereas he has not hesitated to character the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in language too vile and uncouth for repetition."

I am not in the habit of making such statements about the President, regardless of whether he is a Democrat or a Republican.

That is all.

Senator CONNALLY. Are there any other questions?

Senator MCKELLAR. I believe not.

Senator CONNALLY. I believe I forgot to ask you how old you are.

Mr. DAVIES. I am 40 years of age. I stated that in the beginning.

STATEMENT OF HON. TOM STEWART, A SENATOR IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

Senator STEWART. I would like to make a brief statement.

Senator CONNALLY. Go ahead.

Senator STEWART. At the time it was necessary to make a selection of a Federal judge for middle Tennessee, to succeed Judge Gore, who died during the present term of Congress, Senator MCKELLAR and I considered the claims of many applicants and many who were not applicants, many very fine men and lawyers in middle Tennessee, the section to be served by this judgeship. Without going into detail to enumerate some of the difficulties we had to overcome, we finally decided upon Mr. Davies, who was not an applicant in the sense we ordinarily consider. He had given his endorsement to another man. The situation was such that we thought it was necessary to make a selection from among those who were not applicants, and having been personally acquainted with Mr. Davies for a number of years, we chose to recommend him. I am sure he was as much surprised, when the information was made public, as anyone else in the State of Tennessee.

This selection of Mr. Davies was made strictly because we thought he was as well fitted as any man who could be considered. Senator MCKELLAR is well known in Tennessee as a friend of labor. His attitude toward labor, as mine, has been and is one of complete sympathy. It would not be my purpose to recommend any man who would be unfair to labor, organized, or in any other group of people in Tennessee or elsewhere.

I am acquainted with these gentlemen who testified against Mr. Davies, and I have a high regard for them.

I want to call attention to a telegram addressed to me under date of April 1, 1939, immediately after the selection of Mr. Davies:

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 1, 1939.

Hon. TOM STEWART,
Senate Office Building:

You are to be commended upon the nomination of Elmer Davies as middle Tennessee district judge. The Nashville labor element will approve this selection.

W. M. TAFT,
Editor, Labor Advocate.

That is all I care to say.

STATEMENT OF HON. KENNETH D. M'KELLAR, A SENATOR IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, of course, we had a most difficult task. I have no doubt you have had the same experience. We were required to select a judge where there were some 18 or 20 applicants, men of the highest character and standing. To have to choose one from among them was one of the most difficult things that ever confronted me as a Senator.

I will not attempt to go into details as to why Mr. Davies was selected. He was not an applicant. I never communicated with him beforehand, and I do not think Senator STEWART did. He was selected because we thought he would fill the position ably and to the satisfaction of the people of that district. We did not go into this matter carelessly but made a very painstaking investigation. I want to say to my esteemed labor friends that I telephoned to labor friends and asked them whether or not Mr. Davies would be acceptable to labor, and was assured that he would be.

I never was more astonished in my life when I learned that some of my labor friends were opposed to Mr. Davies. I regretted it, and regret it now.

These two gentlemen who testified against the nomination are excellent men and my friends. I regret to differ from them. I think they have been misled by statements of others about the matter. That is all I can say about it. I think Mr. Davies will make as fair and honest and upright a judge as could be found, and that he will not be in the slightest degree prejudiced against any organization of any kind but will deal out justice in a fair and impartial manner. It was for that reason that we recommended him, and for that reason only.

I want to say in conclusion that I am a lawyer and have been all my life, and I believe I know what kind of man a Federal judge should be. I went into the matter conscientiously, and I know that Senator STEWART did the same, because we conferred every day. What we did was done with the sole purpose of getting an honest, intelligent, faithful, and impartial judge who would mete out justice to the people of that district. It was for that reason that Mr. Davies was appointed, and I earnestly hope this committee and the Senate will unanimously confirm his nomination.

Senator CONNALLY. Thank you, Senator MCKELLAR.

Senator STEWART. Mr. Chairman, there are some telegrams and letters here which I will not take the time to read but would like to have in the record.

Senator CONNALLY. Very well. They may go in.

(The said telegrams and letters are here printed in full, as follows:)

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 31, 1939.

Senator TOM STEWART:

Appointment of Elmer Davies meets widespread approval of all classes of our citizens. Political friends and foes alike express satisfaction. Have spoken to many politically hostile to Davies and they admit his appointment to be a splendid one. I believe it will heal all disappointments. The bar is very well pleased over this appointment.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The appointment of Elmer Davies as United States district judge for middle Tennessee meets with general approval in Nashville. He is known in this section of the State as a splendid lawyer and an honorable gentleman. Had I been naming a judge, he would have been my choice.

I am not unmindful of the great difficulty you and Senator MCKELLAR had in determining your course in the matter.

I want you both to know that my relationship with you gentlemen in the future will be the same as it has been in the past.

If at any time I can serve you here in any way, call on me.

QUARTERLY COUNTY COURT,
Robertson County, Tenn., April 3, 1939.

Resolution regarding Hon. Elmer D. Davies

Be it resolved by the County Court of Robertson County, Tenn., in quarterly session assembled at Springfield on the first Monday in April 1939, That we approve the selection of the Honorable Elmer D. Davies for the position of judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee and most respectfully petition that he be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate.

Mr. Davies is an outstanding citizen and lawyer who has a wide range of experience in the affairs of the public, including his work as a legislator in the General Assembly of Tennessee, and his integrity is unimpeachable.

DEAR SENATOR STEWART: May I take this opportunity to commend you and Senator MCKELLAR on the very excellent recommendation you have made in selecting Hon. Elmer D. Davies to succeed the late Judge John J. Gore.

In my humble opinion, Mr. Davies' dignity, poise, courtesy, brilliance as a lawyer, his rare good judgment, absolute honesty and dependability in the smallest matters, as well as his clean personal record, make him the outstanding man for this high office.

Re Federal judge, middle district of Tennessee.

Hon. TOM STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: May I take this opportunity, sir, of commending you for your recommendation of our mutual friend, Elmer D. Davies, to be the Federal judge for the middle district of Tennessee.

I should not be frank were I not to state that for personal reasons I had a preference among the known applicants for the place. However, since you did not see fit to recommend any one of these, but chose instead a comparatively younger member of the bar, it is my honest opinion, taking all elements into consideration, that you could not have made a better choice.

The recommendation came as a surprise to the members of the Nashville bar, and from my point of view it was a most happy and pleasant surprise. Personally, I have heard nothing but the most favorable comments among the members of the bar and other citizens here with whom I have discussed the matter.

I realize that this has caused you a great deal of concern, and, while I take no active part in politics, I think it only fair that you should be complimented on a recommendation which is most pleasing. I am convinced that Elmer Davies will be a good judge—in the course of time a great judge. He is thoroughly honest and capable and a man of courage, and by temperament I believe that he is particularly fitted for the bench.

Inasmuch as we need a Federal judge to carry on the business of the court, I cannot urge you too strongly to press for the immediate confirmation of Elmer Davies as judge of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH MARTIN.

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 31, 1939.

Senator TOM STEWART,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I wish to congratulate you for the splendid selection you made in nominating Senator Elmer Davies for the office of United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee. I have been acquainted with Senator Davies for the past 10 years and know him intimately, both as a lawyer and as a man. In my humble judgment Mr. Davies is possessed with every fundamental qualification to make a great judge and render a service to his people and his Government which will be a credit to his name and to those who are responsible for his appointment.

Senator Davies enjoys the respect and esteem of the bench and bar of middle Tennessee. Neither his integrity nor ability as a lawyer is subject to any question. I have always found him to be honest, able, and courageous, and his friends are numbered by his acquaintances.

His nomination for this exalted position came as a surprise, he not having sought the position himself.

My primary interest in this appointment, as a lawyer, has been and is to see a man appointed who is in every material respect qualified and able to discharge with justice the duties incumbent upon this office, and to preserve and maintain those high standards and the administration of justice for which this office has been so distinguished during the tenure in which it was held by the late Justice Sanford and Judge John J. Gore.

It is my humble judgment and belief that you will not have an occasion to regret the selection which you made, and I personally wish to commend you for the wisdom which you have exercised in making this difficult selection.

Yours very truly,

H. H. CHITWOOD,
Attorney at Law.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
SUPREME COURT,
Nashville, April 1, 1939.

Hon. A. T. STEWART,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR TOM: I understand that certain disappointed and envious people in and around Nashville have been writing and wiring you in regard to Elmer Davies. As I know him as well as anyone else, and better than most, I venture to put my oar in, too.

I have known him since before he was licensed to practice; saw him court his wife, marry, raise his family, and begin the practice of law. There is nothing that can truthfully be said against him in any manner, except that he was fortunate enough to receive the appointment. He has always been a loyal Democrat, working for the party and ably so, and has had the courage of his convictions.

This letter is entirely unsolicited and I feel probably it is unnecessary, but I cannot stand by without defending a friend who deserves it.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

DAVID S. LANSDEN.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I realize you had a difficult task in selecting an individual for your recommendation in filling the Federal judgeship for middle Tennessee, and you are to be congratulated on your choice. Have heard many favorable comments.

I take the position there is no harm in the asking as we sometimes miss something good by not asking. At the same time a good winner must be a good loser, and that is what I want to be and try to be when the occasion arises.

Am happy it was given to Davidson County.

NASHVILLE TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL,
Nashville, Tenn., April 15, 1939.

Hon. TOM STEWART,
Senator of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR TOM: Please find enclosed a resolution passed by the Nashville Trades and Labor Council which is more or less self-explanatory.

Labor of Nashville cannot see the consistency of the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as Federal judge of the middle district of Tennessee.

Sincerely yours,

[SEAL] JOHN GARNER,
Secretary, Nashville Trades and Labor Council.

Whereas notice has been carried in the press that the United States Senators from this State have recommended for district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, Mr. Elmer D. Davies of this city, one of the bitterest critics of the liberal policies that have distinguished the present national Democratic administration; and

Whereas on January 29, 1935, when Mr. Davies was serving as State senator and the senate had under consideration certain planning bills endorsed by the T. V. A. and concerning which the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority had advised the senate "that the Tennessee Valley Authority felt the planning bills would make possible a State program which would materially assist the T. V. A. in certain of its activities," Mr. Davies said: "In my opinion these are the most pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic bills that ever were introduced in this legislature. I, for one, don't want the record to show in the future that I sponsored any of these, if unfortunately they should pass," and

Whereas Mr. Davies further stated: "The only reason a State N. R. A. was not included was that it was so unpopular that they didn't have the nerve to present that," and

Whereas Davies said further: "Ah, gentlemen, 'twas a sad day indeed when the several States bartered their birthright for Federal aid. You know and I know that the federalists within the past 2 years have done more by the aid of their money to eliminate all States rights than the Civil War ever accomplished," and

Whereas the Nashville Trades and Labor Council realizes the seriousness of placing on the Federal bench here at the heart of the T. V. A. development a man who is one of the most consistent opponents of the enlightened social philosophy which has characterized the present national Democratic administration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urgently protest the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies as district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the following:

To President Franklin Delano Roosevelt,
To United States Attorney General Frank Murphy,
To Senators K. D. McKellar and A. Tom Stewart.

C. N. VESTER,
STANLEY O'CONNOR,
W. C. CLARK,
J. W. AVERITT.

Sincerely yours,

[SEAL] JOHN GARNER,
Secretary, Nashville Trades and Labor Council.

Nashville, Tenn., May 25, 1939.

Senator TOM STEWART,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You will find herewith enclosed a resolution, which was unanimously adopted by our local last night.

It is our unanimous opinion that Mr. Elmer Davies is not suitable by temperament and training to fill the important position for district Federal judge in middle Tennessee.

Probably no district judge in the South would be called upon to pass upon liberal legislation and policies put forth by the Roosevelt administration so much as the judge of this district, and we think that the man should be at least tolerant. All we ask is that we be given a judge with liberal views, which we know that Mr. Davies does not possess.

Yours very truly,

M. L. HALMONTALLER,
Recording Secretary.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Congratulations on your selection of Elmer Davies for the judgeship at Nashville. He is a fine man, capable lawyer, and a working Democrat. He is very popular among the lawyers at the Nashville bar.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 9, 1939.

Hon. TOM STEWART,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR STEWART: The convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, which has just adjourned, had before it a resolution opposing the appointment of Mr. Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, as district judge for middle Tennessee. The resolution committee held extensive hearings on said resolution and the convention referred it, together with the record of the hearing, to the executive council which is also the nonpartisan committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

The nonpartisan committee has unanimously instructed me, as secretary, to write you stating our vigorous and unqualified opposition to the appointment of Mr. Davies to the Federal bench. Our reasons for opposing this appointment are that he has demonstrated his opposition to New Deal policies, notwithstanding that he was a supporter of the Democratic Party in the elections. As a member of the State senate he bitterly opposed the T. V. A. planning bills, characterizing them as "pernicious, socialistic, and paternalistic." He also opposed ratification of the child-labor amendment, and as chairman of the senate rules committee was largely instrumental in preventing a vote on the amendment. Mr. Davies has been an outspoken opponent of New Deal policies, and it is inconceivable to us that a man holding these views should be placed on the bench by the present administration.

We hold that it would be particularly obnoxious to have a man holding the views that Mr. Davies does on T. V. A. sitting as a Federal judge in the heart of the T. V. A. territory.

In making the above statements we do not bring into question Mr. Davies' personal integrity or his right to hold the views he does, but we do question the propriety of the appointment of a man holding such views.

We, therefore, respectfully ask that he not be appointed.

Respectfully yours,

TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
T. R. CUTHBERT, Secretary-Treasurer.

(Whereupon, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., the hearing was closed and the subcommittee adjourned.)

THE SPENDING PROGRAM

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from the New York Times of this date entitled "The Spending Program." It seems to me that this editorial ought to challenge the attention of Senators who are determined to appropriate all the money we have and then impose additional burdens on the taxpayers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 13, 1939]

THE SPENDING PROGRAM

The administration's newest lending-spending program is now before Congress in the form of a bill calling for credits of $2,660,000,000 for various kinds of public works. Only one major change has been made in the plan since it was first advanced by the President. The proposal for an extension of $500,000,000 in foreign credits has been dropped like a hot cake. It has been dropped because opposition in Congress to foreign loans is politically much the safest kind of opposition to any spending program. Foreign governments have no votes.

As it stands, the plan calls for loans to be made by various credit agencies of the Government for waterworks, sewage-disposal plants, bridges, hospitals, toll roads, railway equipment, rural electrification, and farm-tenant programs—all of which are lightheartedly lumped together by the President as self-liquidating projects which will add nothing to the national debt. But if these projects are actually self-liquidating, if there is every reasonable prospect that they can pay their way commercially, there is no shortage of idle private capital ready to go into them, and if they are not self-liquidating in this sense they are bound to add to the Government's contingent debt, which is just as real a debt from the taxpayer's point of view as the formal public debt which the Treasury carries on its books.

Despite the temptation to spend more money in an election year, the plan ought to be voted down in Congress for three solid and convincing reasons: (1) This type of public spending—spending outside the Budget—is in fact the most dangerous of all kinds of public spending, since it conceals the real extent of the Government deficit by means of a bookkeeping device. (2) Five years of experience with "pump priming" on a gigantic scale has shown that Government spending cannot by itself achieve a sound and lasting recovery of business. (3) To the extent that Government spending succeeds at all, it succeeds merely in producing a series of minor speculative booms that tend to obscure the necessity of changes in governmental policy.

With the greatest debt in the country's history and a Budget completely out of hand, it is time to call a halt on spending and to face the realities of the situation.

REPATRIATION OF AMERICAN NEGRO IN AFRICA

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, since introducing in the Senate a bill to repatriate the American Negro on the West Coast of Africa I have received thousands of communications endorsing the proposal, many of them coming from foreign lands. Among them I hold in my hand a letter of exceptional interest, not because of its literary value nor because of its faultless sentential structure, for in these things it may be adjudged by men of much learning merely mediocre. It was penned by the black hand of a descendant of a Zulu tribe in Zululand, South Africa, and represents the overpowering impulse of an Afro-American to plead in his simple, peculiar native way for race nationality. He does not want to see his race, of which he is justly proud, submerged and forever lost in the blood stream of the Caucasian. He is possessed of the inherent urge to rebel against amalgamation, the inevitable end which the Negro race is gradually and alarmingly approaching in this country. Every line of this letter echoes with the cry of a lost soul for an opportunity to return to the continent from which it was stolen, to be transplanted in a land unsuited to its growth and development, a clime lacking in congeniality to its freedom and happiness. This letter is to be valued more for the sentiments that strove for expression than for those actually set down. The dark hand of the suppliant is stretched forth without adequate words to express the full measure of his desire. I believe this message will kindle a new light in the mind of some doubting Thomas if he will only dare to read it.

I most respectfully ask, Mr. President, that the letter be printed in the RECORD following the remarks I have now concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., July 1, 1939.

HON. THEODORE G. BILBO,
United States Senator for Mississippi,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR: After perusing the edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Seventy-sixth Congress re the Bilbo bill, I felt that not only I, but the Afro-American as an entity, are, or should be, greatly indebted to you for the great efforts you are exerting in our behalf.

There are those within our own racial group represented by the professional doctor and clergy, the successful businessman, and the one-half or three-fourths caste mulattoes who believe that the day and time will come when the American democratic institution which was established by the blood and suffering of the Pilgrim Fathers will retrograde to the status of a socialistic-communistic state, in which the black man and the white man will abide cheek by jowl on terms of social, economical, and political equality, contrary to the principles laid down by such immortals as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln, and as now made manifest by the Bilbo bill.

This group of men and women may be appropriately classified not only as the real drones of the African race, but ipso facto the parasites who survive merely by clinging to and sucking the lifeblood from the poor and the unthinking masses of their own ilk.

They are so absorbed by the spirit of exploitation, greed, and avarice and selfishness, the thought of miscegenation, and the wish for universal racial amalgamation that they are not in the least mindful of the cruel injustices and inhumanities being suffered by the overwhelming majority of their own race and people.

It is doubtless true that the black man has served the white man in America as a chattel slave from 1620 to 1863, but in my humble opinion as a direct descendant of the Zulu Tribe, of Zululand, South Africa, I do not believe that this fact is a justification of the black man's claim, aided and abetted by the N. A. A. C. P. and the Communist Party of Russia in America, to social, economic, and political equality with the Nordic or Anglo-Saxon white man in America any more than if I stopped and ordered a white man today to shine my shoes, and he did so, would justify that man in claiming social and economic equality with me in my private home.

Not so very long ago the late President Warren G. Harding, in a speech delivered at Birmingham, Ala., in 1921, I recall, said in part: "There is a difference—a great, big difference—an inescapable difference, between the white man and the black man."

And the black man should seek to be—he should be encouraged to be—the best possible black man, and not the best possible immitation of the white man. He should have ideas, ideals, ambition, aspirations, and a whole set of traditions all his own.

The sentiment of the American white people, as expressed by the administrator of the affairs of the Nation, to my mind is prima facie proof that the white man will not tolerate social, economic, and political equality as between the white man and the black man in America. This sentiment requires that he should have a social, economic, and political system of his own. This being so, the white man, speaking through Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Harding, could not mean, and certainly does not mean, that the black man should have, or strive to have, a black government within a white government, or a black empire within the American empire.

Yet it is so strange, so baffling, to me, Mr. BILBO, that neither the American Government or the American press is willing to accept and to promulgate the principles of separation and repatriation of the Afro-American back to his motherland, Africa, as advocated by the Bilbo bill.

Less than a year ago the dictum of one man—Adolf Hitler—actually forced the American Government and national press to the point of advocating an independent national homeland for German refugee Jews even in far-off British Guiana in South America, and suggesting such places as east and west Africa. Yet it is so strange, so confusing to me, Mr. BILBO, that the same American Government and press ignore so thoroughly, so completely, the dictum of at least four Presidents of the United States—George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Warren Gamaliel Harding.

In 1620 there were only 433,000 black chattel slaves. In 1939 there are approximately 22,500,000 descendants of those slaves, freed by Abraham Lincoln and now competing with the white man for food, clothes, and shelter in the economic and political battle of the survival of the fittest. This is a problem that must be solved sooner or later.

It was a distressing problem in 1776. It was a bloody problem in 1863, and I make bold to state that it is an acute problem in 1939. If it is to be solved—and it must be solved—its only solution is, to my mind, the Bilbo bill. As for me, I am not half as eager to get away from sin as I am to rid myself of the curse of amalgamation of the white man and the black man. Such a policy, to my mind, would be contrary to the divine scheme.

Hoping that the Bilbo bill will have the wholesale support of the United States Congress and press, I am, sir,

Very respectfully yours,

J. MILTON BATSON.

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WYOMING

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, a United Press dispatch from Albany, N. Y., under date of June 26, referring to the thirty-first annual conference of Chief Executives in session there at that time, states that Gov. Nels Smith, of Wyoming, complained to the conference of Governors that Wyoming ranchers in his State "are unable to get help because persons on relief are unwilling to give it up temporarily."

Mr. President, Governor Smith's ignorance of the Wyoming W. P. A. and labor situation is only exceeded by his general hostility to the whole relief program.

Recently I sought to find ranch work in Wyoming for a deserving young man. I wrote several friends who might be in position to know of any vacant job. A sample reply received by me reads, in part:

> As you well know, Harry, there are many youngsters around here wanting to go out on these ranches and also from various parts of the country, and naturally there is scarcity of work for them.

Mr. President, the youngsters referred to by my friend are boys from 18 to 25, most of whom have for the past 3 or 4 years been unable to find regular work; others each summer go out on the ranches and earn money to carry themselves through the university. They are anxious to work. They are rising young Americans. Most of them are familiar with all ranch work.

As to the Wyoming W. P. A. workers: On January 1st last there were 4,166 workers on the rolls in Wyoming. As the season for agricultural work opened the number on the rolls had decreased to 3,157, and on July 1st the number of W. P. A. workers was 3,052. This is a decrease of 1,114, or about 25 percent. Practically all of them sought private employment, and the official records show that 850 of them went into private employment.

Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement by the W. P. A. administrator of Wyoming as it appeared in the Wyoming Eagle, of Cheyenne, on June 27, 1939, setting forth the official notices to W. P. A. workers that if they accept private employment they may go back to work again when the employment terminates.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. NEELY. I refuse to yield for any colloquies or any discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article referred to by the Senator from Wyoming will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the Wyoming Eagle, Cheyenne, Wyo., June 27, 1939]

FLANNERY ANSWERS ATTACK OF GOVERNOR

Governor Smith's statement at the Governors' conference yesterday in Albany, N. Y., regarding the failure of W. P. A. workers to take private employment, was challenged last night by L. G. (Pat) Flannery, Wyoming W. P. A. administrator.

Flannery said: "The Cheyenne Tribune of June 26 attributes the following statement at the Governors' conference in Albany, N. Y., to Gov. Nels Smith, of Wyoming, that Wyoming stockmen 'can't get labor on our ranches because W. P. A. workers are told if they leave they can't get back on the W. P. A.'

"If the Governor is correctly quoted, his statement was not in accord with established W. P. A. policy in regard to private employment or with facts."

A CHALLENGE

And here is Flannery's challenge—

"If Governor Smith or anyone else has knowledge of any employee of this administration who has told W. P. A. workers they cannot get back on the program if they leave to accept a private job, we would like to have that employee's name.

"If the Governor or anyone else knows a W. P. A. worker who has refused a private job, this office would like to know about it, so we can terminate that worker if his refusal was not justified.

"And if the Governor or any other person knows of a W. P. A. worker who quit to accept a private job and lost that job through no fault of his own, and who is still in need, who has been refused reemployment on W. P. A., we would appreciate that information.

"FOILS WELFARE MOVE

"Recently the State department of public welfare undertook, and is still attempting, to cancel the W. P. A. certifications of a number of persons who quit W. P. A. to take private jobs, which would have eliminated them from reemployment, but the Wyoming Works Progress Administration has refused to accept such cancelations of certification.

"Since June 19 the only assignments that have been made to W. P. A. have been the assignment of persons who quit to accept private employment and have lost that employment through no fault of their own and are found to be still in need, and of persons who are returning because of temporary separation due to illness or injury. And the Wyoming Works Progress Administration will continue to give preference and jobs to persons returning from private employment who are still in need, so long as quota and funds are available."

NOTICES SENT

Flannery explained further:

"May 12, 1939, the following instructions were issued to all offices of the Wyoming Works Progress Administration:

"Your attention is called to section 24 of Federal Administrative Order No. 67, which states:

" 'Section 24: Project employees and unassigned certified persons shall be expected to accept bona fide offers of private employment, whether of a permanent or temporary nature, provided that:

" '(a) The project employee is capable of performing such work.

" '(b) The wage for such employment is not less than the prevailing wage for such work in the community.

" '(c) Such employment is not in conflict with established union relationships.

" '(d) Such employment provides reasonable working conditions.'

"A certified person who takes such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to reemployment on a project if he is still in need and otherwise eligible and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own. However, project employees and certified persons awaiting assignment who refuses to accept such private employment shall be ineligible for employment on any project for the period such private employment would be available.

"The provisions in section 24 are to be strictly adhered to without exception."

The same day the following notice was sent to each individual W. P. A. worker:

"TO ALL W. P. A. PROJECT WORKERS

"Your attention is again called to the fact that opportunities for private employment are gradually increasing, and all W. P. A. employees are to take advantage of such opportunities. Workers refusing private employment when working conditions are reasonable and the wage for such employment is not less than prevailing wage for such work in that community, will be terminated from W. P. A. for the period such private employment would be available.

"When workers are notified that jobs are available for them, they must report immediately as instructed by the county W. P. A. office. Failure to comply with these instructions will be considered as refusal of private employment.

"Further, workers are instructed to contact the U. S. E. S. offices on or before June 1, 1939, and every 60 days thereafter. In localities where there are no U. S. E. S. offices, such contacts are to be made by letter or telephone. Arrangements have been made whereby we will be notified as to whether the workers have made such contacts. Failure to make contacts will be sufficient reason for termination.

"Workers leaving projects to accept private employment will be given every preference under regulations for returning to W. P. A. at the time the private employment is terminated, if they are still in need.

"RECEIVE PREFERENCE

"As the result of these instructions the rolls of the Wyoming Works Progress Administration have decreased from 4,166 January 1, 1939, to 3,157 June 15, 1939. This reduction of more than 1,000, about 25 percent of the total, is almost entirely accounted for by the voluntary acceptance of seasonal work by W. P. A. employees on Wyoming farms, ranches, and in private industry.

" 'Every specific case of a W. P. A. worker refusing a bona fide offer of private employment at work which he could do, under reasonable working conditions and at the prevailing rate of pay for similar work in the community, which was reported or otherwise came to the attention of this office has been investigated, and if substantiated, the worker has been terminated,' Flannery said.

"Let it be said to the credit of Wyoming W. P. A. workers that only in a few instances has it been necessary to terminate persons for refusing private employment. Most of the men and women who have been forced by grim necessity to come to this program in order to live and feed their dependents are, like men and women in all walks of life, happy and grateful when opportunity comes to stand on their own feet and make their own way."

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement by myself on the subject of the reciprocal-trade agreements.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. MEAD

There have been some conflicting statements made respecting the benefits accruing to this Nation as a result of the operation of the reciprocal-trade agreements. With especial reference to the trade agreements and fish imports, and the trade agreements and poultry imports, sometime ago I wrote to the Secretary of State seeking some facts. I now have two letters from the Secretary, and I desire to incorporate portions of these letters in this statement.

It has been asserted that the trade agreements have helped foreign countries to recover their markets for fish in this country while the concessions that have been received from agreement countries have not been of any assistance to us in reacquiring our former foreign markets for fish. In this connection, the Secretary makes the following comment:

"The nature of our foreign trade in fish differs in the case of the different species. Domestic production is inadequate to supply the large and increasing demand of the country for fish of most species. Important exceptions are canned salmon and sardines (pilchards), exports of which are large. Total United States imports of fishery products are approximately three times as great as exports, in value, and they constitute a rather large fraction of total fish consumption. This situation is due in part to the consumption demands of the large population of the United States and the fact that so relatively small a part of the population engages in commercial fishing. Fisheries represent a very small fraction of the business, even of those sections of the country which rank high in the fishing industry.

"The most important concessions with respect to fish granted by the United States were provided in the old and new trade agreements with Canada and in the agreement with the United Kingdom. Imports affected by the United Kingdom agreement come mainly from Newfoundland. These concessions include bindings on the free list of certain items which are free of duty and reductions of the duties on a number of other fresh- and salt-water fish.

"Total United States imports of fish declined greatly during the depression but subsequently recovered in 1937 to almost 90 percent of the 1929 figure. In the last 3 years, 1936 to 1938, when the first agreement with Canada was in effect, imports averaged $30,872,000 annually. The lowest figure reached during the depression was $21,673,000 in 1932. In 1929 our imports were valued at $38,753,000. The following table shows the value of our imports over a period of years:

Total United States imports for consumption of all fish and fish products, including shellfish

1925–29 (average)	$34,515,000
1929	38,753,000
1930	35,036,000
1931	28,937,000
1932	21,673,000
1933	21,783,000
1934	23,174,000
1935	27,535,000
1936	30,356,000
1938	28,349,000

"While duty reductions undoubtedly have facilitated imports of fish in the last 3 years, it will be observed that the increases have not yet restored imports to predepression levels. In 1938, moreover, the total value of imports was considerably smaller than in 1937. Imports of fish in 1937 were no doubt stimulated by the relatively high prices of meat in that year resulting from the severe droughts of 1934 and 1936.

"It must not be inferred that the difference in the value of imports before and after the reductions were made provides a measure of the effects of these reductions. Other factors as well, such as price changes and variations in consumer purchasing power, have, of course, been important influences.

"It has been implied that the increase in imports of fish measures the extent to which domestic producers have been injured. This, of course, is not so. As in the case of practically all other industries, the prosperity of our fishing industry depends primarily upon consumer purchasing power. While imports of fish were $10,737,000 greater in 1937 than in 1934, the year the Trade Agreements Act was adopted, the income of our fishermen, as measured by the value of the domestic catch, was $26,682,000 greater. Although other factors tending to enhance domestic demand, such as the relatively high prices of meat, were also important, our fishermen were undoubtedly benefited by the general improvement in economic conditions, to which trade agreements contributed.

"It might be added also that concessions have been obtained benefiting American exports to Canada and Newfoundland which are of great value to the industry and agriculture of those sections of the United States in which fisheries are relatively important, notably New England, the Industrial States along the Great Lakes, and the Pacific Coast States.

"It has been contended that trade agreements have not been of help in restoring our foreign markets for fish on a comparison of the value of United States exports to trade-agreements countries which granted us concessions on fish, and other countries, respectively, in 1929 and 1937. Such comparisons do not measure the effectiveness of trade-agreement concessions. The many influences affecting trade with individual countries were very different in 1937 than they were in 1929. We have been confronted with the extremely difficult task of restoring the damage to our commerce which resulted from the collapse of world trade after 1929—a disaster to which our own high-tariff policies had contributed. The trade-agreements program has already contributed substantially to the restoration of many of our foreign markets.

"The United States has obtained in trade agreements highly valuable concessions for types of fish that this country exports. Most important among these are the concessions pertaining to canned salmon and sardines, which account for approximately three-fourths of our total fishery exports.

"Exports of fish from the United States, especially canned fish, have increased substantially since the trade-agreements program was inaugurated. While not all of this increase can be attributed to trade agreements, it is significant that in 1938 our exports of canned fish to countries which had given us concessions on such products were 59 percent greater than in 1934 while our exports to all other countries were but 11 percent greater."

There have been repeated charges, some of which have appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that increased imports of live poultry have been a definite handicap to the domestic industry, and that these increases are attributable to a reduction in the duty on live poultry under the two reciprocal-trade agreements with Canada.

The duty on live poultry was reduced from 8 cents a pound to 4 cents a pound in the first trade agreement with Canada, which became effective January 1, 1936, and this concession was continued in the new agreement which became effective January 1, 1939.

In response to my inquiries concerning the effect of the increased imports of poultry, the Secretary writes:

"Imports of live poultry did increase after the first agreement went into effect, but the actual increases have not been great; and, except in the unusual year 1937, imports have not been as great as they were in 1929. Moreover, to express the increases in imports in percentages is quite misleading, because the actual amount of poultry imported, even in the peak year 1937, has been relatively small. Imports amount to only a small fraction of 1 percent of domestic production.

"Imports of poultry from countries other than Canada are very small. Below is given a table of statistics showing the value of imports of live poultry from Canada, from other countries, and from all countries during certain years:

United States imports of live poultry

Year	From Canada	From other countries	Total
1929	$346,748	$9,108	$355,856
1932	12,465	4,551	17,016
1933	3,991	3,850	7,841
1935	9,383	13,978	23,361
1936	176,740	17,370	194,110
1937	732,769	55,030	787,799
1938	165,657	62,937	228,594
1938 (1st quarter)	[1]	[1]	83,600
1939 (1st quarter)	[1]	[1]	27,680

[1] Not available.

"You will note from the table that imports of poultry in 1937 increased considerably. These imports were, of course, abnormal. The severe 1936 drought in this country had increased tremendously the price of beef, and the result was a great increase in domestic demand for poultry as a substitute. Domestic producers were unable to meet entirely the increased demand for poultry, and imports therefore increased considerably.

"Statistics of prices available show that the average prices per pound received by farmers for live chickens in 1932 and 1933 were 11.1 cents and 9.1 cents, respectively. The average prices received in 1936, 1937, and 1938 were 15 cents, 16 cents, and 15 cents, respectively. Chickens constitute from 85 to 95 percent of our poultry imports. A part of the increase in value of imports after 1935, as compared with imports in 1932 and 1933, was of course due to the higher prices received for poultry.

"In view of the facts set forth above it is extremely unlikely that the concession in regard to live poultry granted by the United States in the two trade agreements with Canada has injured the domestic industry. On the other hand, American poultry producers are clearly benefited by the trade-agreements program. The agreements thus far concluded have substantially increased domestic purchasing power by making possible a greater recovery in American foreign trade than otherwise would have occurred. This is specially important to producers of commodities such as poultry, the demand for which is sensitive to changes in consumer purchasing power.

"It was, as you know, because of deep concern for agriculture, industry, and workers suffering as a result of great decline in our foreign trade after 1929 that the Congress enacted the Trade Agreements Act of 1934, since extended. Under this legislation an effort is being made to restore and expand our foreign trade by means of mutually profitable agreements involving reciprocal adjustments of excessive trade restrictions. Of the trade agreements now in effect, agreements with 10 countries have been in effect for more than 3 years, and agreements with 4 other countries have been in effect for more than 2 years. Because of the great care taken in the formulation of these agreements, domestic producers have found no real cause for complaint. On the other hand, by helping to stimulate our foreign trade, these agreements have helped to increase employment and consumer purchasing power to the benefit of domestic producers and workers generally. While no claim is made that trade agreements alone have been responsible for the increase in foreign trade, nevertheless, it is significant that, in the 2 years, 1937–38, exports to the trade-agreement countries increased by 61.2 percent over exports to these countries in the 1934–35 period, while exports to all other countries increased by 37.9 percent."

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, according to ancient legend, Pythagoras, after he discovered the forty-seventh problem of Euclid—the theorem that the square of the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle equals the sum of the squares of the other two sides—celebrated his achievement by sacrificing a hecatomb of 50 white oxen.

The millions who, through their organizations and spokesmen, have petitioned the Congress to pass the motion-picture anti-block-booking bill, have as much occasion to rejoice today as Pythagoras had to celebrate 24 centuries ago, because the stranglehold of the fleshless fingers of parliamentary rigor mortis in which this proposed legislation has been held for the last 6 months has at last been miraculously broken, and the Senate is now about to consider this measure on its merits.

A recent book lists the motion-picture industry as the fourth greatest in America from the standpoint of wealth. But from the point of view of the religious, moral, and mental training of the people, the importance of this agency transcends that of all others, excepting the churches and the schools. On the average, 88,000,000 people of the United States see at least one picture every week in the year. Thirty million of these are under the age of 21. In the congested sections of the great cities, 17 percent of all moving-picture theatergoers are under the age of 14. The influence upon the minds of these young patrons of the movies defies exaggeration.

Mr. President, the bill before us is designed to prohibit the trade practices known as the compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce. It is identical with a bill that was passed by the Senate a year ago by a majority of more than 10 to 1.

During the last 11 years the appropriate committees of the Senate and House have conducted five comprehensive hearings on anti-block-booking measures. Every feature of the bill has been repeatedly considered. Every question relevant to its operation has been answered again and again.

Ever since 1928 there has been a constantly increasing public demand for this legislation.

Religious, educational, and welfare organizations with millions of members are today hopefully looking to the Congress for relief from the two indefensible trade practices of the moving-picture industry which the supporters of the bill seek to abolish.

In all the 11 years that have elapsed since the first hearing on an anti-block-booking bill, the opposition has advanced no new arguments and has adduced few new facts that have any bearing on the merits of the case. The only new points made this year are:

First. That due to disturbed conditions in Europe and Asia, the foreign business of the industry has declined, and therefore no additional burden should be placed upon it; and Second. That the industry has initiated a program of self-regulation which makes unnecessary the enactment of the bill.

Unfortunately for the first contention, on the very day that it was advanced by Mr. S. R. Kent, the president of the Twentieth Century-Fox Corporation, the Treasury Department released a statement showing the fabulous salaries paid to the various stars and executives, including Mr. Kent, from the extraordinary profits of the Moving Picture Trust. Mr. Pettijohn, counsel for the Hays organization, in replying to a question by the Senator from Kentucky, said:

> We have gained in South America almost as much, if not as much, as we have lost in Germany and Italy.

The proposals made by the major companies in pursuance of their plan for self-regulation are not satisfactory because the relief which they suggest does not even approximate the objectives of the bill.

The proposals, as usual, simply represent an effort by the trust to create sentiment against legislation by the Congress or prosecutions in the courts.

PRACTICES DEFINED

To define the evils at which the bill is aimed is to condemn them. To understand them is to oppose them. Compulsory block booking is the practice whereby each of the principal motion-picture distributors, known as the Big Eight, leases to the independent exhibitors its production of pictures for the ensuing year in large blocks, thus affording the exhibitors no choice but to accept all or reject all of the films so offered.

The Department of Justice, in the Government's verified bill of complaint filed in the Federal court last year, supplies the following authoritative definition and observations:

> Block-booking is a practice whereby unaffiliated or independent exhibitors are compelled to take blocks or groups of pictures in order to obtain any of them. Compulsory block-booking, such as is enforced against the independent exhibitor, should not be confused with voluntary block-booking whereunder a group or block of pictures is purchased as the result of a voluntary agreement freely entered into between distributor and exhibitor. Block-booking is seldom, if ever, enforced by the producer-exhibitor defendants against each other. On the contrary, the exhibition contracts between and among the defendants herein are usually placed upon a selective basis, whereunder each defendant and its affiliated theaters may play such product or pictures of the other, or others, as it may select. In the case of the independent exhibitor, however, he is compelled to contract and pay for a whole block or group of pictures in order to obtain any of them which he may desire. This practice has the effect of imposing upon the independent exhibitor a great number of pictures that are not desired by him, and tends to arbitrarily fill up and consume his screen time, thus preventing him from securing other pictures through other distributors.

A more relevant or convincing argument in favor of the bill than the Department of Justice has thus made it would be difficult to conceive and impossible to phrase.

If compulsory block booking is so baneful that the Big Eight protect their own 2,500 theaters against it, why should the trust be permitted to afflict 15,000 independents with it?

To forestall the argument that the pendency of the suit mentioned constitutes a reason for delaying the passage of the bill, let me emphasize the fact that this litigation, even if successful, would not, for reasons specified at page 15 of the committee report, afford the effective relief which would flow from the legislation under consideration.

The purpose of the bill and the objective of the Government's suit are complementary and not antagonistic to each other.

Blind selling is the trade practice by means of which the Big Eight lease their moving pictures to the independent exhibitors, usually before the pictures are produced, and with little or no information concerning their quality or the nature of the stories embodied in them. Thus the independent exhibitor, in leasing a feature picture, must, in effect, "buy a pig in a poke."

At the beginning of a selling season each of the Big Eight announces an average of 52 feature pictures for release during the ensuing year, which extends from the 1st of September to the 31st of August. Formerly these announcements consisted of highly illustrated books, which, with an extravagance of superlatives, set forth the money-making potentialities of the attractions to be released. Only a few pictures were ever identified by titles and practically no descriptive matter accompanied them.

The announcement books were destitute of information that would enable an exhibitor to determine whether the pictures offered would be suitable for his patrons, and devoid of assurance that the pictures vaguely indicated in them would ever be produced. All such announcements contained the substance of the following, which appears in Warner Bros.' book for the 1937–38 season:

> The information supplied herein is intended only as an indication of material which may be produced and individuals who may appear in motion pictures, and is not a representation made by the distributor to induce any exhibitor to enter into a contract.

It thus appears that the sole purpose of these announcements was to beguile the exhibitors into signing contracts for the output of the companies which issued them, but which expressly exempted themselves from responsibility for their contents.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not as familiar with this subject as is the Senator from West Virginia, and I have not been a member of the committee which considered it. In the event the Senator's bill becomes law, to what extent, if any at all, will it increase the price of pictures to the exhibitors?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion it will never increase picture prices. The efforts of the trust to create a false impression concerning this matter will be discussed later if time permits.

At one time all pictures were identified in the contracts between the distributors and exhibitors by title. If a picture bearing the contract title did not conform to its identification, or if the stars advertised to be featured in it did not appear, the exhibitor could cancel it on the ground that it was a substitution. But the practice of identifying pictures in the leases even by title has been discontinued. For the 1937–38 season one producer identified six pictures in this manner. To the best of my information not one of the Big Eight identified a single picture by title in its contracts for the present year.

In brief, it appears that blind selling has steadily increased until it is now complete.

Congress has passed numerous label laws requiring full disclosure of the contents of many commodities. Section 4 of the bill is simply a label law for moving pictures. The law requires food, drugs, fertilizer, insecticides, and prison-made goods to be labeled. Is it not as important to protect the minds and the morals of children against known means of subversion as it is to protect the farmers against adulterated fertilizer or the public against prison-made goods?

Under the standard contracts used by the Big Eight, the distributor covenants that he will release not more nor less than a stated number of pictures. Certain price categories are specified in the contract and the unidentified pictures are, as released and delivered, assigned to the several price brackets solely in accordance with the discretion or pleasure of the distributor. The exhibitor's benefits under the contract are limited to the assurance that he will receive an indeterminate number of unidentified pictures at prices fixed by the distributor within the limits specified in the agreement.

In no other industry is the buyer or lessee so completely at the mercy of the seller or lessor. In no other industry does monopoly so defiantly rule or imperiously reign.

The Big Eight distribute more than 80 percent of the better motion pictures released in the United States. An exhibitor in order to operate his theater successfully must have the products of three or more of these companies. In order to obtain them he must submit to distributors' terms, whatever they may be.

Of the Big Eight, one, United Artists, is simply a distributor. Columbia and Universal are both producers and distributors. Paramount, Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner Bros., and R. K. O., are both producers and distributors, and also the operators of vast chains of theaters which they own or control.

The Department of Justice, in the verified complaint before mentioned, thus summarizes conditions in the industry:

> In securing control of the motion-picture theaters of the United States, particularly the first-run metropolitan theaters and the larger and better chains of theaters, coupled with production facilities, the defendant producer-exhibitors herein have effectually monopolized the market for motion pictures upon a Nation-wide scale and have drawn unto themselves the power of effectually excluding from the market both independent producers and independent exhibitors.

In such circumstances, how can any legislator who believes in the philosophy of our antitrust laws justify his opposition to the pending bill?

THE SUPPORTERS OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

The merits of a legislative measure are frequently indicated by the character and motives of those who favor it and those who oppose it. Therefore, attention is invited to the fact that the following national religious, educational, and welfare organizations are vigorously supporting the bill:

American Association of University Women.
American Home Economics Association.
American Baptist Publication Society.
Associated Film Audiences.
Association for Childhood Education.
Board of Temperance and Social Welfare of the Disciples of Christ.
Catholic Boys' Brigade of the United States, Inc.
Catholic Central Verein of America.
Catholic Daughters of America.
Catholic Order of Foresters, Inc.
Committee on Moral and Social Welfare of the Lutheran Church in America.
Council of Women for Home Missions.
Editorial Council of the Religious Press.
Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.
Girls' Friendly Society of United States of America.
International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons, Inc.
Knights of Columbus.
Motion Picture Research Council.
National Board of Young Women's Christian Associations.
National Congress of Parents and Teachers.
National Council of Catholic Women.
National Council of Protestant Episcopal Churches.
National Education Association.
National Grange.
National Motion Picture League, Inc.
National Sentinels.
National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.
National Women's Trade Union League of America.
Service Star Legion, Inc.
Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors.
Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association.

Members of these great associations of serious and socially minded men and women frequently have cause to protest against the showing of undesirable pictures. In such cases they almost invariably find that, due to the practice of compulsory block bocking and blind selling, the exhibitors are not free agents in the selection of their programs; that they have had to buy or lease blindly and in blocks, and that to refrain from showing pictures for which they have been compelled to pay would entail a financial loss which they can seldom afford to bear. They also find that the exhibitors are helpless in the matter of obtaining many desirable pictures not included in the blocks for which they have contracted because the blocks they have been obliged to take have virtually preempted their playing time and they could not obtain the meritorious pictures of other distributors without also leasing their entire blocks, which, in the circumstances, they could not possibly use.

It is to the local exhibitor, not to far-off Hollywood or the Hays office in New York, that the people look for the satisfaction of their desires in the realm of motion-picture entertainment. If they object to the showing of a particular film, they protest to the exhibitors; if they want to see one about which they have read or heard, they apply to them. Exhibitors should at once be emancipated and deprived of the alibis to the effect that, because of compulsory block booking and blind selling they cannot supply the high quality of moving picture entertainment their patrons desire.

In a footnote on page 3 of the committee report is a long list of prominent educators and persons engaged in social and welfare work, including probation officers and judges of juvenile courts, who have unqualifiedly endorsed the bill.

Mr. Pettijohn, the spokesman for the Big Eight and the Hays organization, unable to cite a single national group that opposes the legislation, attempted to minimize the significance of the extraordinary support it has received by suggesting that there ought to be a law against anyone's taking a position on a bill which he had not read. This insinuation is annihilated by the following excerpts from the record:

The Catholic Daughters of America, after indicating the reasons for their interest, say:

> This bill has been circulated throughout our entire membership, has been studied and universally approved, and its indorsement duly authorized.

Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman, in behalf of the Motion Picture Research Council, said:

> I would like to say at this point, Mr. Chairman, that over a hundred thousand copies of the Neely bill, in one form or another, have been distributed over the country, so that people are thoroughly well-informed about it.

The representative of the National Board of Young Women's Christian Associations testified that the board, through its public-affairs committee, had "given careful consideration to the subject; studied the testimony presented at hearings" and had concluded that the bill should pass. She added:

> Interest in this measure is widespread throughout our national constituency—in cities, towns, and rural communities.

The American Home Economics Association demonstrates its clear understanding of the bill by saying in its behalf:

The opportunity to choose deliberately and wisely among competing goods is a first principle of wise spending.

The National Grange stresses the benefits which rural communities would derive from the enactment of the bill.

The National Women's Trade Union League supports the bill because it is opposed to—

Un-American monopolistic control of any industry, and especially one which has so important a bearing on the social standards of the Nation.

And who are the opponents of this legislation? Of the 34 witnesses presented by Mr. Pettijohn, 10 were industry employees; 7 were representatives of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, which is directly subsidized by the Hays Association; 14 were persons who, for the most part, represented only themselves, were marshaled by Governor Milliken, of the Hays Association, and who preach Mr. Hays' gospel of "boost the best and ignore the rest"; 1 was an exhibitor who contradicted the testimony he had given in favor of a similar bill in 1928; 1 was a chain operator known to stand well with Messrs. Hays and Pettijohn; and 1 was the junior Senator from California, the State in which the production department of the moving-picture trust is located.

The minority report emphasizes the circumstance that more witnesses appeared against the bill than for it. But the authors of the report ignore the important facts that the proponents were admonished to restrict their testimony in behalf of speedy action on the bill; and that the few witnesses who testified for it represented millions, while the witnesses against the bill represented either the moving-picture monopoly or themselves alone.

Senators who wish to make a qualitative evaluation of the testimony are urged to read the summation in behalf of the bill by Miss Katharine Van Etten Lyford, of the Massachusetts Civic League, which appears at pages 520–530 and 532–547 of the record. Her analysis was devastating in the superlative degree. It included the following:

In regard to Mr. Pettijohn's ladies—those who were passing through Washington and stayed a week in order to testify, those who had to testify before their trains left and were still with us next day—those who came to take pictures of the cherry blossoms, and those whom I could not help hear thanking Mr. Milliken effusively for his generous hospitality as they had enjoyed the trip so much: they are best described, I think in all kindness, as "deluded women" as in the title of an article appearing in the Christian Century, a copy of which I offer here. (Hearings, p. 553.)

In my opinion, excepting the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], every witness who appeared against the bill came to the hearing at the expense or under the auspices of the Hays office or the Big Eight producers and distributors. In my opinion, every letter or telegram sent to Washington in opposition to the bill has been, directly or indirectly, instigated by the representatives of the moving-picture trust. To the extent that such communications state any grounds of opposition, they merely repeat or reflect the propaganda concerning the bill with which the Hays organization and the Big Eight have flooded the entire country.

COMPULSORY BLOCK BOOKING IS A RECOGNIZED EVIL WITH BUT FEW DEFENDERS

The severest critics of compulsory block booking are found among publications and persons associated with the industry. The practice has no champions and few defenders.

Carl Laemmle, the grand old man of the movies, a pioneer producer and distributor and until recently the chairman of the board of Universal Pictures Corporation, of which he was the founder, speaking from years of experience, says:

Abolition of the block-booking system will be a good thing for the industry. Of course, the picture producer won't like it because it means that he will be obliged to make only good pictures. The exhibitor will not be obliged to buy the bad ones, therefore the producer who hopes to ring in a few cheaters will not have a market for them and he will be left with the "duds" on his hands. However, in the course of time, the producer will not worry if block booking is ruled out. He will not be obliged to make trash to compete with trash, but can concentrate on high-grade productions, make better pictures, and make more money.

Sam Goldwyn, maker of fine pictures, recently filed a suit against United Artists to terminate his contract with that company for the distribution of his productions because it had departed from the principle of disposing of his pictures on their merits.

Max Steuer, Goldwyn's attorney, issued this statement:

Abuse had existed in the distribution of pictures. These abuses United Artists pledged itself not to practice and if possible to completely eradicate them from the industry. It is deemed that by this action taken by the Goldwyn Corporation that result may be achieved for the industry, but particularly for United Artists.

As shown by the context, the abuse of which Mr. Goldwyn particularly complained was that of block booking.

Variety, a leading screen and stage publication, in an article entitled "Block Booking Not Showmanship" on December 14, 1938, said:

Every sales executive in the business knows too well that under block booking the weak are carried along with the strong, and if pictures of the major companies were forced to stand on their own quality as attractions and entertainment there would be an explosion in Hollywood which would eliminate the drones and properly focus approval on the real creators. * * *

* * * * * * *

Block booking is the Moloch which consumes good, bad, and indifferent product in its insatiable machinery. The wonder is not the scarcity of outstanding, smashing film hits, but that under the present system of industry operation there are any hits at all.

The Motion Picture Herald for December 17, 1938, carried an editorial by its publisher, Martin Quigley—a motion-picture authority—which contained the following:

The industry's greatest asset is the reputation of the motion picture. It should be cherished and preserved. This most decidedly is not done when pictures which are known to be below acceptable standards are forced upon the screens of thousands of theaters, not by any demand that exists for them—on the part of either the public or the exhibitor—but rather by a system which automatically insures their distribution.

Phil Goldstone, an independent producer of motion pictures and president of the Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association, telegraphed:

Block booking has gradually killed off and almost eliminated independent production. If independent producers had a fair opportunity to market their product it would cause a complete revival of their industry and the employment of additional hundreds.

I. E. Chadwick, a distinguished producer, who expects the enactment of the bill to enable him to resume activity, says:

Abolition of block booking will emancipate the independent producer, distributor, and exhibitor, encourage competition and new capital, and reemploy hundreds now inactive and unemployed.

E. B. Derr, an independent producer, says:

I believe the elimination of block booking is a good thing for the industry in general, and it should surely improve the quality of independent production, as it should open the screens not now available to us for our product.

Several of the witnesses against the bill expressed or intimated their opposition to compulsory block booking and blind selling, but insisted that the bill does not provide the proper means of eliminating these evils. For example, Russell Potter, who read a paper for the National Board of Review, which appraises motion pictures for a price, engaged in the following colloquy:

Senator NEELY. Your board is in favor of block booking and blind selling?

Dr. POTTER. No; not necessarily. I have not said that. I did not intend to imply that.

Senator NEELY. Is it in favor of those two practices or against them?

Dr. POTTER. Senator, I cannot speak for the board on that; I don't know.

Senator NEELY. Are you personally in favor of block booking and blind selling, or opposed to them?

Dr. POTTER. Personally, I am opposed.

Mr. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who testified against the bill, nevertheless said:

We are all agreed, including myself, that the uniform and inflexible application of compulsory block booking and blind selling to our business is highly objectionable.

Strangely enough the exhibitors whom I represent, who oppose the Neely bill, are utterly opposed to compulsory block booking and blind selling. We are not at all unsympathetic with all ostensible purpose of this legislation.

THE BILL, IF ENACTED, WILL SPEEDILY CURE THE TWIN EVILS, BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING

The bill is designed to accomplish its purpose of prohibiting compulsory block booking and blind selling without imposing any form of governmental regulation or censorship on the motion-picture industry. Rules of conduct are prescribed which may be enforced by the Federal district courts by means of civil or criminal proceedings. No new or expensive regulatory board or commission is to be created, and no appropriation is requested or desired.

The bill declares that compulsory block booking and blind selling are contrary to public policy, because they—

(a) Interfere with the free and informed selection of films on the part of exhibitors;
(b) Prevent the people of local communities from influencing such selection in the best interests of the public; and
(c) Tend to create a monopoly in the production, distribution, and exhibition of films.

Section 3 makes it unlawful for a distributor to require an exhibitor to lease all of a block of films in order to obtain the few that he desires, and forbids the fixing of prices in a manner that would operate to defeat the purpose of the bill.

Section 4 provides that it shall be unlawful for a distributor to lease or offer to lease any film over 2,000 feet in length—that is, any feature film—without furnishing the exhibitor, at or before the time of making such lease or offer to lease, a synopsis of the contents of the film.

The bill is limited in its application to films leased for public exhibition in the course of interstate commerce. It expressly excludes from its operation newsreels, short subjects, and cartoons such as are produced by the eminent Walt Disney. The enforcement provisions are identical with those of the Sherman antitrust law, which has been on the statute books for almost 50 years. The measure becomes effective 12 months after its enactment.

Under the proposed law the exhibitors will be supplied the information necessary to enable them to choose the pictures that will please and refuse those that will offend their patrons. There is no reason to doubt that exhibitors will be kept fully informed relative to what those most concerned desire to see and wish to be spared from seeing on the silver screen.

Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman, legislative chairman of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, testified:

There is no question but that when community freedom in the selection of films is achieved, parent-teacher associations and thousands of civic groups supporting the Neely bill will engage enthusiastically in making their influence effectively felt with their local motion-picture exhibitors. The long-standing and deep-seated indignation regarding present practices is sufficient evidence that a consistently better product is desired. Passage of the Neely bill will permit the attainment of long-thwarted ideals.

Col. H. A. Cole, of Dallas, president of the Allied States Association, thus spoke to the point:

As an exhibitor who has been in the business for 20 years, and as a leader who has talked with scores of exhibitors and known the operation of a local theater, I wish to state * * * undesirable pictures would certainly not be run in the theater where the community at all expressed its feelings in reference to them if the exhibitor himself has the power to make the selection.

Opponents of the bill criticize it on the grounds that it establishes no standard for the guidance of exhibitors and communities in the selection of pictures, and that existing standards are high enough.

One of the merits of the bill lies in the fact that it does not atempt to fix standards or establish censorship. The bill aims at freedom, not regulation. The ideal of the supporters and the sponsor of the bill has been happily stated by the distinguished journalist, Mr. Walter Lippmann, as follows:

I would rest reform of the movies on this basic principle: That audiences shall have greater freedom to choose their pictures and that artists and producers shall have greater freedom to make pictures. Within the obvious limits of the ordinary law about obscenity and provocation to crime, the best regulation would be that exercised by the customers at the box office. The best way to improve the movies would be to open the door to intense competition by independent and experimenting producers.

If the customers had freedom of choice, each community would be able to enforce the moral standards it believes in. Each exhibitor would have to take the business risk of estimating correctly the tastes of his customers, and educators, dramatic critics, moral leaders in each community would be able to exert effectively whatever influence they can command.

The composite good taste of the public is certainly to be preferred to that of the motion-picture producers. The influence of the screen on education, morals, and customs is much too great to be left in the hands of a few men in Hollywood, however worthy they may be. Experience and the facts of the record prove that with rare exceptions the public, if given a fair opportunity to express its desires, chooses the best in motion-picture entertainment.

Dr. Fred Eastman, associate editor of the Christian Century and an enthusiastic supporter of the bill, points out that—

The fact that every one of the 10 best-paying pictures last year was on the approved list of practically every group which appraises pictures is convincing evidence that the public supports the better pictures. There are, of course, occasional exceptions to this, but they are only occasional.

Admission by the proponents that moral standards of the movies have increased since 1934 has been tortured into a concession that present standards are satisfactory, and that the bill presents no moral issue. The facts are that public indignation at the salacious films released by the Big Eight reached a climax in 1934, when, under the auspices of the Catholic Church, the Legion of Decency was formed. The legion is said to have obtained pledges from communicants of the church not to patronize motion pictures unless the legion had approved them. The effect of this action on Hollywood was instantaneous and salutary, and conditions improved overnight. The Hays morality code, which had been promulgated many years before and had been consistently ignored, finally was put into effect, and an industry agency known as the Breen board was created to enforce it.

The contention that this necessary step, taken under compulsion, is all that is required, overlooks the facts that present standards, while greatly improved over those which caused the revolt of 1934, are still imperfect; that many pictures are still being released which, although not strictly immoral, are highly objectionable; and that the public is entitled to choose between good pictures and bad, although no question of morality be involved.

Hollywood has not yet reached, and probably never will reach, a standard to which all can subscribe. Charles B. Foelsch, in an article in the Lutheran Quarterly for October 1938 entitled "Toward Better Motion Pictures," speaks of the revolt of 1934, and adds:

Definite as the improvement has been, there are still too many films produced that prostitute the motion picture's potentially wholesome possibilities. Evaluation of films by recognized agencies, published week by week by numerous periodicals, include too many "weighed in the balance and found wanting" comments—"poor," "unsuitable," "certainly not," "cheap," "vulgar," "unwholesome," "mediocre," "doubtful value."

The Boston Post for April 26, 1938, under a New York date line, says:

Sam Goldwyn thinks the Hollywood motion-picture industry smells to high heaven. He said so, very vehemently, when he returned on the Queen Mary today * * *.

"It used to be," said Goldwyn, "that you could go to a movie theater and only expect that one picture would be bad. Now you got to expect both of them will be terrible."

Frank Nugent, dramatic critic for the New York Times, in an article in that paper dated March 5, 1939, declared:

These are the ides of March, but anyone who has weathered the preceding 2 months in the movies has nothing to fear.

After mentioning a "happy handful" of five good pictures and an equal number of fair ones released since the 1st of January, he continues:

And beyond these the record grows increasingly grim, smudged with such opera as "King of the Underworld," "Disbarred," "Homicide Bureau," "Federal Man-Hunt," "St. Louis Blues," "Beauty for the Asking," etc. * * *

Hollywood still seems to be pursuing its old production policy: Turning out four class B pictures for every class A.

Harrison's Reports, a motion-picture trade paper, of May 13, 1939, says:

Let us glance at the crime pictures that have been reviewed in Harrison's Reports since the first week in January: In the 19 weeks since the first week in January, 142 pictures have been reviewed. Of these 82 * * * have been founded on some kind of crime theme—either murder or stealing. Of course, not all of them are demoralizing—perhaps one-third of this number is harmless; but when one takes into consideration the extraordinary high percentage of vicious crime pictures, one wonders whether the Hollywood producers realize what the outcome may be.

The New York Times for the 25th of June brought the subject to date by the following, which was written in Hollywood by Mr. Harold Heffernan:

Those in a position to know declare the movies have lost 10 percent of their audiences because producers have stubbornly persisted in making gangster pictures. They estimate, too, that another 10 percent, possibly more, has been lost because of the many remade stories parading under different titles.

In the light of this symposium, it becomes as clear as the noonday that by enacting the bill the Congress would help to rescue the moving-picture industry from the indignation of a disgusted people, and save Hollywood from its perishing self.

THE CONTENTIONS OF THE OPPOSITION

The contention that compulsory block booking is not practiced: The opponents of the bill admit blind selling, and attempt to justify it. But the industry's representatives contend that compulsory block booking is not practiced, and that the number of films leased by an exhibitor is simply the result of negotiations between him and the distributor. This contention is conclusively disproved by the evidence in the record.

Additional proof on the point is contained in a memorandum by Assistant Attorney General Harold M. Stephens, now a justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which, on the 2d of March 1936 was transmitted to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and appears at page 83 of the record of the House hearing on an anti-block-booking bill.

In the memorandum, Judge Stephens contributes this pertinent comment:

During the course of extensive investigations growing out of complaints by exhibitors that the Federal antitrust laws had been violated, it has been found that the practices of block booking, blind selling, and blind booking are widely used by the motion-picture producing and distributing companies, and place the exhibitors, especially the independent exhibitors, at a disadvantage in dealing with the producer-distributors. * * *

After showing that under the decision in the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation (57 Fed. (2d) 153), it would be necessary for the Government to prove that these practices were utilized as a result of a conspiracy among the several distributors in order to maintain an action against them under the Sherman law, Judge Stephens added:

Nevertheless, the practices of block booking, blind selling, and blind booking appear to have curbed independence of action by the independent exhibitors. * * *

* * * * * * *

Because of the close relationship of the motion-picture industry as a whole with the practices mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs and their direct effect upon the distribution and exhibition of motion-picture films, it is believed that legislation affecting block booking, blind selling, or blind booking should be sustained by the courts.

According to the affidavit attached to the bill filed by the Department of Justice against the Big Eight last year, the complaint was based on—statements and correspondence of the defendants and their officers and agents and others, the statements and official reports of Government investigators, and other records, reports, and information relating to the motion-picture industry in the possession of the Department of Justice.

In view of this evidence and the trust's persistent, frantic opposition to the abolition of the practice of block booking, it seems impossible for anyone in good faith to doubt the existence of this evil, or the necessity for a law to end it.

Mr. Pettijohn, in support of the contention that the independent exhibitors are not subject to block booking, produced some figures purporting to show the number of engagements or runs which certain pictures of the Big Eight companies had in the theaters.

The proponent of these figures fails to state whether they relate to independent theaters or those which are operated by the trust. Consequently, they are utterly worthless so far as the present issue is concerned, because, as shown by the Government's bill of complaint in the suit previously mentioned, the trust theaters are not subject to compulsory block booking. The discrepancies noted are perhaps almost entirely due to the privileges of acceptance and rejection enjoyed by the producer theaters under their selective contracts. I will now discuss the contention that exhibitors in selecting films will be controlled by commercial considerations and that standards will not be raised. The opponents contend that the facts show that exhibitors rarely cancel box-office successes, no matter how objectionable they may be and cancel the box-office "duds" regardless of their virtues. From this contention the opposition deduces the conclusion that if the bill were enacted, exhibitors, in exercising their right of cancelation, would be controlled exclusively by commercial considerations and that existing standards would not be raised.

The conclusion is fallacious because it appears that the alleged "facts" concerning cancelations relate to "rejections" and "failures to play," and consequently they are subject to the same infirmity that vitiates the figures considered under the preceding caption.

In other words, the opposition merely named pictures which had received many or few play dates; and since it was not shown whether the theaters involved were independents or trust-controlled, the illustration was of no evidential value.

It must be borne in mind that when these selections and rejections were made by the producer-owner or controlled theaters, the organizations and groups which are supporting the bill, and which, after its enactment, will exercise a wholesome influence over the exhibitors, were not functioning.

The contention that section 3 of the bill is unworkable and will lead to Government price fixing: The minority report contains a hypertechnical criticism of section 3, the substance of which appeared in a brief circulated by the Hays association while a similar bill was before the Senate last year. The burden of this criticism is to the effect that the section is unworkable, will subject distributors to severe penalties without prescribing standards of conduct, and will result in governmental price fixing.

In stressing the penalty clause the minority overlooked section 5 (2) of the bill, which provides for proceedings in equity. In proper or doubtful cases the Attorney General would certainly resort to civil rather than criminal proceedings to enforce the law.

Sufficient justification for the enforcement provisions of the bill is found in the fact that they are verbatim with those of the Sherman Act.

It is argued that under section 3 the distributor cannot know whether a price differential which he quotes will "operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease * * * such films * * * as he may desire."

This argument is equivalent to a complaint by the producers and distributors against a rule which the law requires all other types of business to obey. The moving-picture industry is not affected by the Robinson-Patman Act because the law applies only to sales in interstate commerce and motion-picture films are distributed by lease instead of by sale. But the industries that are subject to the act must, at their peril, continually make determinations that are as difficult as any that are required by the pending bill. For example, they must fix their discounts so as to avoid discrimination between customers and limit such discounts to the economies actually realized through volume sales.

All industries subject to section 3 of the Clayton Act, in establishing price differentials, are obliged to solve a problem identical with that which will confront the motion-picture distributors when the bill becomes a law. For section 3 of this bill, like section 3 of the Clayton Act, deals with the compulsion exerted upon a buyer's discretion by subjecting him to a penalty for making a certain choice, or granting him a bonus for making another.

The bill is not only similar to the Clayton Act in language, but the objectives of both measures are practically the same. By the Clayton Act, business in general is prohibited from making contracts with its customers to the effect that they will not use the goods, wares, and merchandise of competitors of the sellers or lessees. But the "big eight," by means of compulsory block booking, evade the act and achieve what it forbids by forcing so many of their pictures on the exhibitors that they cannot find playing time for the products of competing distributors. Should not the immunity to the penalties of the law which the motion-picture industry has so long enjoyed be discontinued without delay?

The enemies of the bill attempt to make much of the fact that section 3 embodies the substance of an order issued by the Federal Trade Commission in a proceeding against Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation about 12 years ago. The fact that this order was not sustained by the circuit court to which the Commission applied for an enforcement order is proof of the inadequacy of existing statutes to remedy the evils which will be prohibited by the bill when it becomes a law.

The necessity for additional law is made manifest by the following excerpts from Judge Stephens' memorandum previously mentioned:

It has been held by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit that where one distributor refused to lease films other than in groups or blocks, there was no violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, since the distributor of motion-picture films may select its own customers and sell such quantities at given prices or refuse to sell to any particular person for personal reasons without being subject to charges of unfair competition (Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, et al., 57 Fed. (2d) 152). In view of this decision, in order to successfully attack such practices under the antitrust laws, it would be incumbent upon the plaintiff to demonstrate concerted action among two or more of the producer-distributors, and because of the type of practices involved, it is difficult to obtain legally sufficient evidence of a combination among the motion-picture companies to impose such terms on exhibitors. Nevertheless, the practices of block booking, blind selling, and blind booking appear to have curbed independence of action by exhibitors.

The complaint that the words "designated lump-sum price" will not cover a block that includes a number of pictures supplied at a rental which is a specified percentage of future box-office receipts is a captious objection that pertains to the form and not to the substance of the bill. "Twenty-five percent" or "thirty-five percent of the gross receipts" states an understandable price in the language of the motion-picture industry. An increase in percentage is an increase in price; a reduction of percentage is a reduction of price.

But as a gratuitous appeasement to the opposition, an effort will be made, at the proper time, to eliminate the ground of this objection by proposing the following amendments.

On page 4, at the end of section 2 insert this paragraph:

(7) The terms "aggregate price" and "price" as used in section 3 (1) shall mean the aggregate of all flat rentals, and of all rentals based upon a percentage of prospective receipts together with any other consideration named in the lease or offer to lease.

On pages 4 and 5, strike out all of section 3 (1) and insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. (1) It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more films and to require the exhibitor to lease all such films or permit him to lease none; or to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more at an aggregate price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films, or for a number or numbers thereof less than the total number, which aggregate price and separate and several prices shall bear to each other such relation (a) as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire and prefer to procure for exhibition, or (b) as tends to require an exhibitor to lease such entire block or group or forego the lease of any number or numbers thereof, or (c) that the effect of the lease or offer to lease of such films may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the production, distribution, and exhibition of films; or to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in any other manner or by any other means the effect of which would be to defeat the purpose of this act.

The contention that section 4 of the bill is unworkable and will prevent the production of fine pictures; will force the selling of completed pictures one at a time after preview; and will increase the price of pictures and reduce employment. This is a most duplicitous complaint. If the producers, as predicted, abandon fine productions under the bill, it will obviously be unnecessary to await the completion of pictures that will never be made, and in their naked nonexistence "sell them one at a time." If the producers adopt the threatened revolutionary selling methods and abandon voluntary block booking—thus increasing the work of distribution—employment would consequently and inevitably be increased, not diminished.

All objections to section 4—the synopsis provision—including those in the minority report are based on the wording of the bill in its present form. The labored attempt of the minority to prove that this section would be unworkable stresses language which the sponsor of the bill is willing to modify, because the particular phraseology used is not indispensable to the attainment of the principal purposes of the legislation. Therefore, at the proper time, the following substitute for section 4 will be proposed:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition any motion-picture film or films over 2,000 feet in length unless such distributor shall furnish the exhibitor at or before the time of making such lease or offer to lease an accurate synopsis of the contents of such film. Such synopsis shall be made a part of the lease and shall include (a) a general outline of the story and descriptions of the principal characters, and (b) a statement describing the manner of treatment of dialogs concerning and scenes depicting vice, crime, or suggestive of sexual passion. It is the purpose of this section to make available to the exhibitor sufficient information concerning the type and contents of the film and the manner of treatment of questionable subject matter to enable him to determine whether he wishes to select the film for exhibition and later to determine whether the film is fairly described by the synopsis.

Those opposed to the bill attempt to fortify their stock arguments against it by reference to two pictures. They enlarge upon the difficulties experienced in finding an actor to play the part of Micawber in David Copperfield. During the production of the film, W. C. Fields was substituted for Charles Laughton. Of course, there is nothing in the bill to prevent the substitution of one actor for another.

Alexander Graham Bell is the other picture used to illustrate the alleged disasters that would result from the abolition of blind selling.

Colonel Joy, formerly of the Hays organization, but now with Twentieth Century-Fox, described the development of the scenario in detail. But nothing in his long narrative indicates that the producer could not have supplied in advance a general outline of the story portrayed by the film. It would have been neither more nor less than a brief account of the life of Bell, his early struggles, the romance of his courtship and marriage, his invention of the telephone, and his efforts to protect his right to his great achievement.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. What does the Senator from West Virginia, the sponsor of this bill, say as to the argument which is pretty generally put forth that the passage of the bill will make rarer in the future such great productions as Cavalcade, Abraham Lincoln, and other outstanding pictures?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion, the enactment of the bill will not decrease but tend to increase the number of outstanding productions. Unfortunately for me, the Senator from New Hampshire, who is always interested in important legislation, was not in the Chamber when I read informative excerpts from a number of moving-picture authorities and publications. These excerpts indicate that moving pictures would be improved as a result of the enactment of the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Just how do they arrive at that conclusion? It is my understanding—and I am merely trying to get an intelligent comprehension of the effect of the bill—that if the producers could not sell their pictures, we will say, in block or by future contract, then, there would be no guaranty that if they produced certain pictures at tremendous expense, the pictures would be sold, therefore, there would be less likelihood of the producers taking the chance involved in the production of high-class pictures.

Mr. NEELY. If the bill is passed, producers will find it necessary to sell their pictures on their merits. They should, and doubtless will, assume the risk to which the proprietors of all other industries are subject, namely, the loss of patrons and profits for failure to supply satisfactory commodities.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator will yield further, I do not desire to interrupt his trend of thought, but there are one or two questions that I want to ask.

I have had various communications, for example, regarding such a picture as Jesse James, complaining on the ground that in the picture horses were supposedly driven off a cliff, and that the horses were killed in the jump. Would the Senator's bill correct that situation, for example?

Mr. NEELY. The Senator means, would it prevent cruelty to animals?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Frankly, it would not. The bill establishes no censorship. If it did, neither the able Senator from New Hampshire nor I would support it. The bill is not designed to regulate the industry. Its sole purpose is to prohibit the specific monopolistic practices of block booking and blind selling.

Mr. BRIDGES. There is one other problem about which I should like to inquire of the Senator, and that is whether, in his judgment, his bill would bring about an increase in admission prices. I have had several complaints, in the form of letters and telegrams, and so forth, stating that if the bill were enacted, the admission prices to be charged the public in the future, particularly in some places and some classes of theaters, would have to be materially raised. I wish to know if that is true, and, if it is true, whether it will not put a serious burden on the one modest form of entertainment that a large group of people in this country have—in fact, a large part of our population.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion, the enactment of the bill will not increase the price of admission to motion-picture theaters.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe that if the bill were enacted, it would not only have a tendency to improve, but it actually would improve the morality of pictures; or does he believe that when it allowed the average exhibitor in some cities, we will say, to cater to a group of persons in his community—who perhaps may be small in most communities—who like to see rather risqué pictures, it would give certain exhibitors a little more leeway in that respect? I mean, will it or will it not work both ways?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion a result of the enactment of the bill will be greatly improved moving pictures.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has not answered my question. I do not know whether he cares to do so or not.

In the Senator's judgment, will the passage of the bill do what a great many worthy people in this country believe it will do, namely, will it have a tendency to improve the moral standing, we will say, of pictures?

Mr. NEELY. Yes. If I did not think so I should not be pleading for its passage.

Mr. BRIDGES. Just how will it do that?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I explained that matter to the Senator a year ago. I am sorry that he has forgotten the explanation. It will accomplish the desired purpose by emancipating the independent exhibitors from the slavery of block booking and blind selling. Thereafter, the exhibitors will lease and show only the pictures which their patrons desire. As people of good taste are in the majority everywhere, they will demand and their exhibitors will supply pictures designed to elevate moral standards instead of degrading them.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I ask the Senator another question? Let us take a typical example, not in my home town or home State or in the home town or home State of the Senator from West Virginia. Let us take another city somewhere, in the case of which we have not a knowledge of the status of the people as familiarly in our minds as in our own communities or in our own State. If an exhibitor felt that by exhibiting a Mae West picture he could draw a big gate, even though the picture perhaps might not be the type of picture that some persons in the community would like to have their children see, would not that be the tendency of the exhibitors, rather than to show, perhaps, a picture with not such a well-known name?

Mr. BRIDGES. I gather from what the Senator says that exhibitor's desire. But the law of self-preservation would assert itself, and under its influence the exhibitor would cater to the desire of the better element in his community and show pictures that would harmonize with the Christianity and culture of the locality his theater served.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not mean to imply by these remarks that a Mae West picture is necessarily a bad picture in any sense of the word. I am referring to a Mae West picture as purely an example. I judge entirely from some that I have seen, as perhaps not being in the same class with other pictures I have seen having as the main characters some other actors or actresses.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, resuming at the point at which I was interrupted.

Only one alteration in the development of the Story of Alexander Graham Bell, as related by Colonel Joy, might have been at variance with the synopsis that would be required by the bill if it should be amended in accordance with the proposals previously described; and that variance would have arisen from the fact that a new character was added to the cast.

If the bill had been a law, doubtless all concerned could have been reconciled to this slight change in the cast of characters by means of ordinary negotiations, without serious difficulty, and without any of the Moving Picture Trust's million-dollar-a-year officials having been fined or sent to jail.

The attention of the Senate is now invited to the extraordinary efforts of the Big Eight and the Hays organization to defeat the bill by means that will perhaps be more effective than the argumentation of the opposition which has just been considered. These efforts on an extensive scale began in the year 1935, when a predecessor of Senate bill 280, known as the Pettengill bill, was before the House of Representatives. At that time an officer or an employee of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer circulated among independent exhibitors a form letter, which contained the following:

> Do you want churches, schools, and civic organizations, who do not pay taxes, put on a competitive basis with you?
> Do you want the Government to run the motion-picture business?
> Do you want the machinery of motion-picture supply set up on a day-to-day basis so that your requirements cannot be assured further ahead than the photoplays which are currently in the process of production?

Of course, the bill never expressed nor implied an intention to accomplish or attempt to accomplish any of these purposes.

The letter in question also said:

> If you are acquainted with your Congressman, approach him personally. If not, write to him, as well as to the chairman and members of the committee listed on an attached sheet. And get your banker, your chamber of commerce, your Kiwanis or Rotary Club, and others with whom you have social or business contact to do likewise.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment in order that I may put the record straight, I may say that I have received many communications from both sides. Many of the very fine people of New Hampshire are in favor of the Senator's bill, and many of the fine people of New Hampshire are opposed to it, but I have heard from both sides, and probably with equal force.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from New Hampshire has heard from the people, and I sincerely hope that for once he will vote with them instead of with the Moving Picture Trust. Let me warn the Senator, who is mentioned as a probable nominee for President on the Republican ticket, that neither he nor any other member of his party should in existing circumstances be deluded into believing that the Big Eight or the Hays organization will finance any Republican candidates in 1940. In my opinion the cards have been stacked hopelessly against the Grand Old Party in this matter. It is superfluous for me to add that I have not helped to do the stacking. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. I gather from what the Senator says that most of the so-called Motion Picture Trust in California is not only Democratic, New Deal, but Roosevelt.

Mr. NEELY. Oh, no, Mr. President; the motion-picture magnates are neither Democratic nor Republican. They have no politics. They make alliances, if possible, with whatever party is in power, and contribute most to the primary campaign funds of those who are believed to be able to help them most. But, to the best of my information, a majority of the weathiest motion-picture producers profess to be Republicans.

Mr. BRIDGES. When I used the name "Roosevelt" I did not have reference to President Roosevelt, but I did have reference to James Roosevelt, his eldest son, who is now the $50,000 or $100,000 executive of one of the picture companies.

Mr. NEELY. Of course, the Senator from New Hampshire will not expect me to be diverted to that matter, because I know nothing about it excepting that I am very fond of the estimable gentleman whom the Senator has named. Let me suggest to my friend from New Hampshire that he comment on the employment by the moving-picture trust of two prominent former members of Republican Presidents' Cabinets, or that he inquire of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who intends to speak against the bill, about the employment of former Governor Milliken, who is now with Mr. Hays' organization and apparently rendering it yeoman service in the matter of opposing the pending bill.

Mr. President, in the record, at pages 584 to 588, appear pertinent and more recent letters than those previously mentioned. They are addressed to independent exhibitors by Mr. S. R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox; Mr. Ned Depinet, vice president of R. K. O.; and former Gov. Carl E. Milliken, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. These communications all stress the contention that there is no justification for the bill and threaten that, if it becomes a law, the exhibitors will be compelled to buy their pictures "one by one" after they have been screened at a branch office in a film center. They all contain importunities to the recipients to write to their Senators to oppose the bill and to send copies of their letters to the executives who request this barrage of opposition correspondence.

As support for the bill increases throughout the country by leaps and bounds, the opposition grows more desperate. In my possession are letters from independent exhibitors in New Hampshire to the effect that they have recently received calls from the managers of the M. & P. circuit, a Paramount subsidiary, urging them to oppose the bill on the ground that it will necessitate coming to Boston to buy pictures one at a time and would increase film rental and booking charges by 25 percent.

Mr. President, I send to the desk two exhibits, marked "A" and "B," relating to this, and ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULOW in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibits A and B.)

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, these threats of the trust's officials are idle, because to sell pictures one at a time would unnecessarily dislocate the business and call for vast increases of capital, which it is doubtful whether even the Big Eight could supply. Furthermore, the amendments to be offered will entirely eliminate the element of risk, if any there be, in connection with the synopsis.

The suggestion with which the much-photographed actor, Mr. Robert Montgomery, enriched the hearing to the effect that the enactment of the bill will reduce employment is truly the high light of the comedy of errors in which the trust has reveled ever since it began to oppose the abolition of its blighting monopolistic practices of block booking and blind selling. This contention has not only been completely answered by Messrs. Chadwick, Goldstone, and Derr, the independent producers, who are looking to this bill to clear the channels of interstate commerce so that they can find an open market for their productions, increase their output, and give employment to hundreds who are now idle, but the argument on its face is in conflict with common sense. To improve moving pictures, as the bill will do, will be to increase the demand for them. To satisfy the increased demand will require additional employees and result in increased employment.

The contention that the bill is unnecessary because of the trade-practice proposals submitted by the Big Eight. A short time before the beginning of the last hearings, the major distributors brought forth a voluntary trade practice code which has been suggested as a substitute for the bill. The proposals contained in the code are, in the opinion of the proponents, wholly inadequate to protect the interests of the exhibitors or the public.

The negotiating committee of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors has, in a report recently made, recommended the rejection of these proposals. This report was approved by the board of directors of the association and by more than 300 exhibitors from all parts of the United States who attended the annual convention of the association in Minneapolis 3 weeks ago. The grounds on which the rejection was ordered are stated as follows:

(1) They do not provide an effective remedy for the major abuses of which Allied States Association has complained and for the correction of which it has waged a long, aggressive, and increasingly successful campaign.

(2) The proposals, as drafted and submitted by the distributors, do not fully and accurately reflect the substance of the negotiations and representations made by the distributors in the course thereof;

(3) Reports coming from many sections of the country show convincingly, if not, indeed, conclusively, that the distributors already are taking steps to circumvent and nullify the moderate concessions offered; and

(4) Acceptance of the proposals, particularly in view of the preamble thereto, would handicap the exhibitors in seeking further relief from oppressive and monopolistic trade practices, would hinder the Government in the prosecution of pending actions under the antitrust laws, and would supply the distributors with additional ammunition with which to combat the Neely bill and other remedial legislation.

* * * * * * *

Based on the statement made by a principal executive of one of the major distributors at the open forum yesterday, your committee must conclude that the purpose of the distributors is to exact increased rentals which will compensate for any possible loss under the proposals. That being so, the effect of the code on the exhibitors will be to compel them to pay more money than last year for fewer pictures; or, stated differently, to require the exhibitors to pay in full for all pictures canceled under the privilege granted.

Thus if the policy declared by one of the principal executives of the Big Eight is carried out, the effect of the proposals will be to deprive the independent exhibitors of the meager cancelation privileges which they now enjoy, and require them to pay in full for all pictures canceled. This report tends to show bad faith on the part of the Big Eight in making the proposals; it shows how such proposals are being used to defeat the bill and hinder the Department of Justice in the prosecution of pending suits against the Motion Picture Trust. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the record at the conclusion of my remarks.

During the hearing, a letter from Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of the Motion Picture Research Council and ardent supporter of the bill, was read into the record by the chairman of the subcommittee. In it, Dr. Wilbur said, in effect, that if the problems to which the bill relates could be satisfactorily adjusted within the industry, such adjustment would be preferable to legislation. Since the close of the hearing, Dr. Wilbur has sent me the following telegram:

PALO ALTO, CALIF., July 6, 1939.

Senator M. M. NEELY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

During the recent hearings on the Neely bill (S. 280) before the subcommittee of the United States Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, the Motion Picture Research Council made every effort to test out the sincerity of the producer-distributors' proposals to reform voluntarily the distribution system of the industry.

By the end of the hearings we were convinced that at this time the industry had no intention of making an effective reformation.

Due to this effort on the part of the council, erroneous information appears to have been circulated that we were changing our position. On behalf of the board of directors I wish to inform you that we have not changed our stand and that we will continue to support Neely (S. 280) to eliminate compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion pictures.

RAY LYMAN WILBUR,
President, Motion Picture Research Council.

Dr. Wilbur is one Republican former Cabinet officer whom the Motion Picture Trust has not been able to employ. He is still fighting for the people, not against them.

The contention is that there is no existing monopoly of the motion-picture business and that existing laws are adequate in case there is. In an apparent attempt to refute the charge that the motion-picture industry is monopolized by the Big Eight the minority members of the subcommittee, in their report, say:

It may be significant to note that since this legislation was first introduced 10 or 12 years ago, and under the monopolistic and burdensome trade practice complained of, four new companies have established national wholesale-distribution systems for motion-picture films. These are known as Republic Pictures, Corporation, Monogram Pictures, Grand National Pictures, and Gaumont-British Pictures.

Mr. P. A. Powers, an independent motion-picture producer, who introduced Mickey Mouse, has voluntarily sent me a letter in which he supplies, in words or substance, the following information concerning the companies named:

Republic: Originally called Monogram Pictures Corporation, in considerable financial difficulty, was taken over by creditors, especially film-laboratory interests. It is reported that Republic's loss in operation last year was very serious. It has shown a continuous loss since its inception and it is only by securing new finance that it is able to keep going.

Monogram: Former owners started anew after they had turned their business over to Republic and secured some finance from Wall Street. The new Monogram has not been operating long enough for one to judge of the possible success of the venture.

Grand National: Started from "scratch" with a bank roll of approximately $2,000,000. This concern was obliged to go into receivership after a very short period. My information is that it is still in the hands of receivers.

Gaumont-British: Have been endeavoring to market Gaumont-British pictures in the United States, without any negative cost to this concern, as negatives are shipped from England. They have been unable to continue operation. That is, they have been unable to secure enough money from the sale of their pictures to pay for the print cost and selling expense. Consequently, they have also had to discontinue business.

This data from Mr. Powers indicates the remote possibility of establishing independent moving-picture production in existing circumstances.

During the last 27 years the Government has prosecuted no fewer than 20 separate proceedings against film producers and distributors in an effort to prevent the monopolization of the motion-picture business. As soon as an improper practice has been outlawed another has been adopted to take its place. Three suits by the Government against the industry are now pending. If they are successful they will accomplish much for the public and the independents in the motion-picture business. Still they will not cure the evils at which this bill is aimed.

Blind selling is not involved in any of these proceedings, nor could it be, because it is not, in itself, a restraint on commerce within the meaning of existing antitrust laws. And the abolition of block booking without the elimination of its twin evil—blind selling—would accomplish but little of the reformation which the public demands of the Motion Picture Trust. For of what avail would a right of selection be if no information were at hand upon which intelligently to exercise it? These indefensible evils require a remedy which legislation alone can provide.

The contention that action on the bill should be delayed because of pending negotiations with the Secretary of Commerce: The latest reason advanced by the opposition for delaying the passage of the bill is that the Secretary of Commerce, Hon. Harry Hopkins, recently held conferences and plans to hold others with prominent moving-picture executives and Mr. Will Hays relative to the problems of the industry, and that pending the outcome of these conferences, no legislation on the subject of block booking or blind selling should be enacted. This contention is sufficiently answered by a letter which Mr. Hopkins wrote me on the 20th day of June, a part of which is as follows:

I am greatly concerned over the rumors, speculations, and inaccurate reports appearing in the trade press as a result of conferences between officials of the Department of Commerce and individuals associated with the motion-picture industry. I am even more concerned to learn that some groups of exhibitors and organizations interested in the problems of the industry are convinced that these conferences may interfere with the consideration of the Neely bill by Congress. I, therefore, wish to make the position of the Department of Commerce so clear that there can be absolutely no misunderstanding regarding our objectives and motives.

Mr. Hopkins, after indicating that the conferences had no unusual significance and that they were held in pursuance of the recently announced policy of the Department of Commerce to cooperate with industry in the solution of its problems, says:

We have only just started our study of the motion-picture industry. We plan to confer not only with the producers but with the exhibitors and other interested groups. It will be some time before we can complete the examination of essential facts and reach sound conclusions. Congress, after the long months of consideration it has given to the subject, should not be influenced in its legislative program by the fact that we have so recently undertaken to give special attention to the problems of the motion-picture industry.

THE BILL WILL NOT INFLICT A FINANCIAL LOSS ON THE INDUSTRY

Some Senator asked whether the bill would have that effect. That the bill will not unduly interfere with the processes of production and distribution of films has been demonstrated.

The proponents confidently contend that its passage will not subject the industry to financial loss. Nothing in it can reduce the amount of playing time in the theaters. But under its operation the independent theaters will allot more of this playing time to good pictures and less of it to the bad ones that tend to incite immorality and crime. The result of this substitution of superior for inferior attractions will mean increased not diminished box-office income.

The published salary lists of the motion-picture officials show that the industry has so much money that it can virtually give it away in staggering amounts. To compel such an industry to abandon two of its oppressive monopolistic practices will cause no financial injury or distress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list of the higher-paid executives and stars, which I send to the desk, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks as exhibit C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the report of the negotiating committee, to which I have referred, be printed in the RECORD as exhibit D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit D.)

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, exhibit C—the salary list—shows, for example, that Mr. Louis B. Mayer, production director of Loew's, Inc., last year received salaries from the motion-picture industry which aggregate $1,296,503. This vast sum exceeds the combined salaries of the President of the United States, the 96 Members of the Senate, and all the members of the Supreme Court.

It is hoped that Senators will read this salary list from beginning to end, in order that they may know to their entire satisfaction that the industry's financial affairs will not be embarrassed by the abolition of block booking and blind selling.

The Securities and Exchange Commission on the 7th day of last month issued a report entitled "Selected Information on Motion Picture Producers and Distributors," the preface to which, in relation to the combined operating profit of six of the Big Eight and a small independent company, states:

A combined operating profit of forty-one millions, or 10.1 percent of sales, was reported for the fiscal year ended on or about December 31, 1937, compared with an operating profit of thirty-three millions, or 8.7 percent of sales, for the fiscal year ended on or about December 31, 1936, and twenty-four millions, or 7.2 percent of sales, for the fiscal year ended on or about December 31, 1935. These results were after combined charges for depreciation, depletion, etc., of fourteen millions, or 3.5 percent of sales, in 1937; fourteen millions, or 3.8 percent of sales, in 1936; and fourteen millions, or 4.2 percent of sales, in 1935.

Fourteen million dollars was deducted for depreciation and obsolescence, and these profits were left after that deduction.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been listening with close attention and great interest to the Senator's remarks, and am very much in sympathy with his aims and purposes. However, I am wondering whether or not it is possible to legislate intelligence and decency into the morons who jam the motion-picture theaters which show salacious, immoral, and indecent pictures. Repeatedly municipal boards of censorship have banned the showing of such pictures, and immediately the banned pictures have been advertised in surrounding areas as being clearly improper pictures. Immediately those unscrupulous and indecent theaters have been crowded with patrons. My query is, How can any law remedy the situation?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the able Senator asked a very specific question at the beginning of his inquiry, and that is, Can the Congress legislate morality into the morons who wish to see salacious pictures? Of course, the answer to that question is "No." It cannot do so directly; but indirectly the answer is "Yes," because by the passage of this bill the Congress will place the power in the hands of decent citizens, like the Senator, in every local community in the United States to protect morons against salacious films by excluding such pictures from the screens through the force of public opinion. At the present time they cannot be excluded because the exhibitors are forced to take their pictures in blocks and to buy them sight unseen.

Mr. President, not only is the industry powerful in itself but the financial roots of the Big Eight extend all the way from Wall Street to Hollywood. At pages 103 and 104 of a book entitled "Film and School" are charts which show, respectively, the direct control over the film industry by the leading financial groups, and also the indirect control over it which the great financiers exercise by virtue of their sound-patents monopoly. These charts are strikingly similar to those relating to other great industries, which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has displayed in the Senate on other memorable occasions. In both these charts the towering pillars from which all diverging financial lines emanate are labeled "Morgan" and "Rockefeller."

This multi-billion-dollar industry, nurtured in the cradle of monopoly, most potent money maker in the family of industries, is today regulating interstate commerce in motion-picture films not by constitutional authority but by virtue of the monopolistic power which it has usurped. But for the Big Eight's restrictions on commerce, exhibitors would share the freedom of the buyers of all other commodities in obtaining without restriction the desirable and refusing the undesirable. The enactment of the pending bill will simply rescue the trade and commerce of this great enterprise from strangulation by one of the most exclusive, defiant, and aggressive monopolies in the history of the world.

Mr. President, this measure has had a perilous parliamentary journey. The way has been long, the road has been rough, the delays have been numerous, the obstacles countless. The enemies have been resourceful, the discouragements infinite. But we are encouraged by the thought that every hardship has its compensation. After the wilderness came the promised land; after the darkest hour of the night comes the splendor of the morning, the glory of the sunrise, and the grandeur of a new-born day.

As a result of the long-continued struggle against the indefensible monopolistic practices of block booking and blind selling in the moving-picture industry a great battle will eventually be won, a great victory will at last be achieved, and the Motion Picture Trust will be at least partially reformed and compelled to contribute in a larger measure to the transformation of one of the greatest of industries into a greater blessing to the American people than it has ever been.

The darkest hour of this struggle has passed and now—

The morn in russet mantle clad
Walks o'er the dew on yon high eastern hill.

Success will eventually crown the arduous efforts of those who have so long labored in this vineyard, because no question is ever settled with finality in favor of the wrong. For—

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums;
Still truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Mr. ARTHUR K. HOWARD,
Independent Exhibitors, Inc.,
20 Shawmut Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR MR. HOWARD: A few days ago Mr. Al Bevans, of the M. & P. Circuit, called upon me to ask me to write my Senator and Representative to oppose the Neely bill. He told me that the passage of this bill would increase my film rental and booking charges 25 percent and that he knows his company cannot afford to increase its costs that amount and did not suppose any exhibitor could.

I told him I understood that the bill did not prevent an exhibitor from buying pictures in blocks if he so desired and he told me that distributors would refuse to sell pictures in blocks if the bill is passed because of the penalty clause. He said it would be necessary for me to spend considerable time in Boston buying and booking pictures, and where I now buy pictures on the basis of 8 or 10 percentage pictures, I would find that after I had booked them singularly, instead of having 8 or 10 percentage pictures I would have 20 during the course of a year.

I have been under the impression that the Neely bill would have no effect on exhibitors who did not desire to change their policy of buying pictures in blocks and I would like your opinion in this. Has the Neely bill been changed recently to substantiate Mr. Bevan's statement?

Very truly yours,

IOKA THEATER,

INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS, INC.,
20 Shawmut Street, Boston, Mass.

MR. HOWARD: Last Thursday Mr. Al. Bevan called at my house and was covering New Hampshire to get exhibitors to telegraph the Senators to oppose the Neely bill. His idea of the bill would be that our pictures would be sold one or two at a time and the cost would be 25 percent more expensive to operate our film account.

Of course Al is with Maine and New Hampshire and affiliated with Paramount. I have let you know so that when you hear about these telegrams you will know what has happened.

Yours very truly,

ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF
MOTION-PICTURE EXHIBITORS,
Washington, D. C., April 7, 1939.

On April 6, Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, testified before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce which is considering the Neely bill (S. 280) to prohibit the compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion pictures.

Although Charles C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Hays association, who spoke to the committee on Monday, took great pride in the gains which the industry is making in South America, Mr. Kent cited as a reason why the bill should not be passed the falling of business in Europe and Asia.

While Mr. Kent was testifying, the Treasury Department sent to Congress a report on corporate salaries paid in 1937. This report, according to today's Evening Star (Washington, D. C.), disclosed that "movie companies paid 40 of the 63 salaries of $200,000 or more.

It is pertinent to consider these salaries in the light of the opposition to the bill offered by the New York executives and Hollywood stars. It is fair to say that Mr. Kent's salary was one of the more modest ones—$179,220—only a little over $100,000 more than was received by the President of the United States.

Louis B. Mayer, production director of Loew's, Inc., topped the salary list with $1,161,753. This was complemented, according to the article, by another $134,750 which Mr. Mayer received as vice president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Mayer received considerably more than the Government paid to the entire membership of the United States Senate.

Loew's, Inc. (represented at the hearing by William F. Rodgers), apparently was the most generous with its executives and stars. In addition to its payments to Mr. Mayer, it was able to pay J. M. Rubin, a vice president, $651,123, putting him second on the list. Fourth on the list was Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., who received $489,602.

Other movie salaries were: Greta Garbo (Loew's), $472,499; Marlene Dietrich (Paramount), $370,000; A. M. Loew (Loew's), $356,074; Joan Crawford (Metro), $351,538; Frederic March, $334,687 from Selznick-International, and $150,000 from Paramount; David Bernstein (Loew's), $320,416; Spyros Skouras (National Theaters, Twentieth Century affiliate), $320,054.

Clark Gable (Metro), $289,000; Fred Astaire (R-K-O), $271,711; Joe E. Brown (D. L. Loew), $267,500; Hunt Stromberg (Metro), $265,500; Charles Boyer (Wanger), $265,191; Darryl Zanuck (Twentieth Century), $260,000; Ernst Lubitsch (Paramount), $260,833; Claudette Colbert (Paramount), $248,055; William Powell (Metro), $246,110; Bob Burns (Metro), $242,856; Gary Cooper (Paramount), $238,416; Jeanette MacDonald (Metro), $238,299.

The pleasant young man, Robert Montgomery, who gave the committee his expert opinion as an actor on complicated problems of production and distribution, received from Metro a mere $243,250.

Warner Baxter (Twentieth Century), $225,961; George Ruth (Paramount), $219,399; Sonja Henie (Twentieth Century), $210,729; Adolph Zukor (Paramount), $210,479; Kay Francis (Warner), $209,100; Hal Wallis (Warner), $208,083; Wesley Ruggles (Paramount), $203,051; David O. Selznick (Selznick International), $203,500; Katherine Hepburn (R-K-O), $203,751.

Herbert Marshall (R-K-O), $198,166; Samuel J. Briskin (R-K-O), $197,333; Wallace Beery (Metro), $190,000; Ginger Rogers (R-K-O), $184,776; William LeBaron (Paramount), $183,929; W. S. Van Dyke (Metro), $178,816; Dick Powell (Warner), $176,249; Robert Taylor—listed as Arlington Brugh—(Metro), $173,362; Jack Conway (Metro), $168,621; Frank Lloyd (Paramount), $166,208; B. H. Hyman (Metro), $165,456; Jack Oakie (R-K-O), $164,416; Carole Lombard (Paramount), $164,000, also $150,000 from Selznick; Sam Goldwyn (S. Goldwyn. Inc.), $163,000, also $26,000 as president of United Artists; Roy del Ruth (Twentieth Century), $162,144; Victor Fleming (Metro), $160,000; R. Z. Leonard (Metro), $160,000; Clarence Brown (Metro), $159,000.

E. J. Mannix (Metro), $157,500; Sam Katz (Metro), $156,000; Louis Ligon (Metro), $158,250; Henry King (Twentieth Century), $157,444; S. Eckman, Jr. (London office of Loew's), $154,302; Mervyn Le Roy (Warner), $153,517; Myrna Loy (Metro), $152,583; Ronald Colman (Selznick), $150,000; Eddie Cantor (Twentieth Century), $150,000; Walter Winchell (Twentieth Century), $150,000; Loretta Young (Twentieth Century), $150,000. Among the Hollywood writers were Preston Sturges (Paramount), $134,250, and Joel McRea (Goldwyn), $106,500.

Little Shirley Temple trailed with $110,256 from Twentieth Century, in addition to which her mother, Gertrude Temple, as her guardian, received $52,166.

Numerous others are listed at salaries in excess of that paid the President of the United States, but the foregoing are enough to indicate what occurred in Big Eight circles in 1937.

JUNE 15, 1939.

REPORT OF THE NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE

The board of directors of Allied States Association on June 13 unanimously approved the informal report of the negotiating committee recommending rejection of the proposed Trade Practice Code and Rules of Arbitration and directed the committee to prepare a detailed written report which would serve as the basis of a recommendation by the board of directors to the tenth annual convention of the association now being held. This report is submitted to the board in compliance with its direction.

The grounds on which the committee recommended rejection of the proposals were: (1) They do not provide an effective remedy for the major abuses of which Allied States Association has complained and for the correction of which it has waged a long, aggressive, and increasingly successful campaign; (2) the proposals as drafted and submitted by the distributors do not fully and accurately reflect the substance of the negotiations and representations made by the distributors in the course thereof; (3) reports coming from many sections of the country show convincingly if not, indeed, conclusively, that the distributors already are taking steps to circumvent and nullify the moderate concessions offered; and (4) acceptance of the proposals, particularly in view of the preamble thereto, would handicap the exhibitors in seeking further relief from oppressive and monopolistic trade practices, would hinder the Government in the prosecution of pending actions under the antitrust laws, and would supply the distributors with additional ammunition with which to combat the Neely bill and other remedial legislation.

These points will be discussed in the order in which they have been enumerated.

1. The proposals do not afford an effective remedy for major abuses. These major abuses were enumerated in a memorandum presented by the negotiating committee to the distributors' committee on October 27, 1938, and are as follows: (a) Compulsory block booking and blind selling; (b) ownership and operation of theaters by the producer-distributors; (c) forcing of shorts, newsreels, and trailers; (d) designated play dates; (e) unreasonable clearance; (f) selling away from an established customer; (g) the "right to buy"; (h) overbuying; (i) lack of availability of prints; (j) coercion in the selling of pictures.

The distributors' proposals carried out in good faith would mitigate the evils of compulsory block booking by granting a graduated cancelation privilege based on the average film rentals paid. They would not abolish compulsory block booking; on the contrary, they would perpetuate it by requiring that an exhibitor, in order to secure the right to cancel, must contract for all of the feature pictures offered him at one time.

The proposals provide no remedy whatever for blind selling, the distributors having rejected all suggestions by your committee for the identification of pictures in the contracts and for the allowance of an enlarged cancelation privilege for unidentified pictures.

The terms and conditions upon which a limited cancelation privilege is offered are calculated to permit of circumvention and evasion and, as we shall later point out, the indications are that the distributors are preparing to make use of the obvious loopholes in the proposals.

The distributors made it plain at the outset that they were not willing to discuss the question of theater divorcement and, consequently, the proposals contain no provision in reference thereto.

The provision relating to the forcing of shorts, newsreels, and trailers contains conditions and limitations which greatly impair the effectiveness thereof and which would enable the distributors to deprive an exhibitor of the right to arbitrate disputes arising thereunder by simply refusing to accept his application.

The provision against designated play dates on flat rentals and guaranties as against percentage is utterly hollow and the provision for arbitrating the suitability of a particular percentage picture for preferred playing time conveys only the doubtful privilege of relieving the exhibitor of that picture in order that the distributor may designate another in its place. The proposal offers no relief from the increasing abuse of monopolizing all of the exhibitors' preferred time, representing sometime as much as 80 percent of their total weekly revenue, with high percentage pictures.

Provision is made for arbitrating clearance but this has been marred by the insistence of the distributors—contrary to assurances given your negotiating committee—that they shall have the right to designate one member of the board of arbitrators. In cases where the dispute is between an affiliated theater and an independent theater, this participation by the distributors would throw the board out of balance.

Selling away from an established customer is made arbitrable but the many conditions attached to the provision make it easy of evasion and of value only in case the distributor acts in utmost good faith. The same comment is pertinent with respect to the provision that some run shall be made available to an exhibitor applying therefor.

The "right to buy," as contended for by Allied and as sought by the Government in the pending suit against the Griffith Circuit and others, is not mentioned in the proposals.

Overbuying is arbitrable so far as the number of pictures is concerned; no authority is given the board to apportion the product on the basis of quality, thus guaranteeing the offending exhibitor his choice of the better features and leaving for the complainant nothing but culls.

Lack of availability of prints is not provided for. Arbitration of contract disputes would not be helpful on this, as the distributors have so carefully protected themselves in their contracts against demands for prints.

The provision relating to coercion in the selling of pictures contains terms and conditions similar to those included in the provision with respect to the forcing of short subjects which greatly impair its usefulness.

2. The proposals as drafted do not conform to representations made during the negotiations. In Chicago, in November 1938, after the distributors had outlined to your committee the nature and extent of the concessions they were willing to grant, they announced that they would undertake the task of reducing the same to writing, as they wanted the proposals to be stated in simple, understandable language without the complications characteristic of lawyers' productions. The following are some of the instances in which the proposals as thus drafted materially depart from the representations made during the negotiations. (The following references are to the draft dated June 10, 1939:)

Preamble: Never discussed, appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft. The significance of this innovation and its probable effect on the efforts of exhibitors to secure additional relief will be discussed later in this report.

Page 3, subparagraph (d): Providing that cancelations not exercised in top brackets shall be relegated to the lowest bracket. This was never mentioned in the negotiations and appeared for the first time in the draft submitted to us on January 16.

Page 5, III, "Public demand for exceptional pictures": Nullifying conditions appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft of proposals.

Page 5, III, second paragraph: Entirely new limiting clause, never discussed with your committee and appearing for the first time in the March 30 draft.

Page 7, V (a), "Not arbitrable": Appears for the first time in the March 30 draft.

Page 9, VII, second paragraph: Was not discussed with your committee, appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft, and, as above pointed out, materially affects the effectiveness of the provision against the forcing of shorts.

Page 11, XIII, second paragraph: New, nullifying, and not discussed.

Page 12 (iii): Clause imposing greater burden of proof on complaining exhibitor than is imposed on a complaining distributor was never discussed with your committee.

Page 12 (2), clearance: Clause recognizing propriety of clearance, whether legally or illegally imposed, was included without consultation, is new, and extremely dangerous.

Page 13 (3), overbuying: Form was never discussed.

Page 14 (XV), "agreement to arbitrate": Neither this nor other arbitration features were ever discussed in the negotiations, except with reference to clearance. Numerous suggestions made by the general counsel are included in the latest draft, but the adoptions and rejections of his suggestions were not discussed even with him.

Pages 15–16 (XVII), term: No discussion. The references to the effect on the code of possible legislation was never discussed and is out of line with assurances given in reference to the Neely bill.

Page 20 (3), disputes relating to clearance: Contrary to all discussions during the negotiations, as above pointed out, and appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft.

In order to appreciate the significance of these changes, most of which appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft, it should be remembered that your committee had no contact with Mr. Rodgers' group after January 16; that the distributors produced nothing in the way of a revised draft between January 16 and March 30, and this in spite of the fact that it was published in the trade press and generally known that the authority of the Allied committee would lapse on March 1. The foregoing fully vindicates the position taken by Allied on December 1 and restated on numerous occasions since then, that it would not take final action on the proposals until it had a complete program which the distributors would pronounce final.

3. Reports of steps being taken to circumvent the provisions of the code: While your committee does not take the position that in this matter the prospects for the future must be judged solely by the experiences of the past, they feel that as an introduction to what follows they may properly refer to matters that occurred under the N. R. A. Code. During our negotiations the assertion was made by a member of the committee that in order to defeat the cancelation privilege allowed by the N. R. A. Code the distributors deliberately padded their blocks with low-cost "cheaters" in order that the exhibitors would exhaust their cancelation privilege thereon. This was confirmed by one of the distributor group. And certainly it is well known that the practice of selling shorts on the weekly payment plan was devised to defeat the N. R. A. provision against forcing shorts except in proportion to the number of features licensed.

From reports received from credible exhibitor informants in various parts of the United States your committee is convinced that the following practices are now being employed by some, at least, of the major distributing companies which are advocating approval of the proposals by the exhibitors:

(a) Requiring exhibitors to negotiate for and license short subjects before they will even discuss selling their features.

(b) Shorts are being forced.

(c) Foreign pictures are being forced.

(d) Despite poorer business conditions now prevailing, price of flat rental pictures raised and number of percentage pictures increased to offset possible loss through exercise by exhibitors of the cancelation privilege.

(e) Special inducements offered in price and terms for waiver of the cancelation privilege.

(f) Waiving of guaranties and selling on straight percentage in order to secure preferred playing time.

(g) Score charges being added to all flat rentals for 1939–40. In addition, distributors are increasing film rentals to equal the amount of the score charge formerly paid on percentage pictures.

(h) National allocations discontinued, thus retarding free use of cancelation and restricting same to the lowest price bracket.

Based on the statement made by a principal executive of one of the major distributors at the open forum yesterday, your committee must conclude that the purpose of the distributors is to exact increased rentals which will compensate for any possible loss under the proposals. That being so, the effect of the code on the exhibitors will be to compel them to pay more money than last year for fewer pictures; or, stated differently, to require the exhibitors to pay in full for all pictures canceled under the privilege granted.

4. Acceptance of the proposals would jeopardize prospects of exhibitors for additional relief. At the very first interview which Messrs. Yamins and Myers had with Mr. Rodgers on the subject of the negotiations, about the middle of September 1938, the question was posed, "Will participation on our part mean that we will be precluded from seeking passage of the Neely bill?" They were told that the negotiations would have no bearing on the Neely bill or the Government suit, except as the experience might bring about better relations which would lead us voluntarily to abandon such methods. This statement was later repeated in substance by Mr. Rodgers in a telephone conversation with Mr. Yamins.

It was upon this assurance that Allied entered into the negotiations.

Since then the distributors have made every possible use of the negotiations to defeat the Neely bill, to influence the attitude of the Department of Justice in pending litigations and otherwise to handicap Allied in its efforts to secure real and lasting benefits for the independent exhibitors.

Because we regard this as the most important factor entering into our decision that the proposals should be rejected, we feel that we should retrace our steps and give an outline of the manner in which this program was developed.

At hearings on the Neely bill in 1936 a suggestion was made by spokesmen for the distributors that negotiations be initiated to settle problems within the industry—obviously to prevent favorable action on the bill.

The next serious proposal along this line came coincident with a visit of Big Eight executives to Washington to head off the Government's suit.

The first draft of the proposals (December 1) was sent to the Department of Justice with a statement that they had been agreed to in principle, notwithstanding the fact that your committee had stated—and they hereby reiterate that statement—that no such agreement had been reached.

The long silence after the January 16 meeting was suddenly broken when the distributors burned the midnight oil—to quote one of the trade papers—to get out the March 30 draft on the eve of the hearings on the Neely bill.

That draft was presented to the Senate committee by Mr. Rodgers as a reason why the bill should not be passed. It is set forth in the minority report of the Senate committee as a reason why the bill should not pass.

According to press reports, the draft has been carried by the distributors to the Secretary of Commerce in an effort to induce him to use his influence with the Department of Justice to settle the Government suit on the basis of the proposals.

The preamble, which appeared for the first time in the March 30 draft, would require that exhibitors agree that the provisions of the code—including the continuation with slight modifications of compulsory block booking and illegally imposed clearance, not to mention many other abuses—are the fair-trade practices of the industry. Moreover, the effect of agreeing to the code would be to in effect validate all other practices observed in the industry and not specifically mentioned in the code.

Mr. Rodgers has made it plain that these proposals represent the maximum concessions that the distributors are willing to yield. Therefore no further progress can be made along this line. If the exhibitors agree to the proposals, they will be greatly handicapped in, if not actually debarred from, seeking further relief by other means. This demonstrates the fallacy of the argument that this is a "step in the right direction." It is not a step in any direction; it is the end of the trail.

Respectfully submitted.

NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE,
By H. A. COLE, Chairman.

The foregoing report was considered by the board of directors of Allied States Association on June 15, 1939, and was approved. The board directed that the report be presented to the tenth annual convention of the association as embodying the views of the board in respect of the proposed trade-practice code and rules of arbitration.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6635) to amend the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. KNUTSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

NEUTRALITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 94)

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the President's message be handed down at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULOW in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read together with the statement of the Secretary of State, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am advised that by a vote of 12 to 11 the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has deferred action on peace and neutrality legislation until the next session of the Congress.

I am appending hereto a statement from the Secretary of State which has my full approval, and which I trust will receive your earnest attention.

It has been abundantly clear to me for some time that for the cause of peace and in the interest of American neutrality and security, it is highly advisable that the Congress at this session should take certain much-needed action. In the light of present world conditions, I see no reason to change that opinion.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 14, 1939.

[Enclosure: Statement.]

STATEMENT ON PEACE AND NEUTRALITY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE

The cornerstone of the foreign policy of the United States is the preservation of the peace and security of our Nation, the strengthening of international law, and the revitalization of international good faith. The foreign policy of this Government may be misinterpreted or it may be misunderstood, but it cannot be destroyed. Peace is so precious and war so devastating that the people of the United States and their Government must not fail to make their just and legitimate contribution to the preservation of peace.

The Congress has pending before it at the present time certain proposals providing for the amendment of the existing so-called neutrality legislation. Some of these proposed changes I regard as necessary to promote the peace and security of the United States.

There is an astonishing amount of confusion and misunderstanding as regards the legislation under consideration, and particularly with regard to the operation of the existing arms embargo.

I shall try to bring out as clearly as I can the important points of agreement and disagreement between those who support the principles contained in the six-point peace and neutrality program recommended by the Executive branch of the Government and those who oppose these recommendations.

In substance and in principle both sides of the discussion agree on the following points:

1. Both sides agree that the first concern of the United States must be its own peace and security.

2. Both sides agree that it should be the policy of this Government to avoid being drawn into wars between other nations.

3. Both sides agree that this Nation should at all times avoid entangling alliances or involvements with other nations.

4. Both sides agree that in the event of foreign wars this Nation should maintain a status of strict neutrality, and that around the structure of neutrality we should so shape our policies as to keep this country from being drawn into war.

On the other hand, the following is the chief essential point of disagreement between those who favor the adoption of the recommendations formulated by the Executive branch of the Government and those who are opposing these recommendations:

The proponents, including the executive branch of the Government, at the time when the arms embargo was originally adopted called attention to the fact that its enactment constituted a hazardous departure from the principle of international law which recognizes the right of neutrals to trade with belligerents and of belligerents to trade with neutrals. They believe that neutrality means impartiality, and in their view an arms embargo is directly opposed to the idea of neutrality. It is not humanly possible, by enacting an arms embargo, or by refraining from such enactment, to hold the scales exactly even between two belligerents. In either case, and due to shifting circumstances, one belligerent may find itself in a position of relative advantage or disadvantage. The important difference between the two cases is that when such a condition arises in the absence of an arms embargo on our part no responsibility attaches to this country, whereas in the presence of an embargo the responsibility of this country for the creation of the condition is inevitably direct and clear.

There is no theory or practice to be found in international law pertaining to neutrality to the effect that the advantages that any particular belligerent might procure through its geographic location, its superiority on land or at sea, or through other circumstances should be offset by the establishment by neutral nations of embargoes.

The opposition to the present substitute proposal joins issue on this point and stands for existing rigid embargo as a permanent part of our neutrality policy. And yet by insisting on an arms embargo in time of war they are to that extent, for the reasons I have stated, urging not neutrality but what might well result in actual unneutrality, the serious consequences of which no one can predict.

Those who urge the retention of the present embargo continue to advance the view that it will keep this country out of war, thereby misleading the American people to rely upon a false and illogical delusion as a means of keeping out of war.

I say it is illogical, because while the trade in "arms, ammunition, and implements of war" is at present banned, the trade in equally essential war materials, as well as all the essential materials out of which the finished articles are made, can continue. For example, in time of war we can sell cotton for the manufacture of explosives, but not the explosives; we can sell the steel and copper for cannon and for shells, but not the cannon nor the shells; we can continue to sell to belligerents the high-powered fuel necessary for the operation of airplanes, but we are not able to sell the airplanes.

I say it is a false delusion because a continuation of the trade in arms is a clearly recognized and traditional right of the nationals of a neutral country in time of war, subject only to effective blockade and to the right of belligerents to treat any such commodities as contraband. The assertion frequently made that this country has ever engaged or may become engaged in serious controversy solely over the fact that its nationals have sold arms to belligerents is misleading and unsupportable. All available evidence is directly to the contrary. Every informed person knows that arms, as absolute contraband, are subject to seizure by a belligerent and that neither the neutral shipper nor his government has the slightest ground for complaint. There is, therefore, no reason to suppose that the sale of arms may lead to serious controversy between a neutral and a belligerent. Furthermore, under the proposals that have been made American nationals would be divested of all right, title, and interest in these and other commodities before they leave our shores and American citizens and ships would be kept out of danger zones. As regards possible complications which might arise as a result of the extension of credits to belligerents or of extraordinary profits accruing to any group of producers in this country, it is wholly within the power of Congress at all times to safeguard the national interest in this respect.

Controversies which would involve the United States are far more likely to arise from the entrance of American ships or American citizens in the danger zones or through the sinking on the high seas of American vessels carrying commodities other than those covered by the arms embargo. In the recommendations formulated by the Executive as a substitute for the present legislation it was especially urged that provisions be adopted which would exclude American nationals and American ships from zones where real danger to their safety might exist and which would divest goods of American ownership, thereby minimizing to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement.

Those of us who support the recommendations formulated for the elimination of the embargo are convinced that the arms embargo plays into the hands of those nations which have taken the lead in building up their fighting power. It works directly against the interests of the peace-loving nations, especially those which do not possess their own munitions plants. It means that if any country is disposed toward conquest, and devotes its energy and resources to establish itself as a superior fighting power, that country may be more tempted to try the fortunes of war if it knows that its less well-prepared opponents would be shut off from those supplies which, under every rule of international law, they should be able to buy in all neutral countries, including the United States. It means also that some of those countries which have only limited facilities for the production of arms, ammunition, and implements of war are put in a position of increased dependence. During peacetime they would feel the compulsion of shaping their political as well as their economic policy to suit the military strength of others; and during wartime their powers of defense would be limited.

For these reasons those who are supporting the recommendations for the amendment of existing legislation recognize definitely that the present embargo encourages a general state of war both in Europe and Asia. Since the present embargo has this effect its results are directly prejudicial to the highest interests and to the peace and to the security of the United States.

In the present grave conditions of international anarchy and of danger to peace, in more than one part of the world, I profoundly believe that the first great step toward safeguarding this Nation from being drawn into war is to use whatever influence it can, compatible with the traditional policy of our country of noninvolvement, so as to make less likely the outbreak of a major war. This is a duty placed upon our Government which some may fail to perceive or choose to reject. But it must be clear to everyone of us that the outbreak of a general war increases the dangers confronting the United States. This fact cannot be ignored.

I would emphasize that the course proposed through the substitute legislation recommended by the Executive is consistent with the rules of international law and with the policy of our own country over a period of 150 years. The basis for the recommendations made is the firm intention of keeping this country from being drawn into war. If there existed any desire to assist or to injure particular foreign countries, this Government would not have been endeavoring persistently, within the limitations of our traditional policy, over a period of many years to do its utmost to avoid the outbreak of a general war. I earnestly hope that the Congress will lend the fullest measure of its cooperation in the endeavor to avoid war in the first place and to place this country in a position of the greatest security possible, should war break out. In the tragic event that peace efforts fail and that a major war occurs, there will be general agreement within the United States that every effort must be exerted to keep this country from being drawn therein.

I must also refer to the impression sedulously created to the effect that the sale of arms, munitions, and implements of war by this country is immoral and that on this ground it should be suppressed in time of war.

As a matter of fact almost all sales of arms and ammunition made in recent years by our nationals have been made to governments whose policies have been dedicated to the maintenance of peace, but who have felt the necessity of creating or of augmenting their means of national self-defense, thereby protecting otherwise helpless men, women, and children in the event that other powers resort to war. In the face of the present universal danger all countries, including our own, feel the necessity of increasing armament, and small countries in particular are dependent upon countries like the United States which have the capacity to produce armaments. Our refusal to make it possible for them to obtain such means of necessary self-defense in a time of grave emergency would contribute solely toward making more helpless the law-abiding and peace-devoted peoples of the world. If such action is moral, and if, on the contrary, sales of the means of self-defense for the protection of peaceful and law-abiding peoples are immoral, then a new definition of morality and immorality must be written. This task might be left to the proponents of the arms embargo.

I must also refer to another impression created by propaganda to the effect that the abandonment of the arms embargo would increase power of action on the part of the executive branch of the Government and, conversely, that the maintenance of the embargo would serve as an additional check on the powers of the Executive. It is difficult to see how either of these propositions could possibly hold true. An impartial granting of access to American markets to all countries without distinction gives the Executive no additional power to choose among them and to commit this country to any line of policy or action which may lead it either into a dangerous controversy or into war with any foreign power.

The legislative proposals which were recomended to the Congress through the communications which I transmitted to Senator PITTMAN and to Congressman BLOOM on May 27 providing for the safeguarding of our Nation to the fullest possible extent from incurring the risks of involvement in war contemplate the elimination of the existing arms embargo and are as follows:

(1) To prohibit American ships from entering combat areas;

(2) To restrict travel by American citizens in combat areas;

(3) To require that goods exported from the United States to belligerent countries shall be preceded by the transfer of title to the foreign purchasers;

(4) To continue the existing legislation respecting loans and credits to belligerent nations;

(5) To regulate the solicitation and collection in this country of funds for belligerents; and

(6) To continue the National Munitions Control Board and the licensing system with respect to the importation and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

This six-point program was the best that could be devised after much painstaking thought and study, and after many conferences with Members of the Congress, of how best to keep this country out of a conflict should it arise. It rests primarily on the established rules of international law, plus the curtailment of certain rights of our nationals, the exercise of which is permitted under international law but which might lead to controversies with belligerents and eventual involvement in foreign wars.

There has thus been offered as a substitute for the present act a far broader and more effective set of provisions, which in no conceivable sense could breed trouble, but which to a far greater extent than the present act would both aid in making less likely a general war, and, while keeping strictly within the limits of neutrality, would reduce as far as possible the risk of this Nation being drawn into war if war comes.

In connection with our foreign affairs, I think all must agree that, unless a spirit of collaboration and cooperation characterizes the relations between the executive and legislative departments of the Government, the peace and other vital interests of this country will inevitably be jeopardized.

Having spent the best years of my life as a member of the two Houses of Congress, I have the warmest feeling of friendliness toward the membership of, and the greatest respect for, the legislative department, and, in that spirit, I earnestly hope for the closest possible cooperation in matters affecting our country's best interests and its security in the present grave international situation.

At this time when critical conditions obtain throughout the greater part of the world I am sure that we are all equally persuaded that while the fullest measure of constructive criticism is helpful and desirable, and is of course most welcome, partisanship should play no part in the determination of the foreign policy of this country.

In the present situation of danger a peaceful nation like ours cannot complacently close its eyes and ears in formulating a peace and neutrality policy, as though abnormal and critical conditions did not exist. The entire question of peace and neutrality at this serious juncture in its possible effects upon the safety and the interest of the United States during coming months is of the utmost importance. This question should, in my judgment, receive full and careful consideration and be acted upon by this Government without unnecessary or undue delay.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, unfortunately I must leave the city at 3 o'clock, and though I should like to discuss at length the bill which is now the unfinished business, time forbids. I heard the testimony of those interested in the bill, and, in my opinion, no greater calamity could befall the most marvelous industry of modern times than the enactment of the pending bill at this time.

I am afraid those of us who legislate on these matters do not take the pains to acquaint ourselves intimately with the steps which have to be taken in order to produce such a miraculous development as has been brought about in the moving-picture industry. It is second only to that miracle of modern times, the radio. I challenge any Member of this body to parallel in all history the ingenious device which synchronizes one's voice with the silent moving picture. No one can calculate the potential effect of the moving picture on our social and intellectual life.

I grant that in the initial stages of this marvelous development it may have been more or less prostituted to unworthy ends, but common sense and inherent decency amongst the people are already having their effect. I listened with an unbiased mind to the testimony of the producers and distributors and the representatives of the public.

Like every wonderful discovery and invention, the moving picture is beginning to get into a stride commensurate with its inherent possibilities. The public has no other source of entertainment comparable to the moving picture. I have heard much said on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere about the cry "Divide the wealth" or "Share the wealth." We think of the untold millions of dollars which are made and expended in certain industries, and we do not stop to think that, though billions of dollars are spent to develop the amazing moving-picture industry, for 15 or 25 cents we can enjoy the net result. We are "sharing the wealth" of the genius which discovered the process and of the tremendous effort of skill and labor which transmutes the thought into a material thing. Then a meeting place is built, where the pictures may be comfortably and adequately displayed, all so popular in price that the American people can enjoy the very best at a minimum of cost.

Much has been said about the obscenity that has characterized some of the motion-picture shows. That may be true, Mr. President, but I do not see any need to burn down the house to get rid of the rats. The public is rapidly eliminating all the pictures which outrage certain long-haired men, and short-haired women, and other people.

Mr. President, I recall that the great Civil War was largely brought about by a book which exaggerated the truth—a book known as Uncle Tom's Cabin. Here we are, when a modus vivendi is rapidly being reached between producer, distributor, and the public, about to emasculate and render inefficient a tremendous modern industry whose product is patronized by the entire public.

I heard the testimony given before the committee. Some of the testimony to which I listened would lead one to believe that the practice of block booking and blind selling is something more or less ridiculous. But when one has a complete understanding of why the practice is indulged in he must applaud rather than denounce it.

Mr. President, I maintain that the pending bill contains not one provision which looks to purifying the morals of the people. I think I know the young people of my State, although I myself am not young. People speak about corrupting the morals of the boys and girls. God help our country if their morals have fallen so low. You, Mr. President, and I, as practical men, know what is going on.

I wish I had time to go into the question further. However, I am obliged to catch a train at 3 o'clock. I wish I had time to bring to the Senate a realization that we are not drifting into State socialism, but we are in State socialism. I defy anyone to contradict me on that point. Consider the legislation which is passed—social security, farm security, and so forth. What has become of the old American principle of the unit of the family, through thrift and enterprise, endeavoring to save sufficient to take care of the old people when they have passed their earning period? My country is now assuming that burden. "Go ahead and spend; we will take care of the old." That old rugged spirit of Americanism has disappeared through our insensate greed to secure votes. You know it and I know it. The family unit which up until now has caused the members of the family to cling together in love and affection, and, through thrift and enterprise, to try to save enough to take care of the old and the loved ones, is being set aside. In the older days those who wanted work found it. I realize that the mechanical age has in a way modified that situation; but the Government has entered into every department of our life, and is undermining the rugged manhood of America.

Mr. President, I should be the last one to criticize what has occurred if I thought it was born, though mistakenly, of a genuine sympathy for the sufferers. But we all know that that is not so. We do not exemplify such sympathy in our private lives, and why should we attempt to fool people by parading it in public?

We are now asked to stick the nose of the Government into the moving-picture industry. That industry has progressed without setback from the time of the silent, imperfect picture until today, when it challenges the beautiful form and voice of the actual animate speaker.

I shall not go into the details with respect to production and distribution, but I beg of my colleagues to let the producers and the distributors and the public solve this problem, rather than to inject into it our views of what would be best for them to do.

Mr. President, the moving-picture industry is the second greatest industry in America, involving more money, providing more recreation, and giving more delight to millions of people than any other. But because some very moral and super-moral people take exception to some pictures, we, forsooth, must now interfere with the industry. I will bet my right arm that if those who wish to censor the industry had a chance to hide themselves in the theater, they would be the first ones to look at pictures which they condemn. You know it is true and I know it is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hatch in the Chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from South Carolina shook an admonitory finger at me. I am opposed to censorship of press, radio, or moving pictures. I have during my public career opposed—and I hope not without some success—any kind of censorship.

Mr. SMITH. I am delighted to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator spoke of the magnitude of the moving-picture industry. It is at least one industry in the United States that has within the past 10 years not asked for any loan, largesse, grant, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. And it has paid persons engaged in the industry greater salaries than any other set of persons receive, and as a result the United States has received from them larger income taxes than from any other group.

Mr. ASHURST. I know of one thespian whose Federal income tax is the equivalent of the salary of 21 United States Senators annually.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am sorry I must leave. I know the Presiding Officer himself regrets to see me go, but I hope that my colleagues will start here today to line up their strength to keep the Government from interfering with private business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5748) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, because I was a member of the subcommittee charged with taking the testimony in this matter, I feel an obligation to place before the Senate the reasons which led me to join in the minority report, and which have persuaded me that this legislation is unwise and ought not to be passed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, we are dealing in this legislation with one of the great industries of our country, whose growth and whose development is an amazing story, an American business epic. Its estimated capital investment is $2,000,000,000. It gives employment to approximately 285,000 persons. More than 100 companies are engaged in the production of motion pictures. Some 276 trades, arts, and professions are represented in each producing studio. Only the very largest of these companies produce as many as 50 pictures a season. The cost of the pictures varies from a few thousand dollars to almost $3,000,000 per picture. There is no other industry within my knowledge in which the unit output is so limited and in which the unit cost is so great.

The investment of a producing company giving to the American public a limited number of pictures reaches many millions of dollars, and if its output were not sold, the losses to the producing company would be destructive. No company could long continue without the certainty that its product had a market.

Mr. President, pictures produced at such tremendous cost must be leased, and they must be distributed. There are 17,541 exhibitors in the United States who must have each day at the appointed hour the pictures for which they have contracted. These theaters are in 9,187 towns, scattered throughout the length and breadth of the United States. Six thousand theaters change their programs daily. In 1938 the 17,541 theaters had box-office receipts of approximately $1,000,000,000, of which $650,000,000 was retained in the local communities. The distribution of this picture product involves placing more than 25,000 miles of film daily in 17,541 theaters according to schedule. This is accomplished through 431 film exchanges in 31 centers of our country. The distribution requires 15,000,000 separate film shipments a year. Such distribution is possible only through close adherence to a detailed plan of distribution worked out in advance.

Such, briefly, is the magnitude of the industry to which the proposed legislation is directed.

Mr. President, various justifications for the bill are asserted by those sponsoring it. First of all, it is alleged that monopoly exists in the industry, and that such monopoly must be destroyed. It is asserted that unfair trade practices are engaged in, and that they must be corrected. It is asserted that community influence—whatever that may be—in the selection of pictures shown is necessary for the improvement of the motion pictures of our country. The suggestion of the power of community influence is what has enlisted in large measure the interest of the women's organizations and others in behalf of the bill.

Mr. President, I make but brief reference to monopoly. If there be monopoly, in my opinion the remedy exists in our present antitrust statutes. The Department of Justice itself accepts this view, for that Department has filed a suit, based upon the Sherman Act, alleging a monopoly to exist. A complaint is now pending against the eight major companies, constituting those called by the proponents of the bill the Big Eight. The bill of complaint alleges every offense charged in the hearings held upon the bill. There is testimony that some 10 further suits are in contemplation.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am content to await the outcome of litigation by the United States, and I am not disposed to prejudge it. If the defendants are found guilty, then the proposed legislation, so far as it is aimed at monopoly, is unnecessary; and if found not guilty, then, so far as monopoly is concerned, legislation would seem to be uncalled for. In any event, I am opposed to writing an antitrust statute for only a single industry, a statute applicable to the motion-picture industry alone.

The hearings next suggest that the motion-picture industry is guilty of unfair trade practices. The bill before us seemingly, among other things, is an effort to write a fair trade practice act for a single industry. The allegation of unfair trade practices is an old, old story. Almost 12 years ago a proceeding was had before the Federal Trade Commission, and the same charge was then made. In this connection I call the attention of the Senate to the "cease and desist" order of the Federal Trade Commission issued at that time. I especially invite Senators to compare section 3 of the bill, which I assume all Senators have before them, with the "cease and desist" order in this case of Federal Trade Commission against Famous Players Lasky Corporation, which I now read:

> The defendant corporation was ordered to cease and desist—
> From leasing or offering to lease for exhibition in a theater or theaters motion-picture films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump-sum price for the entire block or group only and requiring the exhibitor to lease all such films or be permitted to lease none; and from leasing or offering to lease for exhibition such motion-picture films in a block or group of two or more at a designated lump-sum price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films, or for a number or numbers thereof less than the total number, which total or lump-sum price and separate and several prices shall bear to each other such relation as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire and prefer to procure for exhibition; or shall bear such relation to each other as to tend to require an exhibitor to lease such entire block or group or forego the lease of any portion or portions thereof; or shall bear such relation to each other that the effect of such proposed contract for the lease of such films may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any part of the certain line of commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, involved in said proposed sale, to wit, the business of the production, distribution and exhibition of motion-picture films to the public, or the business of production and distribution or of production or distribution of moving-picture films for public exhibition.

Senators who have followed the reading, and who have before them the text of the bill, will observe that the langauge of section 3 is almost identical with the cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission.

What happened to that order? It came before the court upon an application for the enforcement of the order, and the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit voided the Commission's order. I shall read only a few extracts from the unanimous decision of the court in that case, but I believe what I shall read fairly represents the effect and the purport of the court's decision.

Among other things, the court said:

> A distributor of films by lease or sale has the right to select his own customers and to sell such products at given prices or to refuse to sell at all to any particular person for reasons of his own.

I again quote:

> The respondent is not required under the law to so conduct his business that every competitor may conduct his with an equal degree of success according to his size and importance.

Again:

> Nor is the alternative offer permitted to be made for the films—that is, to lease less than a block at higher prices, a coercive or intimidating method.

Mr. President, if the court was correct in its conclusions as to the law, then we have no justification for attempting at this time to write an unfair trade practice section in the very terms of the voided order of the Commission. If the facts in the industry have changed, the industry may again appeal to the Federal Trade Commission. However, speaking for myself, in any event, I am opposed to undertaking to write a Federal Unfair Trade Practice Act for a single industry, as the bill before us seeks to do.

Mr. President, I wish further to call the attention of the Senate to the language of section 3 of the bill, which declares the acts therein set forth to be unlawful. This section seeks to define a crime punishable by a fine—a fine reaching to $5,000, and imprisonment for 1 year, or both, such penalties to be imposed upon the person violating this section of the proposed statute.

No one within the sound of my voice will question that a criminal statute should be so definite in terms that all may know what standard of conduct is required. In a case in 369 United States it is said:

> The terms of a penal statute creating a new offense must be sufficiently explicit to inform those who are subject to it what conduct on their part will render them liable to its penalties.

In the same case the court said further:

> And a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law.

I invite Senators listening to me to measure section 3 by those yardsticks of fundamental law.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. This is somewhat beside the point, I will admit, but I regret that the Court has not partaken liberally of its own medicine when it suggests that a statute should be construed in the fashion that a man of ordinary intelligence would be compelled to construe it. A number of years ago the people of this country adopted a constitutional amendment which provided that the Congress should have the right to levy taxes on incomes from whatever source derived, but the Court took that language, which a person who was positively inept, almost stupid, would certainly understand, and said that these words of plain meaning meant something else. I mention that because I only regret that the Court itself has not taken its own medicine that it hands out to you and me and 130,000,000 other Americans. I am sure the Senator will agree with me that the language of the constitutional amendment was sufficiently plain.

Mr. WHITE. I would say that whatever has been done in the past, either by Congress or by the courts, in the way of confusion of language is not a precedent for us to follow, but that we should, to the very limit of our ability, when we are drafting criminal statutes, make them so clear and so precise that no one can misunderstand them, if that be a possible thing.

Mr. BONE. The point I make, if the Senator please, is that it does not altogether come with good grace for the Court, with pontifical solemnity, to criticize the average citizen for doing something which it itself has done.

Mr. WHITE. I am making a recommendation to the Congress as to the care that should be taken in the drafting of statutes.

Mr. President, I will be glad to yield if Senators really desire to ask me about the matter I am discussing, but I appreciate that time is running on, and I do not care to be responsible for delaying the discussion to such a point that a vote will not be reached tonight.

The first prohibition, which is found in section 3, beginning in line 7, and extending to the semicolon in line 12, is clear and one of common understanding and intelligence can understand it. We have, therefore, as to this provision, first, a plain question of policy, and next a legal question of constitutional power to say to a lessor of films, in substance, "You may not require the purchaser to take all or to have none." The language is—

> It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump-sum price for the entire block or group, only and to require the exhibitor to lease all such films or permit him to lease none.

I understand that an amendment is to be offered to that provision, but I think in any essential sense it will not change the purpose of any of that language.

Do we want to declare that policy? Do we want to say with respect to any product, not a public necessity, that the producers must deal it out piecemeal and may not insist on selling it by wholesale at wholesale prices?

I believe it to be unwise to enact such a statute, for it will serve as a precedent which will rise to trouble us in the future. I believe also that such a provision flies in the face of the clear recognition of the Clayton Act that wholesale selling is legitimate.

But the remainder of section 3, with a limited exception, seems to me indefensible. It undertakes to make a separate and distinct offense from that defined in lines 7 to 12, inclusive. It declares it to be a criminal offense if the lump-sum price at which the lessor offers the group and the separate prices at which he alternately offers the separate pictures bear such relation to each other as, in the one case, to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to choose the films he may desire or prefer; and, in the second instance, as tends to require an exhibitor to lease the whole block or forego the leasing of any number of the group, or to lease or offer to lease films in any other manner or by any other means, the effect of which would be to defeat the purpose of this proposed act.

I ask any Senator before me how could you, if a motion-picture salesman, know whether the prices at which you offered the films separately bore such relation to the price you asked for the block of films as to make you guilty of a violation of these provisions having relation to price? How could you know that the effect of the price at which you were offering a film would be to defeat the purposes of this act, whatsover those purposes may be? How could you know that the price you were naming would operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease only such films as the exhibitor desired or preferred? How could you, as a salesman, be certain of the price you might lawfully name, and how could you ascertain that price?

Mr. President, section 3 of the bill is to me a monstrous thing, in that it seeks to create a criminal offense of substantial magnitude, punishable by fine and imprisonment, without ascertainable standards, and in terms so vague and indefinite that no man could know his rights and his obligations, but must, in the conduct of his business, guess at the meaning and the application of the statute.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I seek information by the question I am about to ask. I am wondering whether an exhibitor who, under present set-up, takes a large block of films to be used in a chain of theaters pays one lump sum for the entire set of films or whether there is a higher price for some than for other kinds of films? I assume that in the case of large and very ornate and lengthy films, the price for the individual film would be much greater than for some of the smaller ones, perhaps, in the lot.

Mr. WHITE. Films are not sold; they are leased.

Mr. BONE. Whatever may be the arrangement.

Mr. WHITE. That is a technical difference, I agree. The rental charge or cost depends upon many circumstances. It depends upon the cost of producing the film; it depends upon the bargain the salesman can drive; it depends upon whether the film is going to be shown in a large metropolitan center, where thousands upon thousands will see it, and the box-office receipts will be large, or whether it is going to be shown in small rural communities where the only possible chance may be to rent it at a very low price. Often, perhaps usually, the rental price is a percentage of the box-office receipts. It is a case of bargaining between the salesman and the exhibitor, and the figures, which I shall later undertake to give——

Mr. BONE. We might take one large theater in a very large city that has a very large attendance all the time—a typical large city. I take it that a film such as Union Pacific, which was a very beautiful picture, would, of necessity, command a larger rental price than a smaller film even in such a theater, if I may narrow my question to one typical theater.

Mr. WHITE. Take Romeo and Juliet. The testimony is that the production cost of that picture was $2,800,000. Of course, if that film should be sold separately it would demand and would receive a larger rental than some film the production cost of which was merely a few thousand dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator now is talking, I believe, about the effect of section 3 of the bill. That section makes it an offense for anybody to offer to sell more than two pictures. Even though the offer is turned down, if he merely offers to sell three, he is guilty of an offense. Is that the Senator's interpretation?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; the section applies either to the sale or to the offer. There is no distinction between the actual consummation and the offer. The effort to induce the purchase is, under this section, an offense.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language is:

> It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more—

Two or more pictures.

It has been difficult, I am sure, for all Senators, and it has been difficult for me, to get at the real facts with respect to the production and distribution of motion pictures in the United States. One may read the 560- or 650-odd pages of the hearings, which are interspersed with all sorts of questions about particular movie actors, stars, and everything else, without being able to glean out of all of that substance the real meat in the way of facts concerning the method of distribution and production of pictures. Since the hearings I obtained more information from the operator of a moving-picture theater in my State, who took the trouble to sit down for an hour and tried to explain the method to me, free of any extraneous matter, than I got out of all the hearings.

I wonder whether the Senator has commented or intends to comment on the details of the method by which moving pictures are produced and sold to the exhibitor, and the relationship of that method to the necessity, if there is a necessity, of knowing in advance of production of pictures where the market is to be, in order to go ahead with a picture.

For instance, I recall a very wonderful picture produced by George Arliss—I think it was Disraeli—and he produced another one, Alexander Hamilton. My information is that the producers of those pictures began to try to sell their pictures in January, to be delivered the following August and during the following year; that their production year begins, say, in January, and that their exhibition year begins in August; that between January and August they are producing the pictures which they are to deliver in August. The cost of production runs all the way from $75,000 in some cases to two or three million dollars in others; and if the producers were required, after production of the pictures had been completed, to sell the pictures separately, one at a time, to the individual moving-picture shows throughout the United States, I am wondering if the Senator has any opinion or view as to whether the expensive pictures, especially, would ever have been produced in the first place if the producers had to take that risk.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, answering the Senator, I think the testimony in the record is that in the case of a picture costing into the millions of dollars, if the producers had to take their chances on selling the picture separately after completion, pictures of that character would not be produced in America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Take another instance—and I am simply trying to see whether the information I got from an exhibitor, not a producer, not a distributor, but an exhibitor, is correct.

Let us take the picture which is now in production, Gone with the Wind, based upon the wonderful book of the same name, in the case of which I think the producer looked all over the United States and all over the world for a year or two in order to find a particular type of "movie" star who would fit into the picture. Finally, I think, they selected an English girl, whose name I do not now recall, to take the leading feminine part in the picture, and, of course, had to build around her the whole structure of the picture.

I do not know how much the picture will cost; but I imagine all those who have read the book, and even those who have not read it but who have heard about it, will be interested to see the picture when it is produced. If the producers of that picture and other pictures had to depend upon their ability to sell it as a single production to all the moving-picture theaters in the United States, I am wondering whether, in view of the cost of its production, they would incur the risk necessary to produce the kind of picture that everybody expects from Gone With the Wind.

Mr. WHITE. My answer is that, in my opinion—and I base the opinion upon what is in the record—such pictures would not be produced in the United States.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I am certain that the Senator from Maine—who is one of the few, in my opinion, who know something about the evidence in the record in this case—does not mean to assent to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky, if I correctly understood him, to the effect that it would actually be a violation of law under the bill for the distributors of motion pictures to offer to sell two or more pictures at one time.

I ask that in all fairness I be permitted to read what the bill, and the substitute which will be offered, say:

> It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more films * * * and to require the exhibitor to lease all such films or permit him to lease none.

Of course, one may offer to lease 1; he may offer to lease 55, or whatever number it may be. The inhibition is against saying, "You may not lease 5 or 10 or 20 films unless you lease the whole 55."

Mr. WHITE. I quite agree that the latter language goes with the first.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A moment ago the Senator commented on the relative prices of a picture leased singly and one leased in group. What is the Senator's interpretation of section 3 with respect to the price at which a single picture would have to be leased, as compared to the price of the same picture if included in a group?

Mr. WHITE. I do not know the answer to that question, and I do not see how anybody reading this language could answer it. That is my complaint.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I were a producer, and I had 20 pictures, and offered all of them to an exhibitor at what might be called a wholesale price—and I suppose there is nothing illegitimate or immoral about offering a group of anything at a wholesale price smaller than the price for any single part of the commodity, whether it is moving pictures, or apples, or shoes, or anything else—does the Senator interpret section 3 of the bill to mean that a single picture must be offered at the same price at which it would figure in a group, if offered and sold in a group?

Mr. WHITE. I can only answer the Senator in the language of the section itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language is involved.

Mr. WHITE. The language is involved, and the meaning is obscure, and I do not know what the offense is. My hands go up.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I submit that anybody who reads the language for the purpose of trying to understand it, instead of confuse it, will see that the requirement is simply——

Mr. WHITE. I do not like that suggestion, Mr. President.

Mr. NEELY. I withdraw that expression, then. The Senator from Maine is always fair, and I know that he means to be fair about this matter, and I hope to be fair with him; but I submit that the purpose of that section means this, and nothing more:

That in selling single films, or fewer than a block of films, the price demanded for the single one, or the smaller number than the block, shall not be so unreasonable as to compel the exhibitor to buy the whole block or obtain none; and the formula by which that matter is to be ascertained is less complicated than the formula by which one is required in every other industry which is subject to the Robinson-Patman Act to obey it; and, if I am not mistaken, the Senator from Kentucky favored the Robinson-Patman bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if I may go on, with respect to section 4 of the bill a similar doubt assails one who gives it consideration. This section makes it unlawful for a distributor to lease or offer to lease a picture unless at the time of lease or offer he shall furnish the exhibitor a complete and true synopsis of the film. It requires that such synopsis shall include an outline of the story, incidents, and scenes depicted or to be depicted, and a statement describing the manner of treatment of dialogs concerning any scenes depicting vice, crime, or suggestion of sexual passion. This is for the purpose of informing the exhibitor so that he may determine whether he desires to select the film for exhibition.

The question still persists, Mr. President, how may one know whether he has met or offended the statute? How may one know that his statement describing the manner of treatment of dialogs concerning any scenes depicting vice, crime, or suggestion of sexual passion is sufficiently precise and sufficiently realistic to enable the prospective purchaser to determine whether he does or does not want the picture?

Mr. President, so much for legal and technical questions.

Mr. President, I now wish to pass on and discuss the realities of compulsory block booking and blind selling. The complaint is that a combination of picture producers, called for the purpose of creating prejudice, the Big Eight, control the production and distribution of films and compel exhibitors to lease films in blocks or groups, without regard to the desires of the exhibitors.

First of all, do the Big Eight, so-called, control production and distribution? That they are the largest and most powerful among the producers is unquestioned. The charge that they can control production and distribution is not supported by the facts in the record before us.

The Film Daily Yearbook for 1936 lists 148 producers in California and 60 in New York. In the same publication are listed 80 distributors of motion pictures. Of all the pictures released to the American market in 1936 there were 362 produced by the so-called Big Eight, and 134 American pictures were produced by the other companies listed in this yearbook. In addition, 239 feature pictures of foreign origin were released in the United States that year. This shows that the Big Eight produced less than half of the pictures for that year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOWNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who are the so-called Big Eight? I cannot recall from memory.

Mr. WHITE. They are Paramount, R. K. O., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer——

Mr. BARKLEY. Warner Brothers?

Mr. WHITE. Warner Brothers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Columbia Producers, First National—and what others?

Mr. WHITE. There are eight.

Mr. NEELY. Universal and United Artists.

Mr. WHITE. The statistics for 1938 show that the Big Eight produced 346 pictures, the United States independents produced 109, and there were foreign features to the number of 314. Of these foreign films only 16 were released by the Big Eight, while 298 were distributed by independents. Independents produced and distributed 407 pictures, and the Big Eight produced and released 362, substantially less than 50 percent.

Mr. President, of marked significance is the testimony of one of the proponents of the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one moment?

Mr. WHITE. I yield, but I warn the Senator that we will not get through this afternoon if I continue yielding.

Mr. NEELY. I hope we may get through, but this is very important. The Senator has just indicated that the Big Eight does not monopolize or control the distribution of films.

Mr. WHITE. Production and distribution. I coupled the two.

Mr. NEELY. I ask the Senator to turn to page 27 of the printed record, where he will find a colloquy I wish to quote; and I think the Senator was present when it occurred.

Mr. WHITE. I remember it.

Mr. NEELY. I was interrogating Mr. Pettijohn, the spokesman for the Big Eight and the Hays organization:

Senator NEELY. What percentage of last year's output in the United States was controlled by the so-called Big Eight?

Mr. PETTIJOHN. If you mean by "controlled" were sold by the so-called Big Nine or Ten—I want to put Monogram and Columbia in there. They are making pictures——

Senator NEELY. What percentage was marketed by the Big Eight?

Mr. PETTIJOHN. I would say, of the American product, at least 85 percent, Senator.

Mr. WHITE. I read the figures for the RECORD which appear in the proceedings of the committee.

I started to say that of marked significance in the testimony is the evidence given by one of the proponents of the bill that the independents, those not affiliated with producers and not connected with the Big Eight, so-called, avail themselves of the same sales methods, block booking, if you please, which section 3 seeks to prohibit. I shall not bother to read the testimony, but, as a practical matter, distribution by the Big Eight and by the independents also, is, to a substantial degree, by the method here sought to be outlawed. The whole process of distribution in the United States is by the method which the pending bill seeks to outlaw.

Mr. President, why have distributors generally adopted this method, and why do a very large portion of the very nearly 18,000 distributors approve this system of distribution?

There are two certain answers to these questions. First, it affords an opportunity not otherwise available to work out in advance an ordered system of distribution of pictures throughout the country and for an entire season. It would not be possible efficiently and with negligible margin of error to distribute 25,000 miles of film daily to 18,000 picture houses in every part of the United States, a distribution involving 15,000,000 transactions a year, without knowing with a reasonable degree of certainty a reasonable time in advance where a particular picture was wanted and when it was wanted.

The task of supplying pictures involves an original plan of distribution, it involves the collection of pictures when once shown, it involves the inspection of the films, their repair, and their redistribution over and over again.

The record shows beyond question that producers, distributors, and exhibitors recognize these facts, and yield to them, some exhibitors with grumbling, and perhaps with reluctance, but most of them without complaint, for they accept it as the best method of distribution the industry has as yet been able to evolve.

A second reason for the general acceptance of this system is the appreciation by the exhibitors that if they did not buy usually in blocks, or in substantial numbers, but relied wholly or chiefly on separate leases, trading for one picture at a time, the exhibitor would be at the mercy of the distributor. He might well find himself without needed pictures, and he would then have to pay what the distributor exacted or close his house. Expressed another way, the exhibitor would face a seller's market.

Now, to emphasize what I have just said, I wish to read the statement of one of the witnesses coming from the Middle West as bearing on this question, and I will read only a part of his testimony. This man is the owner of a theater in St. Joseph, Mo. He is president of the Kansas-Missouri Theater Owners' Association, comprising approximately 400 theaters in Kansas City and the western half of Missouri. The set-up of that organization is such that its membership consists both of independent and affiliated circuits, as well as the individual exhibitor owning and operating one or two theaters in one community or town. I quote from his testimony as follows:

At the time when the Neely bill was first introduced, and before I was able to secure a copy of it, I felt that something was really happening that would be of great benefit to the independent exhibitor. However, after securing a copy of the bill and analyzing it, I have found that as it is drawn it is neither practical nor workable, but that it will work a great hardship on all exhibitors, especially the independent exhibitors.

In my opinion, the independent exhibitor cannot buy one picture at a time, nor is it possible to comply with section (4), dealing with blind selling, since it necessitates his personally viewing each picture before buying. This creates a situation that would be devastating in its effect in my particular locality.

He said again:

As you have been informed in previous testimony, motion pictures have no staple value and no set value. The distributor attempts to secure the highest rentals he can, and the exhibitor attempts to buy the pictures at prices he can afford to pay. This bill, if enacted, will place the exhibitor in a precarious position, since he will have to make a deal for one picture at a time; and being in constant need of pictures to fill out his programs, the exhibitor will be at the mercy of the various film salesmen who may raise his prices to the point where he can no longer exist.

Senator WHITE. Let me see if I get what you mean there. You mean that the exhibitor will be in a position where he will have to take any pictures that the producer offers him?

Mr. CASSIL. I mean this: In buying en bloc, you buy a year's output. Naturally, the distributor is, for instance, going to call on me as early as possible to secure a contract for that year's service.

Senator WHITE. When you close your contract, you are taken care of for a year?

Mr. CASSIL. That is right. * * *

The point I am really trying to make clear is that they would do it.

That means that the distributor would exact the price from the exhibitor who was trying to buy a single picture.

The witness further said:

I have no love for the distributors.

In other words, here is the idea. We would be in constant need of pictures. They could wait us out—dealing in one picture at a time—until the time they knew we had to have pictures.

Senator WHITE. That is what I thought your point was.

Mr. CASSIL. Then I would be absolutely at their mercy, because I would either have to deal right along or stay closed for that particular period.

Mr. President, these considerations to which I have alluded make clear that this wholesale method of leasing is founded on reason, and is not arbitrary compulsion of unwilling lessees. Compulsory block booking, Mr. President, is in truth a fiction. Compulsory block booking is nonexistent. Whatever may be the charges and the countercharges, the figures in the record show that a competitive situation exists among producers, and that exhibitors have both a substantial right of selection in making the contracts and a large privilege of cancelation with respect to particular pictures, notwithstanding general acceptance of the wholesale lease and orderly distribution policy.

Mr. President, I have a list to which I shall make hurried reference. Twentieth Century-Fox Films, one of the Big Eight, so-called, for the 1937–38 playing season offered 57 pictures. One picture was the subject of 12,214 contracts. That was the highest number. Those 57 pictures run all down the list until you come to the lowest, with only 3,581 contracts, or a spread between the highest and the lowest of 8,633 contracts.

Mr. President, that demonstrates either a power of selection or a large power of cancelation, and it probably means both.

Paramount Pictures for the season 1937–38 put out 50 pictures. One picture was contracted for 13,200 times. Going down the list we come to the bottom one with 3,947 contracts, a spread of 9,353 contracts. Again a demonstration of power of selection or a large use of the power of cancelation.

R. K. O. Pictures: For the 1937–38 playing season R. K. O. produced 46 feature pictures. They leased or contracted for one picture 9,567 times, and another picture, down at the bottom of the list, only 845 times, a spread by R. K. O. of 8,722 contracts—again a demonstration of the power of selection or the wide use of the power of cancelation.

Universal Pictures produced 34 pictures for the 1936–37 playing season. Ten thousand five hundred and sixty-nine contracts were made for the most popular picture and 2,315 for the least popular, a spread of 8,254 contracts.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer produced 45 pictures for the 1937–38 season. There were 10,873 contracts for the most popular picture and 5,455 contracts for the picture at the bottom of the list, a spread in that case of 5,418 contracts.

Columbia Pictures produced 38 feature pictures for the 1936–37 playing season. There were 10,298 contracts for one of them and 2,006 contracts for another, a spread in that instance of 8,292 contracts.

Taken in the aggregate, these figures demonstrate the power of selection by exhibitors throughout the country. Again I say there is the widest possible leniency in the matter of cancelation by exhibitors.

Let me state a few more facts about cancelations. I have here a note as to a picture which I am told is one of the great pictures of the country. I myself do not attend motion pictures. I refer to the picture Music for Madame. I understand it is one of the high-grade pictures. That picture had 5,873 cancelations. In the picture Music for Madame, Nino Martini, one of the greatest singers of our time, was starred.

Quality Street, the Sir James M. Barrie story, had 4,837 cancelations.

Hitting a New High, with Lily Pons, had 4,862 cancelations.

The Great Garrick, based upon the life of that great English actor, had 3,389 cancelations.

April Romance, built around the life of Franz Schubert, had 3,871 cancelations or failures to play the picture.

A Midsummer Night's Dream had 2,971 cancelations.

Great Expectations, the Charles Dickens story, had 2,730 cancelations.

Under Your Spell, starring Lawrence Tibbett, the great American baritone, had 2,135 cancelations.

Another picture, with Lily Pons, had 1,472 cancelations.

As against these high-grade pictures, what do we find?

Mae West's first two pictures, She Done Him Wrong and I'm No Angel, had not a single cancelation.

I have before me a list of other pictures, including Lady Be Careful, The Last Gangster, Big City, Desire, Alcatraz, Her Jungle Lover, Dracula, and Frankenstein, the last two being so-called horror pictures. Those pictures had less than 20 cancelations each. I submit that these latter figures do not argue strongly for the effectiveness of a high standard of local choice.

There is more testimony about cancelations. Take the case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Last year, that company produced Romeo and Juliet at a cost of $2,800,000; and yet 590 theaters took advantage of the cancelation clause. In the same year that company brought out a story based upon the life of Al Capone, entitled "The Last Gangster." In the case of that picture there were only 13 cancelations, as against 590 cancelations for Romeo and Juliet.

Apple Blossoms, an outstanding picture, starring Richard Tarbell, a fine concert signed, had cancelations from 3,900 theaters, while only 13 theaters canceled Big City, having to do with taxicab racketeers.

The classic called A Christmas Carol was released last December, and at the time of the hearings that picture had already received 1,292 cancelations.

Those are the pictures of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Let us take the case of R. K. O. What is the record?

For 1936–37 R. K. O. produced 46 pictures. Only 33 percent of the lessees took the entire output of R. K. O., notwithstanding all the talk we hear about compulsory block booking. That year R. K. O. received cancelations in rentals totaling $776,867. Talk about compulsory block booking! In 1937–38 this same concern offered 40 feature pictures, and only 32 percent of the lessees took the entire number. The cancelations that year of pictures put out by R. K. O. amounted, in rentals, to $976,425.

One of the witnesses for the bill, while insisting that he could reject only 10 percent of the pictures included in the blocks of certain producers, admitted that with another company he had bought a selective contract, and he said he picked out perhaps 26 out of 45 or 50 pictures that that particular concern makes.

Mr. President, these facts and figures speak for themselves. I think they should convince any disinterested person that compulsory block booking is not a reality as of the present, but that the power of selection and cancelation is a substantial right widely exercised by exhibitors. That it is not more general is without question due to the advantage to all of the other method, the wholesale leasing method.

What of the future? Already a new motion-picture code has gone into effect. The new motion-picture code by its terms gives an absolute right of cancelation to the extent of 20 percent when the film rental averages $100 or less per picture. This right applies to approximately 10,000 theaters in the United States in towns of less than 10,000 population. This means that in 8,230 of the 9,187 towns in the United States theaters are given a 20-percent right of cancelation.

The code gives a 15 percent right of cancelation when the rentals average between $100 and $150. This would cover 4,000 theaters. It gives a 10-percent right of cancelation when the average rental is more than $250 per picture.

In addition to this absolute right to cancel pictures, a further right is given, subject to arbitration, to cancel any picture which offends the morals or the racial or religious sensibilities of the community where it is sought to be shown.

Mr. President, pictures have constantly improved in quality. In support of this conclusion I call not the many who oppose this legislation, and who assert this statement to be true, but a principal witness for the bill. I quote a witness in behalf of the bill:

In other words, in justice to the distributors I am willing to say that the moral level of the pictures has been elevated during the past 2 or 3 years due to the influence of the Legion of Decency.

I may say parenthetically that the Legion of Decency, established by the bishops of the Catholic Church of America, is opposed to the bill. The same witness from whom I have just quoted, in answer to my question as to what percentage of pictures produced and sold under the system of which he complained are of a character not to be shown to the public of America, answered:

Answering that literally, I would say that perhaps only 1 or 2 percent to the public of America, if you mean by that the general public.

Mr. President, I pass on to section 4, which undertakes to make unlawful what is called blind selling. The section is uncalled for. To meet its requirements would demand that present methods of selling be abandoned and a new system created. In many, and, indeed, in most instances, pictures are now leased before they are made. They are bought on the reputation of the producing company and of the actors playing in the pictures.

The overwhelming weight of the testimony is that compliance with section 4 is impossible. Bear in mind that the section makes it unlawful to lease or offer to lease any motion picture unless the distributor shall furnish the exhibitor at the time of making such lease or offer to lease a complete and true synopsis of the contents of such film including such details as are set forth in the section.

Let me illustrate by the story of a single picture the impossibility of observance of this requirement. I shall read in this connection from the record in the case. This has reference to one of the most recent pictures, Alexander Graham Bell, and this is the testimony of the representative of the company which produced that picture. It bears directly on the question whether the provisions of section 4 can be complied with under the present methods of picture production in the United States. While the quotation from the testimony is rather long, I think it is interesting and I am going to read it. I quote as follows:

I have selected, not because I wanted to for this purpose but because I happened to be here on another errand when I was asked to stay over and appear before this committee—I happened to be here in connection with our picture called Alexander Graham Bell. At least 2 years ago we commenced the study of the life of Alexander Graham Bell and his invention of the telephone. That study took us personally and physically to England and to Edinburgh, which was where Alexander Graham Bell himself had his beginnings; it brought us to Canada, to Bramford, where his parents lived for a time; to Boston University, where he was a teacher of elocution; to Clark School for the Deaf; and finally into Boston itself as an individual endeavoring to invent the telephone.

We had to contact all of these sources of material. We had to talk with the people most definitely interested, and our trail finally led here in Washington to Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, who is the wife of Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, the editor and publisher of the National Geographic Magazine. Mrs. Grosvenor is the eldest daughter of Alexander Graham Bell and Mabel Hubbard, his wife.

Our contact with them began after we had written our first treatment. If it had been necessary for us to have complied with section 4 of the Neely bill we would have issued as complete and as true a synopsis of our picture, Alexander Graham Bell, as we could as early as the beginning of 1938, in order that the selling of that picture, which probably occurred—I know very little about the selling and distribution end of our business, but probably the selling of it occurred during the summer of 1938, and it would have been necessary for us to have issued a synopsis of a story which confined itself at least half to England and to Scotland, about a quarter to his efforts in connection with the multiple telegraph, and only about the final quarter would have been the story of the invention of the telephone in Boston. Honestly and completely that would have been the story that we would have attempted to have sold our exhibitors. That would have been a direct violation of section 4 of the Neely bill, because by the time the picture came out that would not have been a complete and true synopsis of the life or the story of Alexander Graham Bell, even though it was called American Miracle instead of the story of Alexander Graham Bell, which is the title under which the picture has been sold.

By March of 1938 we had commenced to change the name. At least, we had two names on this treatment, Alexander Graham Bell or American Miracle.

At that time, if we had tried to make a complete and true synopsis of our picture, we would have told the exhibitors that Tyrone Power and Nancy Kelly were to have the leads in the picture. We would have spent at least half of our time with the multiple telegraph, and that would have left out almost entirely that very tender and very fine relationship which existed between Mabel Hubbard, the deaf daughter of Gardiner Hubbard, a great name in business, a great lawyer, international in his scope, and we would have confined ourselves almost entirely and completely to the multiple telegraph and the little variations from that that led him into the telephone.

By May 12, 1938, we had developed a plot. I must explain to you, if I may, sir, and to Senator NEELY, that these early treatments are developed primarily to get a line on the story. As we go on through the treatment we try to develop the plot, the dramatic elements of Alexander Graham Bell's life concerning the invention of the telephone. The dramatic elements were two. One was the invention of the telephone itself, which, when you see it on the screen in this stage of the development, was a relationship of batteries and wires and all the paraphernalia that go with electrical mechanism, which cannot be dramatized; and his struggle for the invention of the telephone which, in real life, took 12 years of litigation—his struggle to make his patents hold up.

I omit a portion because time is running.

In August 1938, about the time, I think, that the story would have been actually sold, we developed what we call a first-draft continuity, which puts this treatment, with some variations, into language and scene directions. This is complete [exhibiting a volume]. It is 166 pages long. It has 276 scenes, and there is dialog in each scene; and even under the provisions of (b) of section 4, covering the treatment of dialog with reference to vice or crime or sexual passion—of which there is none in this picture, of course—we might have been able to say something about the dialog that would appear in this picture.

Between August 8 and October 29 I personally had had the privilege and pleasure of spending weeks of time with the Bell family here and abroad; with the Bell Telephone Co. in their home office in New York, and in their laboratory; and I had discovered that there was more real drama and more real motion-picture entertainment in the real facts that they were able to give me, the little things that they were able to supply for us, than we had conceived of, so that the continuity of August 8 was almost entirely thrown away. The story line was kept, but the continuity, the description of scenes—

Were completely changed.

The changes from October 28, 1938, through November 4, 1938, and finally to December 1, 1938, are refinements. The story line had been changed. The story line in August and the story line in October are as different as two different stories could possibly be.

I skip again some portions of the testimony.

I suspect that the people who are proponents of this bill would have thought that by then at least we would be able to send out a complete and true synopsis of our Alexander Graham Bell picture. I don't know who it is that is going to get caught on this. I would be the one to send the picture out, and I do not know whether I am the one who is going to spend a year in jail or not; but if we had sent this final script out on December 1, 1938, my wife would have had to find $5,000 for me and I would have to spend a year in jail, if the bill means what it says it does, because after the picture went into production, between the time it went into production and the time it was put in the final can and shipped east 123 complete scenes were changed in the entirety and 48 minor changes were made in 36 additional scenes.

Technically we could not have complied with section 4 of the Neely bill until the picture itself was in the can and out of the laboratory and ready for distribution.

Mr. President, the blind sales complained of are not to the American public but to a limited number of exhibitors. Conceivably they, or some of them, might lack the knowledge they would like to have, and possibly ought to have when they lease a film; but if we have an obligation it is not to the two or three thousand exhibitors who favor this bill but to the 85,000,000 of our people who patronize the box offices of our theaters, and section 4 gives them no new assurance whatsoever as to the pictures they are to see. The exhibitor, under the present criticized practice, knows what is in the picture when he shows it, when he advertises it upon the billboard and in the local newspapers, just as he will know the picture should section 4 become a law, but he will face under this section no obligation whatsoever to give to the public any information concerning the picture that he cannot now give.

The exhibitor under the present criticized practice knows what is in a picture when he shows it and advertises it upon billboard and in local paper, just as he will know what is in the picture should section 4 become law; but he will face no obligation under this section to give to the public any information concerning a picture which he cannot now give. He will face no obligation under this section to give any information whatsoever unless he so chooses. The section gives no promise to the theatergoer of America, young or old. The testimony is that it would require a complete abandonment of the present methods of production and of distribution, with no assured good to any one of those in whom we profess an interest.

Mr. President, the consideration which has moved many organizations—especially many organizations of women—throughout the country to support the bill is the belief, expressed in various ways, that it would result in a larger opportunity for them to influence for the better the quality of pictures shown in their several communities. There is nothing in the bill which sets up a means or method for exerting this community influence. There is no determination as to which of the many groups said to be interested in the legislation is to pass judgment in a given community on the quality of a picture. There is no assurance that the group getting the ear of the exhibitor will have a higher standard than some other group, or a more accurate judgment than the exhibitor himself as to community tastes. There is no obligation upon the exhibitor to pay the slighest attention to one group or to withhold the showing of any picture he desires to show. After all is said and done, the rank and file of picturegoers in a community register through the box office their desires as to pictures shown; and we but delude ourselves if we think they will submit to censorship by any self-constituted picture critics in their city or in their town.

I would not argue against the helpfulness of local influence; but such experience as we have teaches that the great improvement of pictures must be at the source. Betterment must come in the subject matter and its treatment when the pictures are made. It will not result in satisfactory degree from efforts to control the local exhibitor, or to conform the cultural standards of people of many races and many creeds and many standards of life and conduct to the ideas of any community group.

The record of local efforts to do this is not sufficiently encouraging. A principal witness for the bill—and the witness was referring to cancelations through local action, said:

> To cancel a picture would immediately give it wonderful advertising value in hundreds of other communities, and would do more general harm than good.

While perhaps not so intended, this is a forceful argument for the proposition that pictures will not be elevated by local attacks upon a particular picture. The effort should be—it must be, if it is to be effective—directed generally to the character of pictures produced. It will not come through sporadic efforts by scattered groups with varying interests and uncertain standards.

Another witness in behalf of the bill says this in referring to the accomplishments of a local film council acting as a review board, previewing pictures:

> But this is rather interesting: A picture turned down by the Worcester Review Board is advertised as such on the billboard in the center of the town, with the additional information that it is being shown in a nearby town and that busses leave there every 15 minutes for that town.
> As a matter of fact, pictures have been frequently shown in Boston with an advertisement carrying these words: "Banned by the Worcester Board of Review. Come and see."

Here, again, out of the mouths of those supporting the bill we get the truth as to local influence by any group, however high-minded the members thereof may be. I give it as my opinion that public influence must be exerted chiefly and directly upon the producing company at the source of production, or we must rely upon the taste and judgment of the eighty-five millions of Americans who enter our theaters each week, or—the alternative—we muct accept censorship of pictures by lawful authority; and the latter alternative the American people will not permit. Pictures that once enter the stream of commerce—the stream of exhibition, if I may so express it—will be shown. Our problem, the problem of those desiring clean, wholesome, and educational pictures with entertainment value, is how to get such pictures made. I think our own sense, the judgment of those informed as to the picture industry and the record in this case, all bring conviction that there must be a high sense of public responsibility in the industry, and that the public pressure must be exerted when and where the picture is being made, and not elsewhere and thereafter.

Mr. President, that is the purpose and that is the effort of the best of the producing companies, of the organization known as the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; that is the ambition of the Production Code Administration; it is the hope of the great Catholic League of Decency; it is the means which other organizations and high-minded persons believe should be adopted, rather than the measures proposed in this bill.

This policy, and efforts in its behalf, have already justified themselves. In 1922 only 25 percent of the pictures previewed by the International Federation of Catholic Alumni were approved. In 1927 about 40 percent were passed. In 1930, when the second Motion Picture Code was in existence, 50 percent were approved. Between 1930 and 1934 the percentage went to 77 percent, and as other organizations have exerted their influence, the standards have still further improved.

I again refer to the testimony of a vigorous proponent of the bill, who said, "Perhaps only 1 percent or 2 percent should not be shown to the public of America." That children should not see many more in addition to this 1 or 2 percent is surely true, but the fathers and the mothers of America must assume their part of the responsibility for the training and education of our youth. This obligation cannot be shifted to statutes, community influence, or this or that or the other group.

Mr. President, many persons and groups of persons of the highest purpose earnestly support the proposed legislation, but they have no monopoly in proper motives. Small picture exhibitors, those interested in civic matters, educators, women, mothers, oppose it, because they believe it to be the wrong approach or because they believe its effects will be harmful to the industry, and will retard the progress toward better pictures now definitely going on.

I mention but a few of the persons holding these views, and give but the barest summary of their conclusions.

Mrs. Martha W. S. Addoms is the chairman of the Motion Picture Council for Brooklyn, N. Y., an organization which seeks, through every means in its power, to unite the exhibitors and the public in the common purpose of maintaining a high standard in motion-picture entertainment. Mrs. Addoms is a woman of intelligence, a woman of character, a woman interested in the public weal, and she says:

> It is our belief that the best interests of our large cosmopolitan community will be best met by the defeat of the Neely bill.

I quote her again:

> Our experience does not substantiate the objection that a community is limited in its choice of films. No request for change of film for reasonable and satisfactory reason has ever been refused us by any one of the large circuit managers. Programs can be changed, sophisticated pictures can be grouped in midweek, and family films at week ends, and the number of films to which objection can be brought for racial, religious, or moral grounds will easily fall within the allowed percentage of cancelation.

Again I quote from her testimony:

> We are convinced that the average small exhibitor, if left to himself to select will find his position far worse than at present. The small independent stands somewhat alone. He usually runs a small house, and must compete with the "big fellow" up the street.

I quote further:

> The Motion Picture Council for Brooklyn holds no brief for block booking of itself. To us it represents the best method of wholesale distribution which the producers have as yet been able to work out. To us it insures a continuous flow of more or less satisfactory films, and many that are exceptional. To us it means the maintenance of the production code, which is an absolutely necessary bulwark if decency is to be maintained.

Another witness was Mr. Frederic M. Thrasher, a professor of education and director, motion-picture study, New York University, and technical director of the Metropolitan Motion Picture Council. He stated:

I have read carefully the Neely bill (S. 280) to prohibit block booking and blind selling, and in my opinion this legislation will serve no useful purpose either in the direction of the improvement of trade practices in the motion-picture industry or in the improvement of the motion-picture product to be exhibited in the theater.

I quote again:

In my opinion the abolition of block booking and blind selling would not improve the product, that is, the quality of motion pictures now being made and exhibited in the theaters. In fact I believe it would have a deleterious effect upon the exhibition of pictures in general.

He was asked to explain, but I shall not undertake to quote that part of the testimony.

I now wish to quote from Mrs. John Franklin Noble, president of the Better Films Council of Greater St. Louis. She stated:

Our whole trouble, 100 percent, has been with the pictures that are sold singly, and right now we are circularizing those sources we think necessary with a warning against some of these pictures.

She stated again:

Single production buying would make it almost impossible for certain types of neighborhood houses to show the better pictures, because the prices for such single productions would be prohibitive. We feel that block booking, within reason, is like quantity buying—you can do better. Therefore, we ask that your committee recommend that the pending legislation be withdrawn.

Mrs. Lawrence S. Ackers, of Memphis, Tenn., for 8 years has been president of the Better Films Council of Memphis, for 3 years has been district chairman of motion pictures for the Tennessee Federation of Women's Clubs, and for 1 year has been State chairman of motion pictures for the Tennessee Federation of Women's Clubs. She stated:

I have been called on to organize numerous better films councils in Tennessee, Mississippi, and Arkansas.

I quote again from her testimony:

The Memphis Better Films Council has a membership of 158 women's groups of all kinds. Included among them are various religious, civic, educational, and patriotic organizations.

I quote further from her testimony:

Never at any time have I found that block-booking and blind buying have interfered with my work. When an exhibitor buys his pictures by this method he is given a cancelation privilege, and for that reason I have never accepted block booking and blind buying as an excuse for showing of any particular picture. The truth is that the only objectionable pictures that I have encountered in recent years have been those which were not approved by the Production Code Administration, nor sold in blocks, but which have been distributed singly. Does this indicate that block booking and blind buying have been responsible for truly objectionable pictures? Certainly not.

* * * * * * *

Let me again emphasize one fact, that through public patronage of the higher type pictures, and through public patronage alone, can the question of proper moral standards in pictures be solved. I urge this committee to report unfavorably on the Neely bill.

Mrs. Edmund M. Barsham, of Wilmington, Del., testified:

I am representing the Wilmington Civic Federation of Women's Clubs and allied organizations, comprising 67 member groups; the Wilmington Better Films Council, comprising 53 groups; both of which have taken action against the Neely bill.

I quote only one part of her testimony:

Did anyone ever hear that the method by which the automobile dealer purchases his cars, the method used in purchasing food by the grocer, or the purchasing methods of the clothier in securing the clothing we wear had a thing in the world to do with quality? I never did, and I don't believe it does. Why, then, is it reasonable to expect that a change in sales methods would have anything to do with the quality of pictures shown? As I see it, the quality of pictures can be regulated and assured only in the studios in which they are made, and not by a change in sales methods.

Then there is testimony by the vice president of the North Carolina and South Carolina Theater Owners' Association against the bill. There is also the testimony of Mr. Ralph Block, representing the Screen Writers' Guild, in which he testified as to the impossibilty—and he speaks with authority—of complying with section 4.

Leo Brecher, of New Rochelle, N. Y., representing the Independent Theater Owners' Association of New York, an organization of some 400 neighborhood theaters, spoke in opposition to the bill, and I shall quote just a line or two from what he testified:

The matter of block booking is one purely of trade practices. It is purely a matter of competitive conditions. There have been made here statements that block booking is something that has been imposed upon independent theaters only and not imposed upon producer-affiliated theaters. That is not the truth. In New York the producer-controlled theaters are obliged to buy their films on a block basis because it is the only way they can secure a supply of films. In other localities they can buy on a selective basis, but the same thing is true of the independent exhibitors.

I quote again:

In my opinion, the enactment of the Neely bill—not the enforcement of the bill, but the mere enactment of it—will cause such dislocation in this business that only a few powerful units will be able to survive it. If I wanted to monopolize this motion-picture business, I could not conceive of a shrewder method of accomplishing that than to have this Neely bill. There are not three producing companies in existence today that are in a position to lay in enough of an investment in films to be able to continue in the business, to be able to show them to the exhibitors in order to avoid the dangerous pitfalls of that provision for a true and complete synopsis to be given in advance, for it has been demonstrated that it is impossible to give a true and complete synopsis in advance.

Frank H. Cassil, of St. Louis, Mo., president of the Kansas-Missouri Theater Owners' Association, comprising approximately 400 theaters in that immediate neighborhood, says—and I have already quoted him in part, in connection with another phase of this problem—

The distributor attempts to secure the highest rentals he can, and the exhibitor attempts to buy the pictures at prices he can afford to pay. This bill, if enacted, will place the exhibitor in a precarious position, since he will have to make a deal for one picture at a time; and being in constant need of pictures to fill out his programs, the exhibitor will be at the mercy of the various film salesmen who may raise his prices to the point where he can no longer exist.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator tell us whether this witness or members of his association are exhibitors purely, or are they interested in the production or distribution of pictures?

Mr. WHITE. I can only give the Senator what the witness says himself. He said:

I am owner and manager of the Rialto Theater, St. Joseph, Mo., and I am president of the Kansas-Missouri Theater Owners' Association, comprising approximately 400 theaters in Kansas City and the western half of Missouri.

There is nothing in the testimony, so far as I recall it, which indicates that he is at all interested in production, but he is interested in exhibiting, and he speaks from the standpoint of the exhibitor in those Midwestern States.

Mrs. Piercy Chestney, president of the Macon Little Theater, Macon, Ga., and president of the Better Films Committee, testified. That committee represents more than 75 organizations. Mrs. Chestney is a woman of intelligence and character, who is interested in all that is best in this country of ours. What does she say?

Boiled down, the situation seems to me to be this: The improvement in pictures has been so decided that whether an exhibitor buys in a block or buys separately, the result would be the same; he would practically be compelled to show what we, the public, call a good picture, as that, with few exceptions, is all he can buy.

William F. Crockett, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Virginia, testified. He speaks as a representative of the small exhibitors in the State of Virginia, and I believe, though I am not certain, that his organization reaches over into the northern part of North Carolina. He speaks as a small picture exhibitor in opposition to the bill.

Mrs. Samuel A. Ellsworth, of Worcester, Mass., executive secretary, Worcester Board of Motion Picture and Theater Review, testified. She has also been the motion picture adviser for the girls' reserve group at the Y. W. C. A. I will not quote her, but I simply place her as among those women of high character and high purpose who oppose this legislation.

Then there is Mrs. Mildred B. Flagg, of Newtonville, Mass. She is vice president of the Boston City Federation of Clubs, representing 85,000 men and women. For 15 years she has been a writer and speaker on the subject of motion pictures and their effect on our national life. She is the mother of two daughters, one in Wellesley and one in Smith. She is a public-spirited woman of education, interested in all those things which make for the best in our social and civic life. She voices her opposition to the bill.

Then there is a representative of the Southeastern Theater Owners' Association, composed of theater owners and managers in Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and east Tennessee, representing more than 400 theaters. He was instructed by the directors of the association to protest the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know whether the Senator earlier in the proceedings, or in his speech, made a statement as to whether or not he wished to be interrupted. If the Senator has no objection to being interrupted in his speech I should like to ask him to yield at this point.

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I would say as one Member of the Senate, who has not been a member of the committee, that I should like to know what is behind the measure; what evils existed, and what was the propelling force which led to the introduction of such a bill? In other words, it is either an imaginary set of conditions which do not exist at all, and somebody is trying to regulate this great industry, or there were certain facts, certain circumstances, certain evils, certain conditions which aroused someone and some groups of people to appeal here for legislative action. I should like to know if there was such background as that.

Mr. WHITE. Unquestionably there was. I have no doubt that in the years past there were many pictures of a low order produced and shown. But in later years all over this country there has been an effort, not alone by local groups, but by organizations, such as the great Catholic League of Decency, sponsored by the bishops of the Catholic Church of America, to improve the character of pictures shown.

Mr. WALSH. Then the Senator's contention is that this regulatory measure comes too late; that such action should have been taken 10 years ago before voluntary action was taken by the industry to stop some of the evils which he says exists.

Mr. WHITE. No. The first proposal for legislation of this character was made some 10 or 11 years ago. I think there has been a tremendous change in the character of motion pictures since that time.

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that. Everyone will agree with that. Is it the Senator's position that there is now no need for legislation of this kind, because the industry itself has cleaned house?

Mr. WHITE. I think the industry has cleaned house. I think it has set up the machinery by which improvement will still continue. I think the testimony shows that the proposed legislation will be disruptive of a great industry. There is testimony tending to show that the legislation will result in a lowering of picture standards rather than to raise them.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator. He has enlightened me. But I still have in mind that for several years past, exhibitors have called upon me and have made vigorous protests, and have told me that they were being ruined, that they were being destroyed and driven out of business by some of the practices of the producers. I confess I have not had time to go into all the details and the facts, and that is what prompts my inquiries.

Mr. WHITE. There are 17,541 exhibitors of pictures in the United States today. Of this total number of exhibitors there is a group called Allied States Theatres. I do not know the exact name. Some say there are 4,000 of these 17,000 or 18,000 in that group. Others testify there are only about 2,000 in that group. However, somewhere between 2,000 and 4,000 of the almost 18,000 exhibitors in the United States are in that group who favor this legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is a very bitter feeling existing undoubtedly on both sides of this issue. Permit me to read a telegram in reference to the very matter the Senator just spoke of. The telegram is from Arthur K. Howard, secretary, Independent Theater Owners of New England:

> We are greatly alarmed because a Paramount representative has misinformed exhibitors here about the Neely bill and has solicited letters and wires expressing their opposition. Urgently request you vote favorably bill S. 280 to abolish compulsory block booking and blind selling in motion-picture industry.

I have several similar telegrams, and I have letters from some of the organizations, groups of whom the Senator has quoted, religious, educational, charitable, and other organizations, that have impressed me with the fact—I do not want to do the industry injustice—that there really was an evil here, that there was a condition that was not approved by the general public, and that was injurious to the exhibitors, and had a tendency to compel the exhibition of pictures that individual exhibitors and the public did not want.

Mr. WHITE. I congratulate the Senator that he did not hear all of my statement, but had the Senator heard me, I think he would have had knowledge of the fact that there is a tremendous body of testimony to the effect that the enactment of this measure will in no respect help the situation, but on the contrary is likely to prejudice it, and I have just been citing the views of many persons, some from the Senator's own State.

I was just about to quote the testimony of another witness, who, I think, is from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator. I am sorry I interrupted him in the midst of his speech.

Mr. WHITE. I am trying desperately to conclude.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has been reading letters. I have received a letter from Mr. Claude M. Fuess, headmaster of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.——

Mr. WHITE. I have no doubt the Senator has many such letters.

Mr. WALSH. Phillips Academy is one of the finest preparatory schools for young men in the United States. I doubt if Mr. Fuess writes frequently to public men on public questions. He says:

> PHILLIPS ACADEMY,
> Andover, Mass., January 24, 1939.
> Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
> Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Without wishing in any way to influence your action, I should like to tell you how important from the standpoint of schools like my own it is that the new Neely bill for abolishing compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion pictures should be passed. The measure is, it seems to me, a just one, and will do much to raise the standard of the motion-picture industry. I hope that you will be able consistently with your conscience to give it your support.
> Please do not trouble to answer this letter. I should hate to have you feel that I am to be a troublesome constituent, but this measure seems to me to be of great importance.
> Cordially yours,
> CLAUDE M. FUESS.

I do not know Mr. Fuess. He is not a man who mixes in public affairs. He is the head of a fine institution. His letter deeply impresses me. He has taken the time and the trouble to write to me.

Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee. In conclusion, I should like to know, first, whether or not an evil exists. Everyone knows that it existed at one time. Does it still continue? Has it been remedied? Should we let the industry alone because it has cleaned house? Do evil practices in the industry still continue?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I thought the Senator wished to ask me a question. I have been speaking for more than 2 hours, and I am very anxious to conclude.

Mr. WALSH. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator is always very fair, and I deeply and sincerely value his opinions. I have found that it has been helpful to me to ascertain what is behind any proposed legislation, and who is promoting it. Is there an evil? What is the reason for the agitation? Is it merely a bill to embarrass an industry and to promote agitation against a large, high-class industry?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have been expressing my views about the whole situation for nearly 2 hours. I have no question that the gentleman to whom the Senator refers entertains the views he has expressed. I simply think he is all wrong.

Howard M. LeSourd, dean of the Graduate School of Boston University, says of himself:

> My avocation is the development of programs for the use of motion pictures in religious and character education. I started that work 10 years ago, when a committee—of which I was chairman—surveyed the use of motion pictures for religious education.

The work carried on by the committee of which he was chairman was so impressive that the Rockefeller Foundation appropriated $150,000 to continue and develop the program. His conclusion is hostile to the bill, and he recommends that it be not passed.

Dr. Russell Potter, of Columbia University, representing the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, a voluntary association founded in 1909, growing out of the People's Institute at Cooper Union in New York City—which organization has a record of more than 25 years of voluntary activity all over the country through its local councils in the interest of better pictures—appeared as a witness. I cannot pick out a short quotation from his statement, but he does not approve the bill.

Mrs. Fred Stephenson, of Springfield, Mass., past chairman of the Springfield Motion Picture Council, and at present a member of the Springfield Board of Education, said:

> You can readily understand why I consider that we do have a choice of selection, and why I am convinced that the method of approach to this problem is not through legislation, but, rather, is through a wholehearted attempt at mutual understanding and common interest between the industry, the public, and those interested in the continued betterment of motion pictures. When the public is better informed and is more thoroughly aware of its responsibility in the support of the truly good pictures, then the future of motion pictures will be assured.

Stanley Sumner, of Cambridge, Mass., is the operator of the University Theater at Cambridge, Mass., located in Harvard Square, directly opposite Harvard College and adjacent to Radcliffe College, Sargeant School, a part of Boston University, and numerous preparatory schools. He has been a manager of theaters since 1911. I quote two brief paragraphs:

> I have never, in 25 years, been forced to show or pay for a picture that I did not personally consider to be fit and proper to show to my audience, although during practically the entire time I have bought under the system referred to as block booking and blind buying; and, gentlemen, I want to emphatically impress upon you that I am an independent exhibitor enjoying no special privileges, and without affiliation with any group of theaters or distributors.

Mrs. Charles W. Swift, of Elmira, N. Y., president of the Elmira Motion Picture Council, which has a membership of 45 organizations from civil, religious, and educational groups, says, among other things:

> In those 10 years I have been working I have seen a steady increase in the quality of pictures that are both entertaining and educational from 30 percent that would be recommended to 95 percent at the present time.

Another witness was Lyle M. Wilson, of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., an exhibitor, and president of the Theater Owners of North and South Carolina. He says:

> I am not familiar with the operation of theaters in large metropolitan centers of the North. My situation is just that of the average small-town operator, but hundreds of exhibitors such as I am make up the exhibitor organization of the Carolinas.
> The proponents of the bill, I believe, are misinformed as to the actual workings of the bill as it will apply to their individual situations. Educational pictures of the higher type may be bought separately under the new bill, but also pictures unsuitable for any type of audience.

Quoting again:

> It is my opinion that the exhibitors of North and South Carolina are not in favor of the pending measure, and I urge you gentlemen to give this bill an unfavorable report.

Mr. Harry G. Hogan, of Fort Wayne, Ind., is an exhibitor. He gave us a most interesting discussion of the industry and of the bill. I shall quote only two or three paragraphs from what he said:

> The proponents of the Neely bill, unlike some exhibitors, go beyond criticizing block buying, which, it must be admitted, is organized, is workable, and is distributing pictures profitably and cheaply, to the advantage of the producers, exhibitors, employees, and the public. The Neely bill, before making any considered effort to alter the system in a practical way, proposes to wipe it out entirely without offering any practical, organized substitute, but giving instead an undisclosed trade-practice system, wide open at both ends, minus traffic markings or signals from either the industry or Congress—a system that will disrupt the supply of pictures to the exhibitor.

I should like to quote further from his testimony, but I shall pass on.

Mr. President, I should like to read the testimony of some other witnesses, but I must conclude. I have made only casual reference to the opinions expressed by the American producers of films themselves, and of those engaged in the distribution of the largest part of the films shown in the theaters of the United States. Theirs is interested testimony, to be sure; but it is expert testimony, and it is hostile to the bill. It is to the effect that the bill would disrupt and utterly destroy the method of distribution worked out through the slow process of business evolution; that the results would be increased costs to the exhibitors and the theater goers of our country; that it would seriously and adversely affect picture production, and would surely make for the elimination of the small producer, and result in a still greater concentration of production in the hands of a still smaller number of large and amply financed companies; that it would lessen the efforts and the effectiveness of those who have been striving, through pressure and persuasion exerted at the source of production, to elevate picture standards in our country; and that it would in truth lower rather than raise the entertainment, educational, and social value of American pictures. Mr. President, in these conclusions I concur.

I wish that groups throughout our country who seek a betterment in our picture standards would carry on their educational work and their other appeals to this end, but I am convinced, from such study as I have been able to give to this problem, that such of them as urge this legislation are, in this effort, in grave error. I beg them to consecrate their energies and their high purpose to a worthier cause than the enactment of this bill.

Mr. President, a bill in almost the precise terms of the pending measure has been pending in the Congress for some 10 or 12 years. In all this time such a bill has never received the sanction of the other branch of the Congress. Why must we of the Senate continue to give our time and our efforts in its behalf until the other body gives evidence of some degree of approval? Up to this time, notwithstanding hearings and study, the committee of the House having jurisdiction has never, in the span of years, stamped this legislation with its favor. That, I submit, reflects the judgment of the great Interstate Commerce Committee of the other body as to the wisdom and the merits of such legislation as we now consider. Why must we again pass a bill that it may be welcomed elsewhere with bloody hands to a hospitable legislative grave?

Mr. President, over and over again we hear asked the questions, "Why is American business timid? Why does it not invest in plant enlargement? Why does it not increase employment of our idle millions, and make its possible contribution to the wealth of this Nation of ours?" A great committee of the Senate has been recently urged to study and find the answer to such questions.

Mr. President, I suggest that a part, at least, of the answer is in just such legislation as is now before the Senate—legislation frightening and disorganizing a great industry and disrupting its methods, with no assured betterment to anyone.

Mr. President, I have heard much in these latter days of a policy of appeasement toward our business life. Could America be assured that an era of good feeling between Government and business was at hand, our country would witness an amazing expansion in all fields of industrial development, and we would go forward as a people to better and to happier days. Here and now, Mr. President, is the opportunity for the Senate to make its contribution to this desired end by the defeat of the pending measure.

AMENDMENT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

During the delivery of Mr. WHITE's speech,

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to call up a conference report?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the conference report on Senate bill 1796 which recently came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate the report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by adding after section 15a the following new sections:

"'SEC. 15b. No bonds shall be issued by the Corporation after the date of enactment of this section under section 15 or section 15a.

"'SEC. 15c. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the Corporation is authorized, after the date of enactment of this section, to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $61,500,000. Such bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds which may be used for the following purposes only:

"'(1) Not to exceed $46,000,000 may be used for the purchase of electric utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Company and Southern Tennessee Power Company, as contemplated in the contract between the Corporation and the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and others, dated as of May 12, 1939.

"'(2) Not to exceed $6,500,000 may be used for the purchase and rehabilitation of electric utility properties of the Alabama Power Company and Mississippi Power Company in the following named counties in northern Alabama and northern Mississippi: The counties of Jackson, Madison, Limestone, Lauderdale, Colbert, Lawrence, Morgan, Marshall, De Kalb, Cherokee, Cullman, Winston, Franklin, Marion, and Lamar in northern Alabama, and the counties of Calhoun, Chickasaw, Monroe, Clay, Lowndes, Oktibbeha, Choctaw, Webster, Noxubee, Winston, Neshoba, and Kemper in northern Mississippi.

"'(3) Not to exceed $3,500,000 may be used for rebuilding, replacing, and repairing electric utility properties purchased by the Corporation in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section.

"'(4) Not to exceed $3,500,000 may be used for constructing electric transmission lines, substations, and other electrical facilities necessary to connect the electric utility properties purchased by the Corporation in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section with the electric power system of the Corporation.

"'(5) Not to exceed $2,000,000 may be used for making loans under section 12a to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations to enable them to purchase any electric utility properties referred to in the contract between the Corporation and the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and others, dated as of May 12, 1939, or any electric utility properties of the Alabama Power Company or Mississippi Power Company in any of the counties in northern Alabama or northern Mississippi named in paragraph (2).'

"The Corporation shall file with the President and with the Congress in December of each year a financial statement and complete report as to the expenditure of funds derived from the sale of bonds under this section covering the period not covered by any such previous statement or report. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than fifty years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ per centum per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ per centum per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. None of the proceeds of the bonds shall be used for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 12a of this Act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds under this section shall expire January 1, 1941, except that if at the time such authority expires the amount of bonds issued by the Corporation under this section is less than $61,500,000, the Corporation may, subject to the foregoing provisions of this section, issue, after the expiration of such period, bonds in an amount not in excess of the amount by which the bonds so issued prior to the expiration of such period is less than $61,500,000, for refunding purposes, or, subject to the provisions of paragraph (5) of this section (limiting the purposes for which loans under section 12a of funds derived from bond proceeds may be made) to provide funds found necessary in the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation prior to the expiration of such period, under the authority of section 12a."

And the House agree to the same.

E. D. SMITH,

G. W. NORRIS,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
B. K. WHEELER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. MAY,
EWING THOMASON,
DOW W. HARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Nebraska advise the Senate of the material points involved in the conference report?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to do so. The Senate bill authorized the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue bonds in the sum of $100,000,000 for certain purposes. Authority to carry out those purposes had, with very slight exception, previously existed. The House bill reduced the amount of bonds which could be issued to $61,500,000. The conference report agrees to the figures of the House bill providing for the issuance of bonds in the amount of $61,500,000, and earmarks the $61,500,000, with respect to the particular properties which may be purchased from the proceeds of the bonds. The remainder of the report follows the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The $61,500,000 will be sufficient to buy the properties that are now contracted for, will it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that will mean that the agreement will be consummated?

Mr. NORRIS. That is my understanding. Of course, technically speaking, the period has expired within which the contract could be ratified by which the sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. property was made to the T. V. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. So they will have to make a new contract. But both sides are anxious to make it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it will be a matter of form of going through and changing the date of the contract.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I express to the Senator, the chairman of the Senate conferees, my very great thanks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not the chairman.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is a member of the Senate conferees. The Senator has done a great deal of fine work in this matter, and I appreciate it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question. He may have explained the matter already. I was called out of the Chamber temporarily and did not hear all of his explanation. What happened to the provision put in the bill in the House restricting very drastically the territory?

Mr. NORRIS. That provision of the House bill was not agreed to and is not in the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. What are the provisions now in the bill as to the taxation of the property?

Mr. NORRIS. There is no reference whatever to taxation in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—ADDITIONAL CONFEREES

During the delivery of Mr. WHITE'S address:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interruption?

Mr. WHITE. I yield, if it will not take much time.

Mr. HARRISON. It will take but 2 minutes.

Mr. WHITE. Very well, I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the House today appointed seven conferees on the part of the House on House bill 6635, it is felt that two additional Members of the Senate should be added to the list of the Senate conferees. I request that two additional conferees be named on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I inquire what the motion is?

Mr. HARRISON. The House has appointed seven conferees on the social-security measure. The Senate appointed five conferees last night after the bill was passed. I merely ask that two additional members of the Committee on Finance be named as conferees on the part of the Senate on the social-security measure, as their names appear in order on the list of members of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the ranking minority member of the committee has been consulted in respect to this matter?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that the suggestion came to me from the House. The conferees were appointed according to the quota of membership on the committee as between the Republicans and the Democrats. With the two additional Members to be appointed there will be five Democrats and two Republicans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understood that my name was one of the two added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that action, and in order of rank I suppose I would be eligible for appointment; but in view of the numerous duties I have to perform, which make it difficult for me to attend all the conference meetings, I ask to be excused from appointment as one of the Senate conferees, and suggest that the next ranking Member be appointed in my place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will name as conferee the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in place of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have the names of the conferees read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the names of the two additional conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the names of Mr. WALSH and Mr. CONNALLY.

Mr. McNARY. Five conferees were appointed last evening. Who are they?

Mr. HARRISON. Senators were appointed conferees in order of seniority on the committee. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], myself, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. We have learned since that action was taken—that the House has named seven conferees—and it was suggested at the other end of the Capitol that two more Senators should be added as members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate. They have been named as their names appear in order on the list of members of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] as additional conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5748) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate recede from the so-called Norris amendment. The conference report on the T. V. A. measure has been adopted this afternoon and that eliminates the question covered by the amendment. I should like to have the Senate recede, therefore, so that the bill may go to the President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate just what the bill is and what the amendment is?

Mr. HARRISON. This is a bill which was considered and passed by the House, I think unanimously, and passed by the Senate without any opposition. It deals with amendment of the Second Liberty Bond Act. When it was considered the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offered the T. V. A. agreement plan as an amendment, which was adopted, but there is no need for that now, as an agreement has been arrived at, and the Senate this afternoon has adopted the conference report on the T. V. A. measure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Mississippi in his request. It will be remembered that during the discussion which took place on the amendment I stated in effect that when the House voted on the T. V. A. measure, as they have done, no matter how the vote went, I would be willing to recede on this particular amendment. I think the Senator from Mississippi is justified in making his motion. It carries out what I believe was the understanding of the Senate when the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi that the Senate recede from its amendment to House bill 5748.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT LIBRARY

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes, which were on page 2, lines 20 and 21, to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Federal Works Administration"; on page 2, lines 22 and 23, to strike out "Procurement Division of the Treasury Department" and insert "Public Building Administration"; on page 3, line 3, to strike out "Procurement Division" and insert "Public Building Administration"; on page 3, line 5, to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Federal Works Administration"; on page 6, line 7, after "Library." to strike out all down to and including "prescribe." in lines 10 and 11; on page 7, line 5, to strike out "Director of the National Park Service" and insert "Commissioner of Public Buildings"; and on page 10, to strike out lines 3 to 13, inclusive.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the Government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to have the Senate take action on the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I feel very guilty about taking so much time. I have given assurance to the Senator from West Virginia that I shall make every effort to conclude in a short time.

Mr. OVERTON. It will take only 2 or 3 minutes, if that long.

I submit the conference report on House bill 5610, the District of Columbia supply bill, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, and 71.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000,000", and on page 2, line 8 of the bill after the word "Columbia," insert the following: "and this Act shall be effective as of July 1, 1939, and any appropriations and authority contained herein shall have the same force and effect between June 30, 1939, and the date of the enactment of this Act as though the same had become law on July 1, 1939; and the acts of any officer or employee performed during such period in anticipation of the appropriations or authority contained herein shall not be invalidated, declared ineffective, or questioned solely because of the lack of such appropriations or authority during such period,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,623,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$900,000, and not to exceed 10 per centum of this appropriation and of Federal grants reimbursed under this appropriation shall be expended for personal services, including the employment of one general superintendent of public assistance services at $5,600 per annum, one assistant superintendent of such services at $4,600 per annum, and one stenographer-typist (secretary) at $2,000 per annum, to be appointed without reference to civil-service requirements,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN H. OVERTON,
CARTER GLASS,
ELMER THOMAS,
WILLIAM H. KING,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROSS A. COLLINS,
GEORGE H. MAHON,
KARL STEFAN,
FRANCIS H. CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from the President of the United States addressed to me, and a letter from the President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to me, both of them bearing upon the matter contained in the conference report, and ask unanimous consent that both of the letters be included at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 14, 1939.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERTON: I am deeply concerned by the situation which currently affects the government of the District of Columbia. More than 10,000 employees will be payless on Saturday.

There is even a question as to the right of the Commissioners to continue the employment of the firemen, policemen, street cleaners, school janitors, court attendants, etc., etc., where no appropriation to pay them exists.

As you know, I have directed the District Commissioners to continue the necessary functions of the District of Columbia government for the very obvious reason that if these functions are not continued the safety of life and property and the normal occupations of the more than half million people of the District would become impossible. There has to be a continuing government.

For this reason I think it is of the utmost importance that in order to maintain local government, a joint resolution be passed authorizing the District government to continue for a week or 2 weeks or a month, and appropriating enough money to carry this out.

I hope that this can be done before Saturday because very many of the employees are greatly dependent on their pay checks.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. JOHN H. OVERTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Washington, June 28, 1939.

Hon. JOHN H. OVERTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on District of Columbia Appropriations, Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR OVERTON: Pursuant to your request during the conference between yourself and the Commissioners yesterday afternoon, they wish to advise you as follows concerning their attitude respecting the appropriation for emergency relief of residents of the District for the fiscal year 1940:

The Commissioners submitted an estimate of $900,000 for this purpose to the Budget Bureau and that Bureau approved that amount. This also was the amount approved by the House. The Senate has increased the amount to $1,500,000, of which not to exceed $300,000 is made available for relief to unemployed employables. This matter, it is understood, is one of the major amendments in disagreement between the House and the Senate.

The Commissioners have given careful consideration to this matter, and in view of the present status of the District appropriation bill for next year it is their opinion that the $900,000 should be approved at this time, subject to the condition that the Commissioners may, if such action be deemed advisable, recommend a supplemental appropriation for inclusion in an early deficiency bill in the next session of Congress.

This conclusion has been reached by the Commissioners primarily for the reason that beginning with July 1, Mr. Otto J. Cass, now deputy administrator of the local Works Progress Administration, will be appointed Superintendent of Public Assistance Services, and in that capacity will have charge of the administration of relief appropriations. The Commissioners have discussed the matter in question with Mr. Cass, and he has advised them that it is his intention to cause an immediate investigation of the relief case load in the District, as the result of which he will report to the Commissioners before January 1, 1940, whether an appropriation in excess of the $900,000 will be required. If he finds such to be the fact, he will recommend to the Commissioners that they request of Congress, through the Budget Bureau, the granting of a supplemental appropriation for such amount as may be found to be necessary.

In view of the foregoing the Commissioners feel that at this time, and subject to the condition herein stated, the Senate would be justified in receding from its amendment to increase the relief appropriation to $1,500,000.

Very truly yours,

M. C. HAZEN,
President, Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question? It will take no time.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator please tell us what the conference report shows with respect to the amount of money carried by it?

Mr. OVERTON. The bill provides $6,000,000 as a Federal payment by the National Government for the upkeep of the National Capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign the bill during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and requesting a still further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERTON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, agree to the still further conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERTON, Mr. KING, Mr. GLASS, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROHIBITION OF BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING OF MOTION-PICTURE FILMS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I offer and move the adoption of three amendments, which have been printed. I ask that the clerk read the first one of them.

Let me state, before the amendment is read, that all these amendments have been designed for the purpose of meeting objections made by those opposed to the bill. So far as I know, there is no objection on the part of anyone to the adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). The first amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

(7) The terms "aggregate price" and "price" as used in section 3 (1) shall mean the aggregate of all flat rentals, and of all rentals based upon a percentage of prospective receipts together with any other consideration named in the lease or offer to lease.

Mr. NEELY. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not wish the adoption of these amendments to foreclose a discussion of their provisions and their relation to the bill. I say frankly that I have been in committee meetings all day and I desire to speak at considerable length upon the bill. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendments with the understanding that if, in my discussion and after reading them, it becomes necessary to reconsider the action upon them, that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. I ask that the next amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On pages 4 and 5, it is proposed to strike out all of section 3 (1) and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. (1) It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more films and to require the exhibitor to lease all such films or permit him to lease none; or to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in a block or group of two or more at an aggregate price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films, or for a number or numbers thereof less than the total number, which aggregate price and separate and several prices shall bear to each other such relation (a) as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire and prefer to procure for exhibition, or (b) as tends to require an exhibitor to lease such entire block or group or forego the lease of any number or numbers thereof, or (c) that the effect of the lease or offer to lease of such films may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the production, distribution, and exhibition of films; or to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition films in any other manner or by any other means the effect of which would be to defeat the purpose of this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not know how that amendment relates to section 3. I desire to say frankly that I hoped we could obtain a vote on the bill this afternoon. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has advised me that he desires to speak on the bill, and I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] desires to speak on it. I do not wish to shut off any Senator on either side from speaking on the bill; but I doubt very much whether Senators are willing to stay here very late tonight in order to get a vote on the bill. I will say further that I had hoped and still hope we may avoid a session tomorrow. There is not much legislation of great importance on the calendar for consideration next week and I should be perfectly willing to enter into an agreement to vote not later than, say, 3 o'clock on Monday if we could have an agreement of that kind. I think the Senate would be glad if we could avoid a session tomorrow. I do not think it would take long on Monday, anyway, even without an agreement; but I realize the desire to dispose of the bill. I doubt very much whether the Senate is in a mood to remain here late tonight in order to vote.

Earlier in the day, thinking we would finish the consideration of the bill, I advised a number of Senators that in all probability we would not have a session tomorrow, and based upon that, some Senators have left the city.

It is immaterial to me when the vote comes; I am willing to remain here today, or to be here tomorrow, and will, of course, be here on Monday, but, as I see it, there is nothing pressing about voting at any particular time. Of course, in order to get an agreement to vote at a certain hour on Monday or on any other day it would be necessary, under the rules, to call a quorum, unless we could waive that. I propose this unanimous-consent request, that the requirement of the rule for calling a quorum be waived, and that at not later than 3 o'clock on Monday the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and on all amendments thereto without further debate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to that, with the understanding that I may claim the floor at 12 o'clock when the Senate meets on Monday.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I had very sincerely hoped that there could be a vote on the bill tonight, and I think there still could be a vote without the Senate remaining in session longer than 6 or 6:30 o'clock, p. m. A Senator has told me within the last 2 hours that he has been told by a representative of the opposition that if this bill should be enacted no producer of films could offer to sell more than one film at a time without the executive incurring the risk of being sent to jail and made to pay a heavy fine. I know that the city is full of that kind of propaganda. I wish we could avoid having it continue over the week end. Of course, if the Senate wants to adjourn, and is not willing to come back tomorrow and address itself to the pending legislation, to obtain a vote on which I have done all in my power for more than 6 months, of course I am helpless in the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NEELY. Is not the Senator from Kentucky willing that we may dispose of the three amendments I have offered? They have been thoroughly discussed, they have been on the desk for weeks, and every one of them is offered for the purpose of appeasing the opposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to disposing of the amendments. The only thought I had in mind was that the amendment now offered is a complete substitute. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine. I do not know how the amendment now offered affects section 3 as it is in the bill. Has the Senator from Maine familiarized himself with it? My thought was that if we did not vote on the bill today, the amendment might be printed and voted on Monday, although I have no interest in the amendment one way or the other.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. One of the amendments—and I do not have clearly in mind at the moment which one it is—I think is harmful rather than helpful; but there is only one of them to which that statement applies. Taken as a whole, I do not think they make any change at all in the meaning and the effect of the proposed legislation. I think they are merely a substitution of words, with no change in the meaning or the effect of the language, save in one case. In one case I think the noose is drawn a little tighter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I see no harm in the amendment going over until Monday; but if the Senators desire to have a vote on it, I do not object.

Mr. NEELY. I do not insist, and I do not insist on the adoption of the amendment. Frankly, I would rather have all the amendments defeated. They were offered in an effort to avoid unnecessary controversy on the floor of the Senate, merely as an appeasement of the opposition, because it was thought they met objections made by the spokesmen for the Moving Picture Trust. So far as I am concerned, I should be very glad to have all three amendments rejected, but I promised in the hearings that I would offer the amendments, and I am now offering them in order to keep the promise I made.

Mr. WHITE. I have spoken so much on the bill that I shall not say a word about the amendments. I do not care much whether they are adopted or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On pages 5 and 6, it is proposed to strike out section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion-picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition any motion-picture film or films over 2,000 feet in length unless such distributor shall furnish the exhibitor at or before the time of making such lease or offer to lease an accurate synopsis of the contents of such film. Such synopsis shall be made a part of the lease and shall include (a) a general outline of the story and descriptions of the principal characters, and (b) a statement describing the manner of treatment of dialogs concerning and scenes depicting vice, crime, or suggestive of sexual passion. It is the purpose of this section to make available to the exhibitor sufficient information concerning the type and contents of the film and the manner of treatment of questionable subject matter to enable him to determine whether he wishes to select the film for exhibition and later to determine whether the film is fairly described by the synopsis.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this morning I received a letter—I do not know whether other Senators received a similar letter—from the president of the American Federation of Labor with respect to the pending bill, which I ask to have read and inserted in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 13, 1939.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to advise you that the American Federation of Labor is firmly opposed to Senate bill, S. 280, commonly termed the "Neely block booking and blind selling bill."

This opposition is based upon a conviction which prevails among working people employed in motion-picture theaters throughout the land that it will create uncertainty regarding employment. They are firmly of the opinion that it will tend to promote unemployment among those employed in the motion-picture industry. It is charged by these workers that if this bill is enacted into law, it would serve to reduce the amount of work which is being performed in the motion-picture industry at this time.

I hope and trust the bill herein referred to will fail to pass.

Very sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to read into the RECORD a letter I have received and have it appear immediately following the letter from Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, which the Senator from Kentucky has had inserted in the RECORD. The letter I desire to appear in the RECORD is dated July 10, 1939, and reads as follows:

CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, D. C., July 10, 1939.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NEELY: The bill, S. 280, reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the Senate has been the subject of investigation and study by our committee on legislation.

We understand that the double purpose of this bill is (a) to establish community freedom in the selection of motion-picture films, and (b) to relieve independent interests in the motion-picture industry of monopolistic and burdensome trade practices.

Organized labor is interested in both of these matters. Your efforts to eliminate the abuses arising out of the monopolistic control in the motion-picture industry through this legislation are, therefore, deeply appreciated.

On behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations I beg to express to you our complete and wholehearted support of your measure, S. 280.

Sincerely yours,

LEE PRESSMAN, General Counsel.

NOMINATION OF ELMER D. DAVIES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, as one of the Senators who joined with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] in his motion to reconsider the confirmation of Mr. Elmer D. Davies, I wish to ask the privilege of the Senate to have inserted in the RECORD a letter of protest which I received from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. I also wish to say, Mr. President, that I intended discussing the subject at the time the nomination in regular order would have been considered, but, unfortunately, and as has already been explained, the nomination was considered by unanimous consent out of order, and confirmed.

I also realize, as has been expressed by the junior Senator from New Jersey, that the circumstances under which the nomination was considered were such that we could not find fault with or accuse any Senator or Senators of unduly expediting this particular nomination. We realize the circumstances fully. However, what happened indicates how necessary it is for the Senate to follow the usual procedure with respect to the Executive Calendar, and how helpful it is to Senators to have the ordinary procedure with respect to the calendar followed, especially with regard to nominations.

Mr. President, I have been told that the candidate has been endorsed by a number of representative people and a number of representative organizations. Information has come to me today that religious leaders, labor leaders, and representatives of the colored people and of the Jewish people have recommended and endorsed the candidate. But it is unfortunate that time and opportunity were not given to the Senate to bring out the attributes of the candidate. It is regrettable that opportunity was not given to us to present the opposition—to present matters that have come to us by way of telegrams and letters and word of mouth.

However, under the circumstances I think it is due the Senate from those who are supporting and have supported the candidacy of Mr. Davies, to take time and opportunity in the future to give to the Senate the information and the details which were available to the subcommittee when his nomination was considered.

I, therefore, ask, Mr. President, that the letter to which I have referred voicing the protest of this representative organization be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, where is that organization located? Is the letter from an organization in Tennessee?

Mr. MEAD. No. It is from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Its headquarters is in New York City, and it includes in its membership Representatives of the House and of the Senate and other outstanding citizens of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the insertion of the letter in the RECORD, but if the Senator will yield to me, I wish to say that earlier in the day there was placed in the RECORD all the testimony on both sides which came before the committee, both in protest against the candidate and in his favor. The Senator can find it tomorrow published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and when he reads it, if he will read it, as I hope he will, I am sure he will be perfectly satisfied with the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Davies.

I wish to say to the Senator also that he will find other statements from practically all the colored organizations of the State of Tennessee, as I recall—I think all of them, and I know from the most important ones—supporting Mr. Davies.

Mr. Davies is a man of the highest character. A number of Jewish citizens came forward and endorsed him. Quite a number of Catholic citizens came forward and endorsed him. I do not believe there were colored witnesses before the committee; but a number of telegrams and letters were received from prominent colored educators, notably one, Dr. W. J. Hale, one of the leading colored men of the South, living at Nashville, who has known Mr. Davies for many years. He supported Mr. Davies.

Mr. President, the nomination has been before the Senate for some time. A hearing was held at which everyone who wanted to be present could have been heard. Any Senator who wished to have been present could have attended the hearing. A number of Senators were present at the hearings. Witnesses on both sides appeared and were heard. They were examined with care, as the Senator will see in reading the RECORD tomorrow. Knowing the Senator from New York as I do, knowing his fairness and his sense of justice, I am quite sure that the Senator will come to the same conclusion to which the subcommittee and the full committee came, namely, that Mr. Davies was entirely the proper person for the position and that his nomination should have been confirmed, as it was confirmed 2 days ago.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I realize that the senior Senator from Tennessee exercises meticulous care generally in all his selections. That his selections have been wise and prudent is readily realized when we look at the record of the senior Senator from Tennessee and his long service in the Senate of the United States. But I wish to say to him that I was not alone in my anxiety to register the attitude of some of my people in connection with the confirmation of this nomination. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] was not alone in his desire to register his opinion. If I read the record aright, even the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. ASHURST] was rather anxious to discuss the nomination and was rather exercised about the manner in which its confirmation was had.

However, I make no objection, and I join with the Senator from New Jersey in expressing my opinion that there was no desire on the part of the sponsors to hurry the matter along. It was necessary for them to attend a very sad mission in their State. I merely express the thought that it will be better for the candidate, it will be better for the Senator from Tennessee, and it will be better for the Senate if this matter and other matters of serious import are widely discussed, not only in this instance but in the future, before final action is taken.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] asked to be heard about this matter. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] did not ask to be heard about the matter. I do not recall with respect to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I think he was absent on account of illness in his family.

However, there was no opposition after the hearing was had. There was no opposition on the part of anyone in the committee on either side of the aisle; and it was the most natural thing in the world to suppose that no one objected to the nomination. The nomination had been before us for a long time, and there was ample opportunity for anyone who wished to be heard. There was a public hearing, and it seems to me anyone who was interested could have been heard in the matter.

That being the case, there having been a vacancy for several months, and there being a very great necessity for the confirmation of this candidate for judge, on Thurdsay, after talking with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and after his very courteous agreement, he being a member of the committee, in the usual and ordinary way I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the nomination. I did not know of any objection, and I do not think my good friend the Senator from Vermont knew of any objection. The nomination was confirmed; and in the natural order of things it was desirable that he should enter upon his duties as soon as possible, so I asked unanimous consent that the President be notified, which request was granted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot let the statement of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] pass just as it is, because I think it might be misleading.

Since the occurrences to which the distinguished Sentor from Tennessee has referred, I have found that I had in my office a telegram calling attention to objections to the nominee. The fact is that I did not identify the telegram as applying to this particular nomination. It is true, as stated by the Senator from Tennessee, that I thought no objection whatever had been interposed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had not received such a telegram, and no such telegram had been called to my attention. I did not know of any objection of any kind upon the part of any Senator; and I thought the matter had been disposed of in the committee.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have no desire longer to delay the proceedings. I merely mention my interest in this matter in order that it may be made a part of the RECORD, and in order to register the position of the organization whose name I have already mentioned.

I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that just a few moments ago I said that I had heard some very complimentary things said about the nominee. I understand he has been endorsed by labor, religious, and racial groups. I said it was unfortunate that opportunity was not given at the proper time for us to bring out the facts and ascertain both sides of the case, so as to permit the Members on each side of the aisle to have opportunity to voice their sentiments with regard to the nominee, his fitness, and his affiliations. So, Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the letter to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE,
New York, July 7, 1939.

Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MEAD: We have sent the following telegram to Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, protesting favorable report on the nomination to the Federal bench of Elmer D. Davies of the middle Tennessee district because of his admitted membership in the Ku Klux Klan:

"The National Association for Advancement of Colored People takes this means for formally protesting approval by Senate Judiciary Committee on nomination for Federal judgeship of Elmer D. Davies, of Nashville, Tenn. This association on April 11, 1939, telegraphed protest to President Roosevelt and Attorney General Frank Murphy against sending of Mr. Davies' name to the Senate because of irrefutable evidence that Mr. Davies had been an active member of the Ku Klux Klan in Nashville and, so far as could be ascertained, has not resigned from that infamous organization. On April 13 this association submitted to the President and the Attorney General photostatic copy of affidavit from N. S. Noble, of Nashville, in which Mr. Noble under oath asserted Mr. Davies had been a fellow member of the Klan. In view of admission yesterday to your committee by Mr. Davies himself of his membership, and because we believe that membership in an organization as notorious as the Klan, whose purpose is to negate Federal Constitution, demonstrates that Mr. Davies is not man of judicial temperament who belongs on Federal bench, we urge the Judiciary Committee refuse to report his nomination favorably to the Senate."

We strongly urge you to oppose and vote against confirmation, should the nomination be reported favorably to the Senate. In times like these, when racial hatred and bigotry are threatening the entire world, this is no time to put a man on the Federal bench of the United States who joined an organization like the Ku Klux Klan, whose sole purpose is that of fostering racial hatreds and bigotry.

Ever sincerely,

WALTER WHITE, Secretary.

CRITICISM OF WAR-TAX BILL PROVISIONS WITHOUT BASIS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, some time ago a large group of Senators—in fact, 50 Senators—joined in introducing a bill which has been commonly designated as the war-profits bill, and which bears the number S. 1885. The bill has been before both Houses of Congress since 1935, and its provisions are well known to all interested parties.

Upon its introduction this year it was rather bitterly assailed by at least two columnists whose syndicated articles appear in a great many newspapers. It very clearly appeared from their criticism that neither of them had read the bill before assailing it because they overlooked one of the most important provisions of the bill—a provision which had to do with the credit for payment of State taxes. Upon several occasions attention has been drawn to this distortion of fact, but, so far as I have been able to determine, no correction has been made by either of the columnists.

Certainly no one will deny, Mr. President, the right of any human being freely to criticize any sort of legislative proposal. However, it seems to me that that very freedom carries with it some rather definite obligations—one of which is to correct an obvious misrepresentation. Certainly a bill which bears the sponsorship of 50 Senators ought to be treated with some consideration by those who would sit in judgment on its clear provisions. That is particularly true in a case in which newspapers which receive observations from columnists are compelled to rely upon the accuracy of the material, because the editor probably has very little opportunity to check up on it.

I am glad to note that one prominent publication in this country, the United States News, the columns of which contain so much information of importance to Members of Congress, on becoming aware of the fact that it, in common with other newspapers, had been rather misled into putting the stamp of accuracy on the statements of these columnists—who apparently do not relish the idea of taxing profits during wartime—has seen fit to publish a statement setting forth the real facts as to the particular aspect of the bill which the columnists so severely criticized.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a formal statement which I have prepared, which sets forth the editorial from the United States News, and also an editorial in the column of Mr. John T. Flynn, a prominent writer of the News, whose articles adorn the editorial pages of many prominent newspapers.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRITICISM OF WAR-TAX BILL'S PROVISIONS WITHOUT BASIS

The comments of certain publicists on the war-tax bill (S. 1885) have been rather widely quoted. These comments reveal an utter absence of knowledge concerning the provisions of the bill. This measure was drawn for the specific purpose of taxing the profits out of wartime operations in order to raise funds to pay for a war as it is being fought, thus avoiding wartime inflation, post-war deflation, and a frightful burden of debt on future generations.

The particular criticism which has been quoted as indicated and which is wholly without basis, purports to describe the effect of the tax set up in the bill on net incomes of more than $75,000 a year. This criticism was summed up in an editorial in the United States News, of Washington, D. C., in its issue of May 15, 1939, on page 3, which said:

"These figures, of course, account only for Federal taxes. To these Mr. Blank would have to add State income taxes. In fact, a millionaire neighbor of Mr. Blank with an annual income of more than $75,000 might theoretically owe Federal and State Governments more than his income."

Subsequently the United States News reexamined the bill and found that it was in error in making the statement I have just quoted, and in its issue of May 29, 1939, on page 7, published the following editorial statement, which I quote in full:

"THE MAXIMUM WAR TAX UNDER SENATOR BONE'S BILL

"In the May 15 issue of the United States News, in an article on page 3 analyzing three plans prepared in Congress to prevent war, it was stated that under a bill (S. 1885), introduced by Senator BONE, a person earning more than $75,000 a year might have to pay more in State and Federal taxes than the amount of his income.

"The United States News was in error in making this statement. Section 23 (c) of the Bone bill makes it impossible for a person to be required to pay more in taxes than he earns in income. The clause does this by permitting the taxpayer to deduct taxes paid, other than Federal, from his taxable income, so that the Federal tax proposed by Senator BONE would be levied only on that portion of income that remains after other taxes are paid."

Commenting on the last editorial statement from the United States News, Mr. John T. Flynn, well-known publicist of New York and frequent contributor to prominent publications, had the following to say in his column which appears in many newspapers.

"Some time ago Senator HOMER T. BONE and 49 other Members of the Senate introduced a bill known as the war-profits bill. Its objective is always stated to be to take the profits out of war. Actually its general aim is to protect the economic system against the terrible effects of war inflation.

"When the bill was introduced, various newspapers made a tremendous pother against the bill on two points. One was that the tax rate in the bill was such that on incomes over $75,000 the taxpayer would actually have to pay more in taxes than he received in income. One leading New York newspaper was so stimulated by this discovery that it featured the subject for 2 days in an effort to destroy the bill by ridicule. The other point was that the Senators who sponsored the bill had not read it.

"At the time sponsors of the bill pointed out that the criticism was a manifestly unjust one. They offered explanations of the error into which newspaper critics had fallen. But unfortunately this got no space in the critical journals.

"But now, one newspaper has had the sense of justice to point out in very generous terms the fact that in printing these criticisms of the bill it was in error.

"The original criticism was that after a taxpayer had paid the high rates fixed for the war period in the Senate bill and had then paid his State income taxes he would have paid out more than his total income. Now, the United States News has printed the following statement about this:

" 'In the May 15 issue of the United States News, in an article on page 3 analyzing three plans prepared in Congress to prevent war, it was stated that under a bill (S. 1885), introduced by Senator BONE, a person earning more than $75,000 a year might have to pay more in State and Federal taxes than the amount of his income. The United States News was in error in making this statement. Section 23 (c) of the Bone bill makes it impossible for a person to be required to pay more in taxes than he earns in income. The clause does this by permitting the taxpayer to deduct taxes paid, other than Federal, from his taxable income, so that the Federal tax proposed by Senator BONE would be levied only on that portion of income that remains after other taxes are paid.'

"Now as to the second criticism—that the Senators who sponsored the bill did not read it. The interesting feature about this is that the charge was made by newspapers which clearly had not read the bill themselves or they could never have made the blunder they did in their first ridiculous error.

"The publication of an ill-digested, unconsidered criticism like this, particularly when offered with all the pretense of careful analysis, necessarily does the cause of truth in a measure so important no end of harm. The United States News alone has had the grace to acknowledge the error." (Washington News, June 5, 1939.)

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The Presiding Officer (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the Chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of several second lieutenants of the Officers' Reserve Corps to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 17, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 14, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our God, who art the Spirit Infinite and Eternal, we bless Thee for the preservation of our lives, for the sanctity of our homes, and for the stability of our Republic. With a conscious realization of our dependence on Thee, we pray for wisdom and understanding to guide us in the way of truth and for strength to resist that which is wrong. It is written:

Not every one that saith unto Me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven.

May our labors be wise and leave us sweet. Make our hearts temples of virtue with thrones of whiteness. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1878. An act to provide for the distribution of the judgment fund of the Shoshone Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

S. 2662. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey an easement in certain lands to the city of New York, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6635. An act to amend the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of "hot oil" and interstate oil-compact legislation, and to include therein a letter addressed to me by Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Commonweal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement of August A. Busch, Jr., before the Labor Committee this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement from the International Chamber of Commerce, a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State to the International Chamber of Commerce, and a short statement by Frederick W. Nichol, published in the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative program today and following the special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE WAGE-HOUR ACT

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, insofar as I have been able to learn, not a single Member of this House nor a single member of the Committee on Labor has voiced objection to the provision which was carried in the proposed amendments to the Wage-Hour Act which would afford relief to the small telephone exchanges throughout the country. The report filed by the Committee on Labor expressly states that—

> Small telephone companies on the whole are unable financially to comply with the wage provisions of the act.

The committee further states in its report that—

> The exemption for the operators of some small telephone exchanges is necessary to insure uninterrupted telephone communication service for the farmer and for the small rural community.

Despite this general sentiment in the Labor Committee and among members of the House, relief for small telephone exchanges is permitted to languish only because the item which would provide such relief is associated in the same bill with other items which are controversial. We are on the threshhold of adjournment. It is a sad commentary upon legislative procedure that such a situation should exist. I cannot escape the conviction that the Labor Committee will be regarded as derelict in its duty if it fails to report a measure which will afford relief for such small telephone exchanges, quite aside from whatever action it may deem necessary, wise, or expedient with respect to other provisions in the bill which it sought to bring before the House through a suspension of the rules.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made by Hon. Richard T. James, deputy secretary of state, at the sixteenth annual pilgrimage of the Boonville Press Club to the grave of Nancy Hanks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

FREE HARLAN COUNTY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the morning papers carry the information that John L. Lewis requested that Attorney General Murphy send, and Murphy has sent, into Harlan County agents of the Federal Government to ascertain whether citizens of Harlan were deprived of their civil liberties.

None in this House may greatly admire me, but none can truthfully charge that I ever intentionally deceived you. Monday and Tuesday of this week I spent in Harlan County, Ky., and on my responsibility as a Member of the House, I state that, if appearances and statements made to me by miners as well as by operators and owners are any criterion of the feeling in Harlan County, the workers of that county want none of John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers. It is their overwhelming desire that they be left alone to solve their industrial problems.

No one can successfully contradict the statement that, for months, Lewis and his United Mine Workers by force and by violence, and the National Labor Relations Board by intimidation, have attempted unsuccessfully to force the miners of Harlan County into Lewis' organization.

There are hundreds of instances where Lewis' agents, his "flying squadrons," spurred on by William Turnblazer of Tennessee, and George Titler, have deprived citizens of Harlan of their civil liberties, of their right to work.

Lewis and Murphy, when Governor, dovetailing their activities, the National Labor Relations Board sitting idly by, deprived thousands of Michigan citizens of their civil liberties. Is Murphy again going to the rescue of Lewis in Harlan County? Does he intend now to use the power of the Federal Government, as before he used the power of the State of Michigan, to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights? Is he now sending agents of the Department of Justice down into Harlan County to aid Lewis in his campaign of intimidation?

The record showing that Lewis has deprived citizens of Harlan of their civil liberties is uncontradictable. Let Murphy exert the power of the Federal Government to protect law-abiding citizens whose only desire is to support themselves by honest toil, rather than lend a show of that power at Lewis' suggestion to force free-born Americans into Lewis' organization.

Let Murphy and the National Labor Relations Board act to preserve constitutional rights, rather than as the puppets of John L. Lewis.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. THORKELSON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from two letters which substantiate statements I have made here in the past.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein two brief tributes to the Mount Rushmore Memorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE PERIL OF MONOPOLY—BY THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we will soon vote on the conference report on the Tennessee Valley Authority bill. I wish to call to the attention of the House, and especially to the Republican Members, a statement made by Theodore Roosevelt in a message to Congress a generation ago, warning the American people that one of the greatest questions now before them or that would be before them for the next generation was the power monopoly, and also warning them not to let the hydroelectric power of this country get away from them. In that message he said:

> The people of the country are threatened by a monopoly far more powerful, because in far closer touch with our domestic and industrial life, than anything known to our experience.
> A single generation will see the exhaustion of our natural resources of oil and gas, and such a rise in the price of coal as will make the price of electrically transmitted waterpower a controlling factor in transportation, in manufacturing, and in household lighting and heating. Our waterpower alone, if fully developed and wisely used, is probably sufficient for our present transportation, industrial, municipal, and domestic needs. Most of it is undeveloped and is still in National or State control.
> To give this away—one of the greatest of our resources—without recompense, would be an act of folly. If we are guilty of this, our children will be forced to pay an annual return upon a capitalization based upon the highest prices which "the traffic will bear." They will find themselves face to face with powerful interests entrenched behind the doctrine of vested rights, and strengthened by every defense which money can buy and the ingenuity of capable corporation lawyers can devise.
> Long before that time they may, and very probably will, have become a consolidated interest controlled from the great financial centers, dictating the terms upon which the citizen can conduct his business or earn his livelihood, and not be amenable to the wholesome check of local opinion.

That prophecy has been fulfilled. We are now engaged in the battle of the century to wrest the American people from the clutches of this vast monopoly known as the Power Trust and to save the waterpower of this Nation for the American people through the T. V. A. and other similar developments.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the short extract from the statement by Theodore Roosevelt, a former Republican President of the United States, to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT OF 1933—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment until the report is read?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] willing to withhold his point of order until the statement is read?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I withhold the point of order until the statement is read.

Mr. Speaker, on reflection I think the membership ought to be here to hear this statement, and I insist on the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 128]

Andrews	Dies	Johnson, Lyndon	Rockefeller
Ball	Dingell	Kee	Sandager

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 350 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have permission to sit during sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia rose.

The SPEAKER. The order of business is the reading of the statement.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MAY. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE LATE ENSIGN JOSEPH HESTER PATTERSON, UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R.

7052) to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to issue posthumously to the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, a commission as a lieutenant (junior grade) of the Navy with the date of rank as of June 4, 1939.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this ensign went down when the submarine Squalus was sunk. He had made his grade and had he lived to June 4 he would have received a promotion to lieutenant. The purpose of this bill is to permit the Secretary of the Navy to issue a posthumous promotion, so that he may be buried, when the Squalus is raised, in the uniform of that rank.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT OF 1933—CONFERENCE REPORT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by adding after section 15a the following new sections:

"'Sec. 15b. No bonds shall be issued by the Corporation after the date of enactment of this section under section 15 or section 15a.

"'Sec. 15c. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the Corporation is authorized, after the date of enactment of this section, to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $61,500,000. Such bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds which may be used for the following purposes only:

"'(1) Not to exceed $46,000,000 may be used for the purchase of electric utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Company and Southern Tennessee Power Company, as contemplated in the contract between the Corporation and the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and others, dated as of May 12, 1939.

"'(2) Not to exceed $6,500,000 may be used for the purchase and rehabilitation of electric utility properties of the Alabama Power Company and Mississippi Power Company in the following named counties in northern Alabama and northern Mississippi: The counties of Jackson, Madison, Limestone, Lauderdale, Colbert, Lawrence, Morgan, Marshall, De Kalb, Cherokee, Cullman, Winston, Franklin, Marion, and Lamar in northern Alabama, and the counties of Calhoun, Chickasaw, Monroe, Clay, Lowndes, Oktibbeha, Choctaw, Webster, Noxubee, Winston, Neshoba, and Kemper in northern Mississippi.

"'(3) Not to exceed $3,500,000 may be used for rebuilding, replacing, and repairing electric utility properties purchased by the Corporation in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section.

"'(4) Not to exceed $3,500,000 may be used for constructing electric transmission lines, substations, and other electrical facilities necessary to connect the electric utility properties purchased by the Corporation in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section with the electric power system of the Corporation.

"'(5) Not to exceed $2,000,000 may be used for making loans under section 12a to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations to enable them to purchase any electric utility properties referred to in the contract between the Corporation and the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and others, dated as of May 12, 1939, or any electric utility properties of the Alabama Power Company or Mississippi Power Company in any of the counties in northern Alabama or northern Mississippi named in paragraph (2).

"The Corporation shall file with the President and with the Congress in December of each year a financial statement and complete report as to the expenditure of funds derived from the sale of bonds under this section covering the period not covered by any such previous statement or report. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than 50 years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ per centum per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ per centum per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. None of the proceeds of the bonds shall be used for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 12a of this Act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds under this section shall expire January 1, 1941, except that if at the time such authority expires the amount of bonds issued by the Corporation under this section is less than $61,500,000, the Corporation may, subject to the foregoing provisions of this section, issue, after the expiration of such period, bonds in an amount not in excess of the amount by which the bonds so issued prior to the expiration of such period is less than $61,500,000, for refunding purposes, or, subject to the provisions of paragraph (5) of this section (limiting the purposes for which loans under section 12a of funds derived from bond proceeds may be made) to provide funds found necessary in the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation prior to the expiration of such period, under the authority of section 12a."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amount of bonds

The Senate bill authorized the Authority to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not exceeding $100,000,000, which amount was to include the $3,500,000 of bonds already issued and outstanding.

The House amendment authorized the Authority to issue new bonds, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $61,500,000, which, together with the bonds now outstanding and the bonds for whose issue the Authority has made commitments to the city of Memphis, made a total amount of approximately $67,300,000.

The conference report prohibits the Authority from issuing any additional bonds under the existing sections 15 and 15a of the act, but authorizes the Authority in a proposed new section 15c to issue new bonds in an aggregate amount not exceeding $61,500,000. The Memphis commitment provided for in the House amendment has already been fulfilled by the Authority, and hence this provision has been omitted from the conference report as no longer necessary.

Use to which proceeds from bonds may be put

The Senate bill provided that the bonds might be sold by the corporation to obtain funds for the construction or acquisition of dams with appurtenant facilities, generating plants, transmission lines, rural distribution lines, and other electric-utility properties as authorized by the act including the purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 12a of the act.

Under the House amendment $7,000,000 of the funds obtained from the sale of bonds were to be used solely for the purchase, integration, and rehabilitation of electric-utility properties of the Mississippi Power Co. and the Alabama Power Co. in certain named counties in northern Mississippi and northern Alabama and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 12a of the act in such States in connection therewih. The remainder of the funds obtained from the sale of bonds was to be used solely for the purchase, integration, and rehabilitation of the electric-utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the Southern Tennessee Power Co. as contemplated in the contract between the Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and others, and to carry out the provisions of section 12a in Tennessee in connection therewith.

The conference report specifically details the purposes to which the proceeds from the sale of the $61,500,000 of bonds authorized may be put. Not in excess of $46,000,000 is to be used for the purchase by the Authority of electric-utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and Southern Tennessee Power Co., as contemplated in the contract of May 12, 1939, between the Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and others. Not in excess of $6,500,000 is to be used for the purchase and rehabilitation of electric-utility properties of the Alabama Power Co. and Mississippi Power Co. in 27 specified counties in northern Alabama and northern Mississippi. Not to exceed $3,500,000 is to be used for rebuilding, replacing, and repairing electric-utility properties purchased by the Authority in accordance with the provisions of this section, and not to exceed $3,500,000 is to be used for constructing electric transmission lines, substations, and other electrical facilities necessary to connect the electric-utility properties purchased by the Authority in accordance with the provisions of this section with the electric power system of the Corporation. Not to exceed $2,000,000 is to be used for making loans under section 12a of the act to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations to enable them to purchase any electric-utility properties referred to in the contract between the Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, already mentioned, or any elecric-utility properties of the Alabama Power Co. or Mississippi Power Co. in any of the specified counties in northern Alabama or northern Mississippi. The Authority is to file with the President and with the Congress in December of each year a financial statement and complete report as to the expenditure of funds derived from the sale of bonds under section 15c covering the period not covered by any such previous statement or report.

General provisions applicable to bonds

The Senate bill provided that the bonds be in such forms and denominations, mature in such periods not more than 50 years from the date of their issue, be redeemable at the option of the Authority before maturity in such manner as might be stipulated therein, bear interest at such rates not exceeding 3½ percent per annum, be subject to such terms and conditions, be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as might be prescribed by the Authority with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The bonds were not to be sold, however, at prices or on terms to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ percent per annum.

The House amendment contained identical provisions.

The conference report also contains identical provisions.

Guarantee of principal and interest by the United States

The Senate bill provided that the bonds should be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States.

The House amendment provided that such bonds should be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the Authority, but not by the United States.

The conference report adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Power of Secretary of Treasury to purchase bonds

The Senate bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to purchase any of the bonds issued under the act, and for such purpose to use as a public-debt transaction proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and to sell at any time any of the bonds so acquired. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of such bonds were to be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The conference report adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Power of authority to buy its bonds

The Senate bill authorized the Authority with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase its bonds in the open market at any time and at any price.

The House amendment contained an identical provision.

The conference report also contains an identical provision.

Limitation on use of bond proceeds to carry out section 12a

The Senate bill provided that no bonds should be issued to provide funds or bonds necessary for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Authority under section 12a until the proposed contract had been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. Upon submission of any such contract to the Commission, the matter was to be given precedence and in every way expedited. The Commission's determination of the matter was to be final.

The House amendment contained similar provisions, but perfected such provisions so as to provide that none of the proceeds of any bonds should be used in the performance of any such proposed contract until it had been submitted to and been approved by the Federal Power Commission.

The conference report contains provisions identical in this respect with those in the House amendment.

Expiration of authority to issue bonds

The Senate bill provided that the authority to issue bonds should expire January 1, 1941, except that such bonds might be issued at any time after the expiration of such period for refunding purposes or to provide bonds or funds found necessary for the performance of any contract entered into by the Authority prior to the expiration of such period under the authority of section 12a of the act.

The House amendment contained similar provisions.

The conference report contains similar provisions, except that the language has been clarified to obviate any contention that more than $61,500,000 worth of bonds are authorized to be issued and also to obviate any contention that the Authority may, after January 1, 1941, expend bond proceeds to carry out section 12a of the act without regard to the limited purposes for which loans under section 12a of funds derived from bond proceeds may be made, or without regard to the $2,000,000 limitation on the aggregate amount of such loans.

Limitations on future activities of Authority

The House amendment (sec. 1) provided that after the date of its enactment no dams, appurtenant facilities, generating plants, transmission lines, rural-distribution lines, or other electric-utility properties, except properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and Southern Tennessee Power Co., and except properties of the Mississippi Power Co. and Alabama Power Co. in certain named counties in northern Mississippi and northern Alabama, should be constructed or acquired unless approved by Congress. This provision of the House amendment also prohibited the Authority from constructing or acquiring or extending credit for the construction or acquisition of any transmission lines or other facilities outside the territory drained by the Tennessee River and a specified portion of the drainage area of the Cumberland River; and also prohibited the Authority from selling or delivering power for use outside (1) the territory drained by the Tennessee River, (2) the portion of the drainage area of the Cumberland River already referred to, (3) those portions of counties on the date of enactment being supplied with power or under contract to be supplied with power by the Authority, and (4) certain named counties in northern Alabama and northern Mississippi.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The conference report does not contain any provision placing geographical limitations as such on the future activities of the Authority. The provisions of the conference report, already discussed, limiting the amount of bonds which may be issued, and specifying in great detail the uses to which the bond proceeds may be put, will, however, operate as an extremely effective geographical limitation. The funds of the Authority are derived from three sources: (1) The sale of its bonds, (2) revenues from the sale of power, and (3) appropriations. As stated, the conference report requires that the bond proceeds be used only to carry out stated purposes within a stated and well-defined area. Pursuant to a request from the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, the Tennessee Valley Authority, through its responsible fiscal officer, submitted for the files of the conference committee the following statement as to the uses to which the appropriations available to the Authority and the revenues from the sale of the Authority's power are to be put in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY,
Washington, July 11, 1939.

The Honorable ANDREW JACKSON MAY,
Chairman, House Military Affairs Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN MAY: In compliance with your request, I am enclosing for the files of the House conference committee on the T. V. A. bond legislation the Authority's present view as to the allocation of available funds for the fiscal year 1940 by principal projects. I am also enclosing our present allocation of the Authority's transmission-line budget for the fiscal year 1940.

The budget for transmission-line construction is classified to show separately work now under construction or officially authorized, work requested but not yet authorized, work definitely contemplated, additions required because of load or contract changes, construction required to support Memphis service, Mississippi additions, substations at water-control projects, and miscellaneous.

The total transmission-line budget for the fiscal year 1940 is $6,781,000, exclusive of overheads, which are included in the Authority's over-all budget as part of "General and administrative expenses," which are estimated to total $4,675,000 during the fiscal year 1940, for the Authority's entire program. The figure of $6,781,000 for transmission-line construction in the Authority's allotment of funds for 1940 compares with $7,136,460 shown in the Authority's appropriation request to Congress, with the exception that the latter figure includes overheads.

You will note that none of the items included have any relation to the proposed Tennessee Electric Power Co. acquisition, as this acquisition was not under consideration at the time the Authority's 1940 appropriation was requested. As you know, the Authority had contracts prior to the consummation of the Tennessee Electric Power negotiations with only five cities served by this company. Of these five, Chattanooga was planning to construct its own transmission facilities to Chickamauga Dam, and the Authority had already constructed facilities for service to Columbia, Fayetteville, Lewisburg, and Lenoir City. Accordingly no transmission-line estimates were included in the 1940 budget for extending service to other communities served by the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

I should make clear that the general allotment of available funds for the fiscal year 1940, as well as the allotment of funds available for transmission-line construction, represent our best present view. It is impossible to predict accurately the actual requirements for each purpose for an entire year in advance. Accordingly, the allotments are subject to change to reflect the actual circumstances developing during the year. Some of the items of transmission-line construction might have to be deferred and other items not mentioned might become necessary. The original request of the Authority's department of power operations for funds to be used for transmission-line construction during the fiscal year 1940 exceeded the final allotment by several million dollars. To reach the figure of $6,781,000 it was necessary to defer a number of projects which we think are urgently needed to the fiscal year 1941.

I trust that this is the information you are seeking, but if we can add any further explanation of any of the items I should be pleased to discuss them with you.

Very truly yours,

J. A. KRUG, Chief Power Engineer.

Purchase, Alabama and Mississippi: Estimated contract amount	6,500,000
Total	61,500,000

The Authority's self-imposed limitations on its activities during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, taken in conjunction with the limitations on the use of bond proceeds contained in the conference report will constitute an effective geographical limitation on the Authority's activities, at least until Congress is called upon to make appropriations to carry out its activities during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

Provisions relating to Comptroller General

The House amendment (sec. 2) provided that all money made available for expenditure in carrying out the purposes of the act should be withdrawn from the Treasury only pursuant to accountable warrants for advances to the credit of an adequately bonded disbursing officer, as determined by the Comptroller General, or certificates of settlement issued by the General Accounting Office. The Comptroller General, however, was authorized in his discretion to allow credit for payments from moneys under the control of the Authority, not otherwise allowable, when shown to be reasonably necessary to the accomplishment of the work authorized by law to be done by the Authority.

The Senate bill contained no similar provisions.

The conference report contains no similar provision.

Provisions relating to local taxation

The House amendment (sec. 3) provided that the percentage of the Authority's gross receipts which the present law requires be paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee should not be changed to reflect any loss in tax revenue to any State or political subdivision by reason of the ownership or use by the Authority of, or income derived by the Authority from, any property for or connected with the generation or transmission of electric power. This provision prohibited payments, except as otherwise authorized in the section of the act which is amended, to be made by the Authority or by the United States for, or on account of, or in lieu of, any such loss in tax revenue, and it was declared to be the intention of Congress that any such loss in revenue be recovered by the several States involved in such manner as each might see fit from the persons benefited by the use of electric power generated by the Authority.

The Senate bill contained no similar provisions.

The conference report contains no similar provision.

Sinking-fund provisions

The House amendment (sec. 4) required the Authority to provide from the earnings of electric properties under its control interest on its bonds, and to deposit prior to each interest date such interest in such agencies as might be designated from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Authority was also required to provide from such earnings an annual sinking fund in an amount sufficient to pay at maturity the entire principal of the bonds issued under the act, the sinking fund to be deposited in an agency to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and to be used to retire the bonds as they mature. The payments to the sinking fund were to be in a uniform amount and to be so distributed so that each year would bear its proportionate share of the total. It was declared to be the purpose and intent of this provision that the principal and interest of all such bonds be paid in full at or before maturity by the Authority on the earnings of its electric properties.

The Senate bill contained no similar provisions.

Although the conference report does not contain any provisions requiring the maintenance of a sinking fund for the retirement of bonds, the limitation on the amount of bonds which may be issued and the consequent limitation on the power of the Authority to refund its bonds have the effect of requiring the Authority to maintain a sinking fund to retire these bonds as they mature.

Reimbursement of the United States for cost of Tennessee Valley Authority properties allocated to generation and transmission of electricity

The House amendment (section 4) required the Authority to issue to the Secretary of the Treasury one or more bonds, in such denominations and with such maturities not exceeding 50 years as the Secretary of the Treasury might designate, in an amount equal to the total cost allocated to the development of power and the total cost of the other properties of the Authority devoted to the transmission or distribution of electric power for sale. The Authority was required to provide from the earnings of such electric properties interest on such bond or bonds and deposit such interest when due in the Treasury of the United States. These bonds were to bear interest at a rate equal to the average rate of interest payable by the United States on its obligations having maturity of 10 or more years after the dates thereof, issued during the last preceding fiscal year in which such obligations were issued.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conference report contains no similar provision.

A. J. MAY,
EWING THOMASON,
DOW W. HARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAY (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield.

AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6635) to amend the Social Security Act and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. KNUTSON.

AMENDMENTS TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Under the rules of the House we have 1 hour to consider the conference report. That hour is under the control of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] who has been very considerate in yielding half the time to the minority. I have no personal desire to prolong the debate in consideration of the report, but I have several requests from gentlemen on this side who have urged me to try to get an additional hour.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on my side, and I expect to use only about 15 minutes' time in making an explanation of the conference report. I should be very glad to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, if he desires it.

Mr. SHORT. Then I understand that we will get an additional half hour?

Mr. MAY. Oh, no. Just let the matter run along for an hour and I shall yield to the gentleman a part of my time, at least 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in bringing to the House the conference report on Senate 1796 relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority, I shall take just a very brief time to make a rather hurried explanation of the conference report. Before entering into the provisions of the report, and the changes that have been made I feel that in justice to the membership of the House, I should make a preliminary statement.

I believe General Washington is credited with having quoted the verse—

> He that fights and runs away
> May turn and fight another day;
> But he that is in battle slain
> Will never rise to fight again.

That is not exactly what I have done in this instance, but I have given and I have taken. When the House of Representatives very appropriately sustained your House Military Affairs Committee in the passage of the House amendment to what was known as the Norris bill, conferees were appointed by the Speaker and I was chairman of that conference report. We had a great deal of difficulty and, as a matter of fact, we were at once confronted with the problem of whether or not the House of Representatives should completely, unconditionally surrender to another body. Perhaps I should not say surrender to another body but surrender to one Member of another body. We did not surrender. [Applause.] We will not on any other occasion surrender if I have anything to do with it, but, as I have said, I thought it better that I yield on some material things in order that I might be able to fight another day; and I serve notice now that I have not changed a single view, have not surrendered a single conviction that I have had on this subject of the operations and activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority from the day it started.

At this point I pay tribute, if I am capable of doing it properly, to the minority membership of my committee for the patient manner in which they have gone along with me on this legislation in an effort to bring to the House something constructive. I acknowledge my debt of gratitude to the Republican minority in the House of Representatives for their fine attitude in the matter. I do not mean by that, however, to admit that they put the bill over by their own votes, but they were fine in their attitude about it. They were loyal, and if anybody on that side of the House feels that I have not done exactly what I should have done, I am sorry. If any of my colleagues on the Democratic side of the House are not satisfied with this report, they are in no worse fix than I am, because I am not satisfied with it, but I bring it here to the House of Representatives as chairman of the conference committee that dealt with it in an effort to get the best possible out of a bad situation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I cannot yield just now. I am sure that I will be asked something about the Tennessee Valley Authority if I had—I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. I just wanted to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this conference report is such a great improvement over the House bill that we are willing to accept it.

Mr. MAY. I am sure the gentleman is willing to accept this because we have reached the point where he has to accept it.

Mr. RANKIN. We have reached the point where the gentleman had to offer it to us.

Mr. MAY. Let me make this statement in reference to what the gentleman from Mississippi has said: This bill is going to mark quite a bit of improvement in the Tennessee Valley Authority when it is put into effect. We started out with a proposal, naked and unvarnished, for an issue of $100,000,000 of bonds, chargeable to the Federal Treasury, for the purpose of concluding a contract between Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and its subsidiary, the Tennessee Electric Power Co. You all remember just how eager it was that a certain group desired to have the matter disposed of without hearings of any kind whatsoever.

Let me say that, as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, as long as I am chairman of that committee and my committee stays with me, every bill of vital importance—particularly of the importance of this measure—will have an adequate and complete hearing. Any man who has a bill before that committee can get a hearing. We did have hearings in this instance for about 4 weeks, interspersed on various occasions with numerous hearings on War Department legislation that was pending before the committee. In the course of those hearings we found that as an actual matter of fact less than one-half of the $100,000,000 was all that was essential to the completion of that contract. We have worked out in this conference report terms by which we have actually yielded money in addition to that absolutely necessary to consummate the deal, in order to allow for rehabilitation and proper integration of the system which is being acquired under this contract with the system now owned by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Let me make it clear now that I am not here as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of this House, nor is my committee here making any admission that we recognize the policy of public ownership of utilities. I do not believe in that doctrine. I do not subscribe to it; but we were confronted with the situation where the Tennessee Valley Authority directors, unusually liberal in their disposition toward those who want money, was furnished with $100,000,000 of bond authority which they could issue and which they had begun to issue during the hearings—and, by the way, let me remark that they had issued $9,000,000 of these bonds and sold them while the conferees of the Congress of the United States were conferring upon the matter. I cite that as showing the absolute desire and disposition of the Tennessee Valley Authority Board of Directors to ignore the wishes of the Congress of the United States and have their own way about every matter with which they deal.

Under the bill we have saved $38,500,000 to the taxpayers. Under the bill which we finally agreed upon we earmarked every dollar of the money that will be realized from the sale of these bonds and have provided just exactly how it shall be spent and for what it shall be spent, in a number of items. We did that for the purpose of preventing the Congress of the United States again being placed in the bad predicament of having to approve a transaction by which the Tennessee Valley Authority directors had gone out and, by competition, by proselyting and by agitating, driven down the stock and bond values of the securities of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to an average of 40 cents on the dollar, and then come back to the Congress and say to the Government, "Give us 100 cents on the dollar to buy them out." We have hoped that that thing will not occur again, and it is the purpose and intent of your committee in bringing this legislation here to say to the world and to the Tennessee Valley Authority and to the courts of this country, if you please, that it is not the policy of the American Congress that any corporation organized under the Federal Government shall go out and compete with and destroy private industry anywhere in America, even though it be in the Tennessee Valley. [Applause.]

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Not having had an opportunity to study this conference report, I want to ask the gentleman if any provision has been made to take care of those small counties whose taxable revenue is being taken away by the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. MAY. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in asking me that question, and I shall be delighted to answer him.

We found in the course of the hearings in connection with this matter that there are 20 or 25 counties in the Tennessee River area in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia that are literally being exterminated as far as taxable values are concerned. In other words, the first thing that happened under the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority was that they built these high dams. They submerged hundreds of thousands of acres of the best and the most valuable taxable land in a number of counties, and there is a list of 10 counties here which the proof showed they would be unable to meet their bonded indebtedness and interest charges, including one of the counties in the district represented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] and those counties, after the real estate was taken out by the flooding of the area by these high dams, have left the major portion of their taxable values bound up in the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, over dry land out in the areas in the rural districts, and in the cities and towns. In one instance, as an illustration, Fannin County, Ga., I will be glad to yield if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] will give us a direct and succinct statement as to what that county is up against right now.

Mr. WHELCHEL. I thank the gentleman. I want to express my appreciation for the hearings the gentleman gave me and my people from Fannin County. In that connection, the taxable property that is being taken over by this Authority represents two-thirds of such property in that county. In other words, 60,000 acres of that small county is being taken by this purchase. I have no desire to show any disposition not to cooperate and go along with anything that is progressive, but I do feel that they should at least be cared for in some way. Your committee and you as chairman have been very gracious to me and my people who came here to be heard.

The question is: Does the gentleman know of any way that my people can be cared for?

Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that the Tennessee Valley Authority has issued a press release in which they state the policy they expect to pursue in the future with respect to taxes; but the conference report we present today makes no provision for taxes whatsoever. As Mr. Willkie stated when he reluctantly expressed his regret in having to leave the State of Tennessee as a businessman: "People down there will have to boil in their own juice," unless they can deal with the Tennessee Valley Authority.

What the T. V. A. wants to do and what they intend to do is to say to the people of Tennessee and to these submerged and wrecked counties, "We come here with Federal money. We have given you flood control, we have given you cheap electricity, we have given you soil-erosion prevention, we have given you reforestation, we have given you all these benefits; now your taxable values must be offset by these advantages that you are to obtain by cheap electric rates and other things." I take the position myself, however, I may say to my friend from Georgia, that that will not satisfy the sheriff when he comes around with the tax bill.

Mr. WHELCHEL. I appreciate the gentleman's statement and realize it is quite true. There certainly is great feeling in that section. I do not know what to expect, but as far as I am concerned I cannot sit by idly and let this go by with a vote in favor of it, much as I dislike to vote against it.

I express my appreciation to the chairman for the work he has done and for his statement.

Mr. MAY. I will tell the gentleman from Georgia what I meant a while ago when I recited Washington's little saying:

He who fights and is in battle slain
Will never live to fight again,
But he who fights and runs away
May live to fight another day.

What I meant by that was that if I stay here long enough something will be done about taxes in Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia with respect to the Tennessee Valley Authority, if the Congress will go along with me.

Mr. WHELCHEL. I appreciate that; and let me say to the gentleman that there is a feeling in my district that we have been imposed upon, even though we are good Democrats; and I cannot go along with this proposition. I will go along on any question insofar as I think it is right, but this certainly is not right, and it is done under my protest that we feel we are being mistreated.

Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that the public would never have known anything about what was happening down there if it had not been for the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs insisting on open hearings.

Mr. WHELCHEL. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Am I correct in my recollection that in some of the acts amendatory of the T. V. A. 5 percent of the gross receipts were to be set aside for tax purposes?

Mr. MAY. There was some such provision in the original act.

Mr. CULKIN. Was it not afterward increased to 7½ percent on the completion of the Norris Dam for the benefit of the States of Tennessee and Alabama?

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. CULKIN. What has happened to that money?

Mr. MAY. That money is supposed to be paid over to those two States, and I think it has been; but it amounts to a very small sum. The loss in taxable revenues to the State of Tennessee alone is $3,500,000, to the State and all the municipalities in that taxing district of the State.

Mr. CULKIN. What are the receipts from this source?

Mr. MAY. The receipts from this source amount to less than $250,000 in both States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, the situation is this: If this conference report is agreed to, it limits the expenditure of T. V. A. to $61,500,000. If this conference report is voted down, it will leave them with the right to issue $100,000,000 worth of bonds; and instead of buying out these properties that the power company is so anxious to sell, they can take that $100,000,000 and buy up the transmission lines and distribution systems and fight it out on the basis of competition. I want the House to understand just what they are voting on. A vote against this conference report is a vote to give them $100,000,000 instead of $61,500,000.

Mr. MAY. I think the House understands that. What we want the Members to understand is what has been going on down there since your committee has been considering this legislation; and a part of it is this: That since the conference has been under way, and since a single Senator tied up the thing here for 4 weeks, they have duplicated the transmission lines in five counties of northern Mississippi, and have actually constructed the lines in northeastern Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I am sure the gentleman does not want to mislead the House on that.

Mr. MAY. And at the very time when the conference was agreed upon they came here to Washington and admitted that they had been doing that. In addition to that, they are now starting construction, running double shifts, night and day, on a transmission line from Bessemer, Ala., a suburb of Birmingham, to Muscle Shoals Wilson Dam.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about the expenditure for the municipal plants in northern Mississippi being made by T. V. A. only while this conference was in session.

Mr. MAY. I did not say that.

Mr. RANKIN. Those people have floated bonds and are building their own systems.

Mr. MAY. I said building transmission lines.

Mr. RANKIN. But the lines are already built.

Mr. MAY. They are not built in the five counties where they have been building them since then.

Now, as a further precaution for the Congress of the United States, and speaking for myself as a Member of Congress under the obligations of a constitutional oath, and not believing under any circumstances in the destruction of a citizen's private property by Government-subsidized activities [applause], I demanded from Mr. Blee, the Tennessee Valley engineer, a statement with reference to what they expected to do, not only with this money but with the $40,000,000 appropriated by the Congress during the last session for the year 1940. I have set forth in the conference report an itemized statement of what they propose to do. I am going to keep tab on them and when the next session of the Congress meets I expect to have a complete report of their activities. If they deviate, I propose to let them hear from me again.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know if the gentleman from Mississippi is correct in his statement that if we vote down the conference report the Tennessee Valley Authority will have $100,000,000 instead of $6,500,000?

Mr. MAY. That is correct. They will have a bond authority of $100,000,000 if this report is not adopted, which they can use to pay for transmission lines wherever they want to construct them. They can buy them or lend the money to pay for them, which is the equivalent of buying them.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am afraid the gentleman did not catch the question. If we vote down this conference report, it will go back to the conference committee for further consideration.

Mr. MAY. I was dealing with the question of the bond authority. I want the House to know the reason why I surrendered on some of these things. It was to remove this Damocles sword of $100,000,000 from over the head of industry down in Tennessee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We recur to the provisions of the original act relative to the bond issue of $100,000,000, but there is not a dime's worth of authority there to purchase the Willkie properties or anything else. They can build.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They can build duplicating lines.

Mr. RANKIN. They can finance the purchase of the property.

Mr. MAY. I am yielding to the gentleman from Illinois. There was no power under section 12 (a) of the act to use that $100,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing the generating and transmission facilities of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. They could not do that, but they could go out and use it for the purpose of constructing duplicate transmission lines. Knowing their disposition, knowing their desire, their intent, and their purpose as I do know it, I knew what they would do with that $100,000,000; therefore I yielded on some of the things involved here.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I do not yield further.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MAY. I am not yielding. I want to call attention to the fact that in the provision relating to the use of these bonds we have prohibited their being refunded, which is the equivalent of a requirement for a sinking fund for the retirement of these bonds at maturity. That is one thing we obtained in conference, in addition to reducing the amount and earmarking the money.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have made about all of the statement I desire to make with reference to this matter, except I do want to say that I have steadfastly taken this position; and when I change it, it will be after I have gone out of Congress. I do not know how long that will be. So long as I stay here I am going to stand pat on the position I have taken in reference to this matter in opposition to the destruction of private property with public funds.

May I say to the people of Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia, if there is anything I can do to pull some of my colleagues out of the hole by adjusting the tax question I will be glad to do it. I do not want them to simmer in their own juice, as has been stated by an executive of the power company. However, I do want to see the time come when those who get cheap electricity that we have heard so much about shall bear the tax burden when they can buy electricity at 2 mills per kilowatt, whereas others have to pay 5 mills, 1 cent, and higher even than that, because they are the beneficiaries of the low rates that they have, although they are not low when you consider all the items of expense.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in accord with the gentleman on the proposition of taxation, because any activity that is used commercially ought to bear its fair share of taxation. The thing that I rose to suggest to the gentleman is this: There are some 12,500 preferred-stock holders of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. If this report is approved and this transaction is consummated, they will get 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. MAY. They get their money. That is another thing that induced your chairman to yield on this report, and I may say it was one of the principal things. May I say to the gentleman that he has interjected a word into this debate that is significant. When any governmental agency goes out into a "commercial" enterprise it is a commercial enterprise, and the T. V. A. is nothing short of a commercial enterprise. That is all it is.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. How cheap are they getting power down there from the T. V. A.—and I refer to the people?

Mr. MAY. I do not know how cheap they are getting it. I know the American Aluminum Co. and two or three other large corporations are getting it for about 300 percent less under 20-year contracts than they could get it in other sections of the country.

Mr. KELLER. How much?

Mr. MAY. For about 2 mills per kilowatt or 3 mills on large consumption.

Mr. KELLER. What do the people pay outside?

Mr. MAY. I do not know what the people in the rural areas pay. I do not know that rate, and they have not been able to tell us.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 28 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not ask to be notified earlier, because I wanted to yield part of this time to others.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAY. For a question, yes.

Mr. PEARSON. I have listened to the gentleman's explanation of the conference report but I still am in doubt and would like to ask the gentleman whether he is recommending to the House that we adopt this conference report or defeat it.

Mr. MAY. I am going to vote for the conference report myself and I recommend its adoption for the reason I stated, that it is the best way out of a bad mess. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following statement:

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Commenting upon the compromise reached by the Senate and House conferees on the T. V. A. bond authorization bill, John D. Battle, executive secretary of the National Coal Association, today made the following statement:

"The principal vices of the Norris T. V. A. bond issue bill from the standpoint of the bituminous-coal industry, and which led our industry to oppose it to the utmost at every step, have been rectified in the compromise bill now agreed to by the House and Senate conferees. The outcome is a real victory for the coal industry in particular and the country and the taxpayers in general. We believe it marks a decisive turning point in the reckless, ruthless, and unfettered course which T. V. A. has heretofore pursued in promoting its hydroelectric power program regardless of cost or consequences. The concern of the coal industry with the T. V. A. is wholly due to the losses, present and prospective, of coal tonnage through T. V. A.'s hydro-power program which destroys present and preempts future markets for coal in the Tennessee Valley and thereby contributes to permanent unemployment of mine and railroad labor. This is transpiring in face of the fact that under present-day conditions coal offers a more economical medium for the generating of electric power in the Tennessee Valley, than T. V. A.'s hydro-power dams.

"Acquisition by the T. V. A. of privately owned utilities within its immediate territory, in preference to their annihilation by T. V. A. and P. W. A. municipal duplication, has not been opposed by the bituminous coal industry. The opposition of our industry to the Norris bill rested upon the fact that by its terms it opened wide the door to T. V. A.'s further expansion without check or hindrance through the medium of purchase of existing electric generating plants wherever it liked.

"This door has been shut. The bill which it now appears that Congress will enact notably cuts the authorized bond issue from $100,000,000 to $61,500,000, but more than that restricts its use to the consummation of the purchase agreements between T. V. A. and the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and to incidental and closely related and specifically enumerated purposes.

"An issue of immense importance to the coal industry facing loss of their coal markets, as well as to private utilities and likewise to the taxpayers generally, who in the long run foot the bill, was the question of defining and limiting T. V. A.'s area of operations. This has been achieved in considerable degree and as a practical proposition and in the face of stubborn objection by T. V. A. and its congressional mentor, Senator NORRIS.

"The express geographical limitations contained in the bill as passed by the House have not been retained in the compromise agreement, but T. V. A. obtains no new free funds and is reported to have stipulated that it will not employ any of its general funds (1940 appropriation) for development work into territory beyond its present area of operations. This means that T. V. A.'s further expansion is made to depend on future action of Congress, and we are hopeful that Congress in the years ahead will apply its checkrein. The coal industry will certainly continue its efforts to bring that to pass."

[From the Wall Street Journal]

A HALTER IS PUT ON T. V. A.

The agreement reached by the House and Senate conferees on the bill authorizing issue by T. V. A. of $61,000,000 bonds for purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, marks an important change in the status of the national war on the private utilities in one important sector. The bill, as approved by the conferees, does not accomplish a complete bitting and bridling by Congress of the T. V. A. mustang, but it does go some distance toward the establishment of partial control of that vivacious animal, in that by control of its funds it can in a measure retain authority over its future operations in extending its transmission lines into competitive territory.

All parties concerned might appropriately be congratulated on the result, for their victory for common sense and fair dealing—this measure, which has not until now figured very prominently in the relation of the T. V. A. and its private competitors. It would doubtless be premature to conclude that it means the end of the war as a whole, but the T. V. A. sector as the primary end has at all times been a most important salient in that war, and in the wiping out of that salient a very definite gain has been made by the utility companies. The gain is the more impressive in that it has been achieved exclusively by arguments offered in the open, which have convinced the public opinion of its soundness.

As this newspaper has again and again pointed out, the utilities have for years been one of the most powerful forces prohibiting natural recovery, and anything that seems to promise an end, or even a relaxation of the hostility, must be regarded as an omen of better things. In these days we can afford to welcome any good omen anywhere at any time.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, if I understood rightly, the chairman of the committee promised the minority 10 additional minutes, but if I am not mistaken he has used most of his time himself. I wonder if we might not get unanimous consent to proceed for an additional time?

Mr. MAY. I certainly regret that I forgot that. I did not think I was going to use that amount of time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the other side be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe the minority has been well taken care of in the gentleman's speech, because most of his speech was against the Tennessee Valley Authority, and I object.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, 1 month ago yesterday, on June 13, in this Chamber, I believe a great victory was won not only for the House of Representatives but also for the American people, when without any partisan vote at all we passed the House T. V. A. bill by a margin of 25 votes—192 to 167—in lieu of the Senate amendment that was tacked on to the Ways and Means Committee bill which lifted the ceiling on the amount of long-term bonds that could be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Following the passage of the House bill the newspapers over this country, Republican and Democratic alike, congratulated the House of Representatives on two things: First, that we rose up in our might and asserted our independence, showing our freedom from Executive intimidation or domination; and, second, because we gave some assurance to private business in this country that the Government would cease its competition with private industry, or certainly would not extend its area of activity.

The House bill contained certain definite, specific provisions which I want to recall to your mind. First, it limited the bond authorization to $61,500,000, and that is about the only provision of the House bill left intact in this conference report. So far so good, and I want to be perfectly fair and say that these bonds are earmarked, and in this indirect way certain limitations are placed upon the activity of the T. V. A. The House bill, of course, made these bonds guaranteed by the T. V. A., but in the measure before us the bonds are guaranteed by the United States Government, so we yielded on that point. The bond proceeds could not be used in any contract until approved by the Federal Treasury under the House bill, but under the bill as it now stands the Congress itself earmarks these funds, and in that respect I believe the conference report is perhaps even better than the House bill itself.

Expenditures under the House bill were to be accounted for through the Comptroller General just as expenditures of other Government agencies are required to be accounted for. The House conferees succumbed or surrendered on that point due to the insistence of one lone member of the Senate conferees, who objected to having the T. V. A. placed under an audit by the Comptroller General simply because the former Comptroller General, who was his secretary for many years, entertained a private prejudice against the Tennessee Valley Authority. I argued in conference that the Senator certainly should not continue to object on that ground since a New Deal Senator, and a lame duck one at that, who was appointed by this administration as Comptroller General for the next 15 years, is now in that office. I cannot see any reason under high heaven why the Tennessee Valley Authority should not be subject to audit by the Comptroller General just the same as any other Government agency. I do not know of any oracular wisdom or sublime virtue that the T. V. A. possesses which other agencies do not possess. But the House gave that up and the T. V. A. remains above the law or is a law unto itself.

A sinking fund was provided for bonds in the House bill, but that is cut out. The tax feature in the House bill was likewise eliminated.

The area of operations of the activity of the T. V. A., which was the heart of the House bill, has been obliterated.

Finally, the House bill contained a provision stating that it was the intent of Congress that the recipients of the benefits of this cheap power should be the ones to foot the bill, and not the taxpayers in everybody's district outside the Tennessee Valley area. This also was discarded.

Of course, we are all practical men and we know that you have to give and take in conference. In this particular conference the House did the giving and the Senate did the taking. I have high admiration for the chairman of my committee; in fact, I have such a warm personal regard for him that I imagine I would call it good even if he did anything that was bad. I wish to say, however, that it seems to me we have disemboweled the House bill, we have absolutely cut the heart out of it, because we have given up the Comptroller General, we have given up the tax provision, we have given up the restriction of area, and we have given up the sinking fund. The only thing that is left is the $61,500,000 item. If that is not almost a complete capitulation, then I do not know what surrender means. For these reasons your minority conferees, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] and myself, could not in clear conscience sign this report. Although I love my chairman—I love my wife, too, but I do not always agree with her—I do regret that he surrendered and capitulated in this report, and I trust that the Members of the House will insist on the provisions as originally voted in the House bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, if the question before the House were merely a matter of purchasing the properties of utility companies in Tennessee which are already marked for destruction and confiscation by the T. V. A., we would not hesitate to render owners the bare justice of compensating them for the properties which are to be wiped out.

But there is much more to this question than the mere purchase of specific properties already marked for destruction by the T. V. A. Here and now we are deciding whether T. V. A. shall be what it originally professed to be—an honest attempt to establish a true yardstick by which we could determine the reasonable costs of producing and distributing electric energy—or whether it shall be a weapon by which we will destroy all private utilities and establish socialized power on a Nation-wide scale. We are literally determining whether the $12,000,000,000 electric-utilities industry shall continue in private enterprise or whether all power production shall become a proper function of a social government.

We are literally deciding whether T. V. A. and the whole program of socialized power shall be predicated upon an honest, sound, businesslike basis of rates which will amortize capital investments, or whether the laboring men, the farmers, and the business interests in my district and every other district outside of the favored areas are to continue paying more than half the freight for T. V. A. activities, merely in order that the favored power users in the Tennessee Valley may continue to enjoy special rates which are below the cost of production. We are called upon to determine whether we shall support these House amendments and give a definite sign of encouragement to all private enterprise, or whether we shall endorse another step toward sovietizing the entire American economy, which will be as definitely destructive to business confidence as anything that has been done in this session of Congress.

Finally, we are deciding whether a creature of this Congress is bigger than its creator. We are called upon to admit that this program of socialized power, as typified in T. V. A., is a Frankenstein, or to prove that this Congress is the master of its own creation.

I deplore the concessions the House conferees have made on this measure, for I believe that every one of the amendments this body made to the original Norris bill as it passed the Senate are imperative. I believe the House acted wisely, and none too soon, in attempting to restrict and limit the scope of T. V. A. I think these amendments are foresighted in that they attempt to clarify and bring into the open the fundamental issue of whether or not we are going to socialize our utilities industry.

If we want to confiscate and socialize our utilities nationally, well and good. But let us do it with our eyes open. Let us avoid the deceptions, subterfuges, and downright dishonesties under which the New Deal and its power pets are now operating. Keep these House amendments to this bill and make T. V. A. stand on its own feet and pay its own way, like any other private utility company; do not ask the Federal Treasury to foot the bill and pass the costs on to my friends and neighbors in Indiana in the guise of hidden Federal taxes. Make this experiment an honest yardstick, subject to all the reasonable costs of normal power production. Above all, make it responsible to this Congress and its duly constituted agencies. Make T. V. A. conform strictly to the same accounting principles which we apply to every other creature we establish. Force it to conform to the requirements of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office. Satisfy the necessities of justice in the case of the Tennessee companies, whose business is being inevitably destroyed by our power Frankenstein. But insist that there must be a limit placed upon this sort of thing here and now. Let us bridle this Frankenstein of the Tennessee Valley before it strides the Nation and passes entirely beyond our ability to control it.

Under present circumstances a T. V. A. rate for electric energy means exactly nothing as an example of the actual cost of power production. T. V. A. as a yardstick is a rank fraud and a delusion. The ardent advocates of this giant of sovietized power are guilty of half truths and deceptions every time they lay this rubber yardstick against the going rates for power in areas served by private utility companies in their efforts to lure the people of these areas into the T. V. A. pattern.

T. V. A. power rates are a fearful and wonderful rule unto themselves, because T. V. A. has so completely arrogated authority that it has become literally a law unto itself. Any schoolboy can see the utter absurdities in T. V. A. accounting methods. The dishonest, haphazard system of accounting upon which T. V. A. rates are predicated have been denounced by the Authority's one qualified director, Dr. Arthur Morgan, by the General Accounting Office, by the Federal Power Commission, and by every competent engineer and accountant who has ever examined it.

The first error lies in the fact that the Authority, plainly and solely to evade constitutional limitations, maintains the very thin fiction that flood control and navigation are its principal functions. Hence, quite conveniently, less than half of the tremendous capital outlay is charged to power production. If this is a navigation system, the New Dealers should tell the country how pitifully small the potential freight tonnage is which will ever move on the Tennessee River system. They should also acknowledge that every ton of freight which moves by water in that area represents revenues lost to the railways, certainly an already sick industry.

If this is a system of flood control, they should frankly admit what has been so frequently pointed out, namely, that a dam cannot efficiently serve the dual functions of flood control and power production at the same time. To be efficient for flood control T. V. A.'s dams must have a system of empty, or nearly empty, reservoirs behind them. To be efficient power producers they must have full reservoirs which can supply a steady flow the year around at the generators. The only valuable, readily salable energy in any utility is that dependable minimum of electricity which it can deliver every hour of the day, every day of the year. This is the primary or firm power that meets contracted daily requirements. The highly variable character of water power production is one of the weak spots in the T. V. A. system. Why do not the system's advocates honestly admit that one of the main interests in absorbing the private utilities is to acquire the steam generating plants which will give a better semblance of balanced production to the year-around power output?

The first dishonesty of accounting which allocates such a ridiculously large proportion of the tremendous capital outlay to navigation and flood control is alone sufficient to discredit the "yardstick" theory. But there is an even more grievous error in T. V. A. power rates in that they utterly disregard the vitally important item of tax revenues. T. V. A. rates are an almost irresistable lure, but there is a cruelly barbed hook behind them—as the State of Tennessee and its political subdivisions are beginning to learn to their everlasting sorrow.

Part of the argument for this measure is that the power users affected will save $4,000,000 annually through lower rates. But these private utility properties have been paying an annual tax bill of three and one-half million to the State, counties, and cities of Tennessee. Furthermore, they have been steady contributors to the Federal Treasury, 1937 returns showing payments of $1,200,000. There are revenue losses, then, of $4,700,000 to save the people of Tennessee $4,000,000 on their light bills. The presumption is, of course, that the taxpayers in other parts of the country will go right along contributing the $4,700,000, so that the people of Tennessee can save the $4,000,000.

But even that is not all the sorry tax picture. T. V. A. actually destroys valuable, taxpaying property in its series of reservoirs. Accurate estimates of these losses are not available, but the destruction runs as high as 40 percent of the entire assessed valuation in some instances. With the series of 10 dams by no means complete, 10 counties in Tennessee are already affected. The situation is so serious that some of these counties are on the verge of bankruptcy, with default of their bonds and other obligations inevitable. Officials representing these affected areas appeared before our committee when this measure was being considered, begging this Congress to compensate these losses. There is real justice in their claims—but here again is the presumption that the taxpayers in Indiana and other parts of the country will be called upon to pay T. V. A.'s freight.

When this measure was first before the House my esteemed colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] wept touchingly for the power users of my State, who, according to his figures, are being mulcted by the Power Trust of $21,000,000 annually. I deeply appreciate his interest in and sympathy for my fellow Indianans. I do not mind his deceiving himself, but I must object to his deceiving the people of Indiana. Mr. RANKIN himself admits that he and his district are in the fortunate position of already having all the benefits of this power development. T. V. A. does not seriously injure any important interests in his district. It supplies his people power below cost, and my constituents are taxed to make up the difference. That, I think, is damage enough to Indiana. I wish he would drop the specious arguments, the wishful thinking, and the hopeless arithmetic by which he tries to lure other areas into sovietized power.

I refuse to accept his statement that the people of my State are losing $21,000,000 annually on their light bills and defy him to prove it by accounting principles that will satisfy a certified public accountant or an engineer. But assume for the moment that he is correct and that socialized power in Indiana would work out exactly as it works out in Tennessee. If Tennessee and the taxpayers of the Nation must spend or lose $4,700,000 to save $4,000,000 in that State, then I suppose that Indiana and the taxpayers would have to spend $24,675,000 to save the $21,000,000 on our light bills in Indiana. Furthermore, for the gentleman's information, we have roughly $475,000,000 invested in our utilities in Indiana. If we were to follow the T. V. A. formula in socializing our utilities in Indiana, I suppose it follows that the Treasury would eventually be expected to underwrite the purchase of these Indiana properties and pass that load on to the taxpayers.

With equally fine disregard for the other factors involved in a program to socialize our utilities, the gentleman apparently gives no thought to the heavy damages T. V. A. has already inflicted upon two sick industries—coal and the railways. But we in Indiana must be a little more practical and foresighted about these matters. Not only will we give some thought to the large investments in our utilities which would be destroyed, but we will be duly concerned about the other serious wreckage T. V. A. would leave in its wake. We produce a lot of coal in Indiana. Thousands of miners depend upon it for their livelihood. Coal is an important source of revenue for our railroads.

T. V. A. plans ultimately to produce more than 8,000,000,000 kilowatts of electrical energy annually. Almost every kilowatt of this water-generated power replaces electricity now produced by coal. The tremendous damage to the coal industry is at once apparent. Competent authorities say that 1.52 pounds of coal are required at present to produce a kilowatt of power. By simple arithmetic, then, we arrive at the fact that T. V. A. output will eventually displace more than five and three-fourths million tons of coal. Authorities again tell us that one ton of coal at its destination represents a day's work and wages for one man. Obviously, then, T. V. A. will destroy more than five and three-fourths million man-days of work annually.

Follow that a step further. More than one-third of all railroad revenue comes from the transportation of coal. When T. V. A. destroys the markets for five and three-fourths million tons of coal, it also cuts a tremendous slice out of rail revenues and railway employment.

When our committee was considering this proposal, conscientious, well-qualified men from miners' unions, from the coal operators, and from the railroads appeared daily to submit incontrovertible evidence that T. V. A. is hamstringing and destroying their vital interests. What utter irony. The New Deal professes the deepest concern for coal and the railroads and for the millions of men who depend upon these two industries for their bread and butter. But here is T. V. A., white knight of the New Dealers, ostensibly riding down the power-trust dragon, but actually grinding two of the Nation's sickest industries into the dust.

To complete this picture of irony, I want to remind the gentleman from Mississippi, who is so fond of T. V. A. statistics, where the power so far produced by T. V. A. is going. He would sell this Frankenstein to us in Indiana as saviour of the small power user. But while he is rendering lip service to the common man, his T. V. A. is selling only one-sixth of its total output directly to the private users, through municipalities and power cooperatives. It is charging those private users up to three times the rates which it collects from such large corporations as the Aluminum Corporation, the Victor Chemical Company, and the Monsanto Chemical Corporation.

I repeat that the people of Indiana and the Nation may have socialized power if they want it. Before they order it, however, I earnestly hope that the "yardstick" myth will be exploded. I hope it will be revealed for exactly what it is—simply another New Deal hoax. I hope they will recognize the ardent gentleman from Mississippi as one of the most sincere, but most completely self-deluded gold-brick salesmen who ever tried to capitalize the people's gullibility.

The T. V. A. is purely a creature of this Congress. But already it defies this body. It orders its own destiny. With the aid of a social-minded President, it fires a director who cries for intelligent administration and honesty of purpose. With complete immunity it defies the General Accounting Office and ignores the Federal Power Commission. This thing is literally a Frankenstein, and the House wisely recognized that fact in its amendments to the Norris bill. We cannot destroy T. V. A., except at unthinkable expense. But we can confine it. We can also define and clarify the issues of power socialization here and now, clearly. In fact, we can reasonably do nothing less. I do not want this monster T. V. A. to enter the fair State of Indiana and wreak the havoc that has followed in its wake in the South.

I hope that the House will reject any concessions from the policy this body has already outlined in its amendments. I urge that we reject the report of the conferees and insist upon the amendments previously approved.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute and, if he will permit, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Is not the House put in a rather ludicrous position because our conferees refused to accept the Senate amendments, the Senate conferees refused to accept the House amendments, and so Mr. Wilhoit, Mr. Willkie, and Mr. Krug got together and wrote a new bill and handed it to us, and that is the measure before us today?

Mr. HARNESS. That is precisely what we are considering today.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I do not think that is a fair statement. They made a suggestion of what they would like to have done, but it was not done exactly as they said, and I wrote the bill that was finally agreed upon, along with the legislative counsel of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARNESS. I have the highest regard and the utmost confidence in the chairman of my committee, but I cannot agree with him on this capitulation to the conferees of the Senate.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, when the House recently had under consideration Senate bill 1796 it added seven important and far-reaching provisions. The reaction of the press and the public to the action of the House was exceedingly favorable. Some considered the House amendments to be the most constructive legislation passed at this session of Congress, and the prediction was made that if they became law they would go a long way toward a revival of confidence in private industry.

An examination of the House conference report indicates that a majority of the conferees recommend that virtually all of these amendments be now discarded. It is agreed that the bond limitation be fixed at $61,500,000 instead of $100,000,000, and that the funds be definitely earmarked. This was a necessary change as there was no evidence offered that the entire $100,000,000 was needed. This was an accomplishment, of course, but it was by no means the most important amendment suggested by the House. We find that the conferees recommend that we cast aside the following vital amendments: First, that the bonds be guaranteed by T. V. A. and not by the Federal Government; second, that all expenditures of T. V. A. be accounted for through the Comptroller General; third, that the area of operation be limited to the Tennessee watershed and some adjacent territory; and, fourth, that a sinking fund be set up sufficient to pay off these bonds as well as the cost of improvements heretofore allocated exclusively for electric-power purposes.

In the limited time I have I shall address my remarks only to the latter amendment. The House will recall that this amendment required two things: First, it required T. V. A. to maintain a sinking fund into which should be paid each year, out of earnings, an amount sufficient to pay off both principal and interest on the bonds issued under this act as the same become due; second, it required T. V. A. to issue a bond or bonds to the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount equal to the total cost of that part of the T. V. A. investment allocated for the development of electric power, and it required that T. V. A. pay out of its earnings an amount sufficient to pay the interest but not the principal of such bonds.

The purpose of this provision was obvious. All of the money derived from the sale of bonds authorized by this act can be used for the acquisition of electric-power property, and will, of course, inure to the benefit of electric-power consumers. Of the amounts heretofore appropriated for T. V. A. 38.1 percent has been allocated by the Authority itself for power purposes, and the remainder for flood defense and navigation. As it is estimated that approximately $505,000,000, exclusive of the bonds included in this bill, will be spent for T. V. A. by the time it is completed, it follows, under this allocation, that about $192,000,000 will have been allocated for power purposes alone. Adding the bonds authorized by this act we have a total of approximately $254,000,000 for power purposes.

At only 2 percent the interest charges alone will amount to slightly more than $5,000,000 a year. If the $61,500,000 in bonds authorized by this act should be paid off in 50 years, more than a million dollars a year additional would be added to the sinking fund. In other words, if the amendment adopted by this House should become law, slightly more than $6,000,000 per year must be placed in a sinking fund out of the earnings of T. V. A. If this amendment, which has been rejected by the conferees, does not become law, taxpayers and States which cannot possibly receive any benefits through the use of T. V. A. power must pay the greater part of the bill. There is nothing in the present law which will compel the paying of a single dollar of any of these amounts out of earnings. There is likewise nothing in the present law which prevents T. V. A. from using its earnings for the building of additional transmission lines and continuing the same kind of destructive competition which forced the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to sell out to T. V. A. The unwillingness of T. V. A. proponents to agree to the amendment adopted by this House requiring the bonds authorized by this act to be guaranteed by T. V. A. instead of being unconditionally guaranteed by the Government itself is compelling evidence that T. V. A. does not want to assume this responsibility. If the conference report is adopted we will place the responsibility upon the taxpayers, most of whom can never be benefited by T. V. A., and many of whom are yet unborn.

According to testimony presented to the T. V. A. subcommittee, the earnings of T. V. A. through the sale of electric power should be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 per year, and may be as high as $7,000,000 a year after the acquisition of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. No sound reason can be advanced why these earnings should not be used to pay off the principal and interest on the bonds T. V. A. is now requesting. Nor can any reason be given consistent with good business practices why T. V. A.'s earnings should not be used to pay interest upon the huge amount which has already been appropriated and spent solely for electric-power facilities. If the earnings are insufficient for these purposes, the electric-power rates should be increased. Nothing could be more manifestly unfair than to expect that those who receive no benefits should pay the bill or any part of it. I cannot believe that those who receive the benefits expect this. In fact, they have indicated that they do not want the remainder of the country to pay for benefits which belong exclusively to them.

There is another reason why T. V. A. does not want this amendment. If the earnings of T. V. A. do not have to be used for any of these purposes, and if Congress will continue to appropriate and the credit of the Federal Government will continue to be extended, T. V. A. can obtain the kind of yardstick it desires for electric-power rates so that it may contrast its low electric-power rates with those fixed by private utilities throughout the country. What T. V. A. fails to disclose on such occasions is that all of the taxpayers, whether they receive any benefits or not, are making these low rates possible through their own contributions. Under the present law this fictitious yardstick may continue its existence. Under the amendment to which I have been referring it would not be possible. The amendment requiring a sinking fund would apply a yardstick, but it would be a yardstick applied by Congress to T. V. A. and not by T. V. A.—it would be a yardstick of sound business principles and not one of fiction and deception. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] and I, as two of the conferees on this bill, would like to know if all the time has been consumed on our side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky used 20 minutes and, as the Chair understood, yielded the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Missouri. Is this a correct statement of the attitude of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I intended, when I started out to explain the report, to ask the Speaker to remind me when I had used 15 minutes, but I forgot it. I used the time inadvertently, but the gentleman from Texas came to me on the floor of the House before I started to speak and said if there was not any fight or any opposition particularly to the report he did not want to speak on it.

Mr. THOMASON. That is exactly right; but when I find that not one friend of T. V. A. has had 1 minute of time, and all has been criticism and apology, it seems to me high time that two conferees on this conference committee, that has had many long sessions during the last month, should be entitled to a few minutes of time and at least say a few kind words in favor of the report. There has not been one friend of T. V. A. who has had 1 minute of time. What is the use of being conferees on a committee, if that is the treatment we are to receive? I am not criticizing; I am only asking for fair treatment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists on it, I will retain the 2 minutes to tell all that was said about it—if we have to have a scrap here.

Mr. THOMASON. I am not looking for a scrap. I am asking only for fair treatment for two conferees who were promised time in the event there was a contest on the report, and that is all we have heard—criticism or apology for the entire report. My friendship, however, for the chairman causes me to accept his explanation. I am only asking for my rights.

The SPEAKER. The matter is not within the control of the Chair.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be allowed to sit during sessions of the House this afternoon.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON].

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, this bill concerning the Tennessee Valley Authority came before the House for action on June 13, 1939, after hearings extending over several weeks. Under the present law the T. V. A. has the right to issue $50,000,000 in bonds for the construction of dams, steam plants, or other facilities for the generation or transmission of electric power, but it does not have the right to acquire by purchase existing dams and steam plants now in private ownership. If this report is accepted, we will give that right to a Government agency for the first time, establishing a most dangerous precedent. The T. V. A. also has the power to issue another $50,000,000 in bonds for loans to municipalities on a repayment-in-full basis. This provision, now to be eliminated, is of little value, inasmuch as P. W. A. and other Government agencies offer better terms for such loans. The T. V. A. would not be here if they were not gaining $11,500,000 for their use. They lose exactly that amount if the present law continues.

In lengthy hearings it was brought out that the T. V. A. would not submit to any limitation of the area in which it should operate; that it would not establish a sinking fund for its $230,000,000 capital expenditures; that it refused to allow the Congress, at the same time that a contract involving more than $78,000,000 was being entered into, to determine in what manner local taxes, lost to municipalities through the acquisition of private properties by the Federal Government, would be taken care of. Many leading citizens of the area affected appeared as witnesses and beseeched us to settle this issue at the only proper time for its consideration, namely, at the time the contract was to be signed—right now. One of the leading witnesses who strongly urged this action was our colleague, Mr. WHELCHEL, of Georgia.

Let us consider the tax situation. The hearings disclosed that the T. V. A. now has contracted to sell on a 20-year basis to some of the largest corporations in the United States enormous quantities of power annually at the price of waste power. It has contracted to sell a very large amount of power to various municipalities on other 20-year contracts at such low prices that for the amount of electricity for which the private utilities now receive $16,000,000 the ultimate consumers will pay less than $12,000,000 under this new deal, representing a saving to them of $4,000,000. This is practically offset by a loss of $3,512,000 in taxes, due to Federal rather than private ownership. If this loss has to be made up locally, the consumers will have done little more than change the name of its power supplier. The hearings disclose, and it was admitted in debate on this floor, that if the T. V. A. makes good this loss in taxes to communities, to counties, and to States involved, the money must come from general funds in the United States Treasury. That means that all persons in every community outside the area in which the T. V. A. operates will contribute to the cheap power enjoyed by the people and great corporations served by the T. V. A. Are they going to be called upon to pay somebody else's electricity bill? On page 85 of the hearings, Gov. Prentice Cooper, of Tennessee, stated, and I quote:

> We understood only that the Tennessee Valley Authority was willing to cooperate in an equitable adjustment of the tax situation. We did not fear that agency, because we relied on their sincerity and good faith in their presentations which they have given us in writing, that they will replace the lost taxes. We favor it and believe it will comply with their statement.

The House on June 13 said, 192 to 167, that the consumers must pay these lost taxes. This conference agreement permits the T. V. A. to add these taxes to the burdens of your people and mine. It provides unfair competition for every manufacturer outside that area.

Chairman MAY was absolutely correct when he said in his speech on this bill at that time that, "Men on the floor of this House cry out for cheap electricity and a yardstick that is a liar at one end, a thief at the other, and rubber in the middle. I will tell you why it is a liar. It goes out and represents to the public that they are producing electricity and giving it to the people at a profit and that it is not being sold below cost." Yet, the sale price of electricity by the T. V. A. does not include provision for taxes to be paid to local communities by the T. V. A., though Governor Cooper, of Tennessee, has their promise in writing to pay such taxes.

In my considered opinion the T. V. A. has come before this House making this request in a spirit of deception. Its officers have told our committee that they will destroy the Tennessee Electric Power Co. through unfair competition if this bill is not passed in exactly the form that they want it. We are told that that would result in untold suffering to the widows and orphans who own the bonds of these private utility companies. To save these widows, we must wrong the widows who own the bonds of the counties and school districts which are about to lose the private companies' taxes. To save the latter widows the T. V. A. will ask that the United States Treasury pay these lost taxes. I believe that this is the time when the House should assert its control over the operations of the T. V. A., and particularly over the tax question.

Every newspaper in the United States spoke in glowing terms of the action of the House when it passed this bill with its limitations upon the area of operations of the T. V. A. It is sufficient to call attention to the words of the great democratic New York Times. I quote:

> Nothing that the House has done so far this session ought to bring more reassurance to business than the bill it has passed to control the Tennessee Valley Authority. These changes, if the Senate can be got to agree to them, will go far toward restoring public confidence in the future of the electric utility industry. They will do much to make certain that T. V. A. charges rates sufficient to pay for its investment.

I hope that every Congressman living outside of this area will have in mind the unbearable burden of taxes already placed upon his constituents, and by his vote today will prevent the saddling of additional taxes upon their shoulders for the sole purpose of providing the customers of T. V. A. with electricity below cost. The House should not adopt this report. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr Speaker, if I have control of the 2 minutes of time yielded to me by the gentleman from Kentucky, I should be very glad to yield them to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. That is very good of the gentleman but I do not want to take time that perhaps he has agreed to give someone else.

Mr. SHORT. No. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, anything I have to say will be said in all kindness and deference and without criticism of the chairman of my committee. All I am interested in is the question of fair play and fair consideration of this conference report, because as one of the conferees I sat for a good many hours on a good many days in an effort to work out a solution of this very complicated question, as likewise did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER]. So I say without any word of criticism of anybody, because as others have said, I entertain the highest feeling of personal friendship and respect for my chairman; but the thing that impressed itself on me was the fact that our chairman, who is always frank, evidenced his bitter animosity to everything connected with the T. V. A., and speaks for the report with apologies, and then every other speaker has come from the Republican side and, of course, they are bitter in their denunciation of everything affecting the T. V. A. I happen to be a friend of the T. V. A., because I regard it, although some mistakes have been made, as one of the most constructive things ever undertaken by any government; and I saw some evidence of that yesterday, when we were down at Chattanooga attending the funeral of our devoted friend Judge McReynolds, at which time we had opportunity to see what T. V. A. has done in the way of bringing happiness and prosperity to the people of the Tennessee Valley. It is rebuilding a small empire and restoring hope to many discouraged people. It has been a great experiment in government, and I say that it is worth all that it has cost. There is but one question involved in this report, and that is, Do you want to see this trade go through?—which will do the very thing that my good friends, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, recommended in their report of the investigation last fall, and that is to cut out ruthless competition. I do not claim any special credit for it myself; but it can be truly said, if the House adopts this conference report, that it has marched up the hill and marched down again, because the only thing of a material nature in this report that differs from the Senate bill is a reduction in the amount from one hundred million to sixty-one and a half million. Let there be no misunderstanding. The House is receding on everything of any importance except the amount. I feel sure a large majority of the membership will realize the mistake made in voting for many of the provisions of the House bill and now vote for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the conference report that has been brought in here is the result of many hours of hard work on the part of those who are managers on the part of the House. While we were not able to retain in the bill all of the provisions of the House measure, I believe that the bill on the whole is one which should be adopted; that it limits, as some of us desire, the spreading of the Tennessee Valley Authority all over the eastern section of the country, and at the same time it disposes of the ruthless competition which has been going on in that area, and implements the sale and does the very thing which the opponents of the T. V. A. have advocated for some time, namely, permits the purchase of the facilities of the private power company. I believe it is a measure which can be conscientiously supported by the membership of this House.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining 6 minutes of time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we are now approaching the conclusion of a very important piece of legislation. If this conference report is adopted, the legislation is practically finished. If it is not adopted, we have yet a chance to do what should be done. About a week or 10 days ago this House was engaged in a strenuous contest over this very important measure. The Senate had passed a bill known as the Norris

T. V. A. bill, providing for an appropriation of an additional hundred million dollars to the T. V. A. to be used to purchase certain competing electric lines in the T. V. A. territory.

The Military Affairs Committee of the House, after long and careful consideration, rejected the Senate's entire proposition and substituted in lieu thereof a measure which passed the House by a very substantial majority. The newspapers of the country were strong in their praise of the action of the House at that time. Many of them went so far as to say that that legislation marked the high tide of statesmanship and independent thinking that had been demonstrated up to that time in this session of Congress. When the smoke of battle had cleared away in the consideration of that case the action of the Military Affairs Committee was ratified by an overwhelming vote.

The bill offered by the Military Affairs Committee and passed by the House contained several very strong and statesmanlike provisions.

In the first place, it provided that the T. V. A. activities should be limited within certain geographical boundaries. The original T. V. A. Act indicates that that agency is to carry on its activities only within the Tennessee Valley. It has long since ignored this legal restriction as provided in the law and has extended its tentacles out far beyond the Tennessee Valley in many places. This gigantic octopus stretches across half a dozen States of the Southland, brooks no opposition, caring nothing for State lines or State jurisdictions. It seeks to dominate politically and socially and to crush all opposition and to ride ruthlessly across the land. It is time that its activities should be curbed. [Applause.]

Another provision in this bill as passed by the House is the one that would require the bonds issued under this bill to be repaid by the T. V. A. This was a very proper provision. T. V. A. boasts and brags about its low rates, which are largely a fake. If they are genuine, let the people who receive the benefit of them pay these bonds that we are about to issue under the provisions of the bill.

The bill passed by the House carried another very important provision, which was that this agency should submit its accounts to the scrutiny and examination of the General Accounting Office of the Government. This agency ought not to be treated any different than any other agency of the Government. It has defied the General Accounting Office and defied the Government itself. It should be restricted.

In spite of the fact that these three important provisions were embodied and carried in the bill which the House passed overwhelmingly a few days ago, the conferees have omitted all these provisions from the bill that is now before you. In other words, they have surrendered and their surrender has been and will always be a matter for which they cannot claim much credit and be especially proud. It is a sad fact that on so many occasions the House speaks by an overwhelming voice and vote only to have our conferees quail before the Senate and come back to us with an empty husk. This is a very unwise and unfair provision of our legislative procedure. When the House has rejected a Senate measure, why, then, should the House conferees knuckle to the Senate conferees and bring back to us for consideration something that we overwhelmingly defeated a few days previously?

This bill before us today is neither the work of the Senate nor the House. The House struck out the Senate provisions and the conferees have stricken out the House provisions and substituted their own provisions. In effect, a small group of five or six have taken the place of the Senate and the House, and we must now accept their judgment instead of our own. I for one shall refuse to do so.

Let us now consider just what the situation is that confronts us. We are called upon to vote for or against this conference report. Since it is almost completely opposite to what the House has heretofore done, it would seem that we should make short shrift of it and vote against it. If we do, what will happen? Let not your heart be troubled. A vote against this conference report will not be an unusual procedure. It has been done many times. If we do it today we will show the other body that we stand today as we did a few days ago. It will show them that our bill was right and that we still maintain that we were right. A vote for this bill will not in any way cast any reflection upon my distinguished friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. It will not in any way reflect upon the standing of my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER], or upon my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

I would have you understand, however, that if any of us do change front from the position you took a few days ago on these propositions, you can find no comfort in this conference report. Let no man be misled as to this proposition. Any man who voted for the May amendment a few days ago cannot logically justify his position if he votes for this conference report. It will be little consolation to you who come from coal-mining sections to go back and say to the miners who are much interested in this proposition that you voted for their best interests, after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] himself has said many times on this floor that the activities of the T. V. A. are not for the benefit of the coal industry of the land. This $61,000,000 that is provided in this bill will not benefit the coal miners of his section.

The territorial restriction on the activities of the T. V. A. should have been retained in this bill. This agency should be kept in its own field. The bill we passed a few days ago would have kept it in its own field. This bill we are considering now puts down the bars and allows it to run wild without any territorial restriction of any kind. Do not be mistaken in this respect.

As I have already stated the bill we passed a few days ago provided in effect that all the bonds issued under the terms of this bill should be repaid by the T. V. A. from its profits. None of it should be paid by the Government. That was a very proper provision because it is not right that the people of Ohio and New York and Michigan and Montana should be compelled to pay for the electricity consumed by the people in this territory when they claim that they have such cheap rates. If they want the T. V. A. now that they have gotten it they ought to make it pay for itself. If the Government donates six or seven hundred million dollars to build the projects for them they surely ought to be able to run it. It is a sorry pass that the Government must build the projects for them, and then must put the electricity in their houses and pay for a portion of that.

Already the people in the Tennessee Valley have begun to realize that the honeymoon of the T. V. A. is about over. They are staggering under the burden of additional taxation that has resulted by reason of the failure of the T. V. A. to pay taxes on the million acres of the finest land in that section that they have taken and flooded with water. When the T. V. A. buys the properties of the Tennessee Power Co. and the other associated properties and takes them off the tax duplicates these States will lose another substantial tax contribution which the people will have to make up in some other way. They will be clamoring for the Federal Government to pay the taxes which they have lost by reason of this gigantic, unwieldy, unconstitutional, and unnecessary New Deal experiment.

I repeat that the T. V. A. should be restricted in its territorial activities; that it should pay for these bonds that are going to be issued under this bond issue because these bonds will be used to purchase these competing properties which will be turned over to the T. V. A. The T. V. A. gets the properties; let the T. V. A. pay for them. I repeat that the T. V. A. should be subjected to rigid accounting the same as any other Governmental activity.

There is another proposition, however, that I wish to discuss with you. It is this: If you vote today to purchase these properties for $61,500,000 and turn the same over to the T. V. A., why should you not be ready to vote to purchase the properties of other power companies operating in the Southland and in the T. V. A. section? You will most surely be expected to do that next year or the year following. They will come back here and clamor for recognition, and you will in good conscience be compelled to give it to them. If you buy this property today, you will go that much further in rendering the properties of other power companies in the Southland less valuable. When you start on this program today, you cannot in good conscience stop until you have purchased every power company in the Southland east of the Mississippi River and south of the Ohio River. Already the T. V. A. is knocking at the doors of Birmingham and Atlanta. It is already well down in Mississippi and will soon reach over into Louisiana. From Birmingham and Georgia it is only a short distance into Florida. But why follow the power company too far into the deep South? Let us come back up into the territory of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. When the Gilbertsville Dam is finished it will be more expensive by far than any of the T. V. A. dams. It will represent an outlay of approximately 150 millions of dollars. It will cost more than three times as much as the great Norris Dam or the Hiwasse or the other large and beautiful dams already partially constructed. These other dams will furnish enough power to meet the demands in their sections, and that will leave Gilbertsville located within a few miles of the Ohio River, free access to carry its current into St. Louis, Mo., and Springfield, Ill., and Indianapolis, Ind., and Cincinnati, Ohio.

It is to this proposition that I wish to direct your special attention. The minority report of the committee that was appointed by this Congress to investigate the T. V. A. activities makes recommendations that naturally I think are sound and reasonable since I had some small part in drafting them. I agree with this minority report, which states in effect, that the best way to dispose of the Tennessee Valley Authority and its numerous activities is not to do anything that would tend to destroy these beautiful and terrifically expensive dams and lakes and other numerous improvements of various kinds, but on the contrary to take those that have been finished, and finish those upon which any substantial amount of work has been done, but to discontinue work on the other projects at this time. This report further recommends that the Government refrain from going further into the power business in competition with private power companies who maintain a fair, adequate, and reasonable service. We recommend that when these dams are completed that they be used for the manufacture of power and that this power be sold at wholesale at the dam to whomsoever might want it; sold at a reasonable price so that it might be delivered to the people of the Southland at a reasonable price by the power companies regardless of whether it is the same price that may obtain in some other sections of the country. If those sections would, when proper consideration is given to all necessary costs of production, be entitled to cheaper rates than some other section they should have them. The Government should not put itself in the power business in competition with other producing companies and thereby destroy the investment of the competing companies. Instead of voting this sixty-one million five hundred thousand to purchase these existing companies we should be taking steps to withdraw from competition so that these companies could continue to operate and thereby employ their own people and pay their investors whatever sum they could legitimately earn in fair competition with other power companies.

I am afraid that many of our Members today will vote directly opposite to their own philosophy. Their philosophy is to keep the Government out of the power business, but when they vote today they are putting the Government much further into the power business. They are not only putting the Government into the T. V. A. business, but they are putting the Government into the power business now operated by these competing companies. To me this is the most important phase of what we are doing here today. I am afraid that some of you who have opposed the extension of the T. V. A. will find out to your sorrow that you have placed yourself in a very inconsistent position. You cannot be consistent in your claim that you want to keep the Government out of business and at the same time vote $61,500,000 with which the Government is to buy several large producing power companies.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will all appreciate what we are about to do. I hope that you will stand as you stood last week and vote down this conference report and send these various splendid conferees back for further conference with the Senate and I further hope that they will bring back to us a bill that correctly represents the philosophy of a strong majority of this House as it was reflected last week when we had ample opportunity to consider this most important proposition. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 145, answered "present" 1, not voting 74, as follows:

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I have an active pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDREWS, one of the conferees. I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short press release of the National Coal Association and a short editorial, to be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks made today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS OF SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5748) entitled "An act to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act as amended," with Senate amendments and disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that eliminates the T. V. A. proposal?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Since the T. V. A. conference report has been agreed to, it makes this provision in this bill unnecessary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from North Carolina tell us when we may expect the majority side to propose an amendment eliminating the tax-free covenant from Government bonds?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Just as soon as we reasonably and conscientiously can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will notify the Senate of the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—PEACE AND NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION (S. DOC. NO. 94)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am advised that by a vote of 12 to 11 the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has deferred action on peace and neutrality legislation until the next session of the Congress.

I am appending hereto a statement from the Secretary of State which has my full approval, and which I trust will receive your earnest attention.

It has been abundantly clear to me for some time that for the cause of peace and in the interest of American neutrality and security, it is highly advisable that the Congress at this session should take certain much-needed action. In the light of present world conditions, I see no reason to change that opinion.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 14, 1939.

STATEMENT ON PEACE AND NEUTRALITY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE

The cornerstone of the foreign policy of the United States is the preservation of the peace and security of our Nation, the strengthening of international law, and the revitalization of international good faith. The foreign policy of this Government may be misinterpreted or it may be misunderstood, but it cannot be destroyed. Peace is so precious and war so devastating that the people of the United States and their Government must not fail to make their just and legitimate contribution to the preservation of peace.

The Congress has pending before it at the present time certain proposals providing for the amendment of the existing so-called neutrality legislation. Some of these proposed changes I regard as necessary to promote the peace and security of the United States.

There is an astonishing amount of confusion and misunderstanding as regards the legislation under consideration, and particularly with regard to the operation of the existing arms embargo.

I shall try to bring out as clearly as I can the important points of agreement and disagreement between those who support the principles contained in the six-point peace and neutrality program recommended by the executive branch of the Government and those who oppose these recommendations.

In substance and in principle both sides of the discussion agree on the following points:

1. Both sides agree that the first concern of the United States must be its own peace and security.

2. Both sides agree that it should be the policy of this Government to avoid being drawn into wars between other nations.

3. Both sides agree that this Nation should at all times avoid entangling alliances or involvements with other nations.

4. Both sides agree that in the event of foreign wars this Nation should maintain a status of strict neutrality, and that around the structure of neutrality we should so shape our policies as to keep this country from being drawn into war.

On the other hand, the following is the chief essential point of disagreement between those who favor the adoption of the recommendations formulated by the executive branch of the Government and those who are opposing these recommendations:

The proponents, including the executive branch of the Government, at the time when the arms embargo was originally adopted called attention to the fact that its enactment constituted a hazardous departure from the principle of international law which recognizes the right of neutrals to trade with belligerents and of belligerents to trade with neutrals. They believe that neutrality means impartiality, and in their view an arms embargo is directly opposed to the idea of neutrality. It is not humanly possible, by enacting an arms embargo, or by refraining from such enactment, to hold the scales exactly even between two belligerents. In either case and due to shifting circumstances one belligerent may find itself in a position of relative advantage or disadvantage. The important difference between the two cases is that when such a condition arises in the absence of an arms embargo on our part, no responsibility attaches to this country, whereas in the presence of an embargo, the responsibility of this country for the creation of the condition is inevitably direct and clear.

There is no theory or practice to be found in international law pertaining to neutrality to the effect that the advantages that any particular belligerent might procure through its geographic location, its superiority on land or at sea, or through other circumstances, should be offset by the establishment by neutral nations of embargoes.

The opposition to the present substitute proposal joins issue on this point, and stands for existing rigid embargo as a permanent part of our neutrality policy. And yet by insisting on an arms embargo in time of war they are, to that extent, for the reasons I have stated, urging not neutrality, but what might well result in actual unneutrality, the serious consequences of which no one can predict.

Those who urge the retention of the present embargo continue to advance the view that it will keep this country out of war—thereby misleading the American people to rely upon a false and illogical delusion as a means of keeping out of war.

I say it is illogical, because while the trade in "arms, ammunition, and implements of war" is at present banned, the trade in equally essential war materials, as well as all the essential materials out of which the finished articles are made can continue. For example, in time of war, we can sell cotton for the manufacture of explosives, but not the explosives; we can sell the steel and copper for cannon and for shells but not the cannon nor the shells; we can continue to sell to belligerants the high-powered fuel necessary for the operation of airplanes, but we are not able to sell the airplanes.

I say it is a false delusion because a continuation of the trade in arms is a clearly recognized and traditional right of the nationals of a neutral country in time of war, subject only to effective blockade and to the right of belligerents to treat any such commodities as contraband. The assertion frequently made that this country has ever engaged or may become engaged in serious controversy solely over the fact that its nationals have sold arms to belligerents is misleading and unsupportable. All available evidence is directly to the contrary. Every informed person knows that arms, as absolute contraband, are subject to seizure by a belligerent and that neither the neutral shipper nor his government has the slightest ground for complaint. There is, therefore, no reason to suppose that the sale of arms may lead to serious controversy between a neutral and a belligerent. Furthermore, under the proposals that have been made American nationals would be divested of all right, title, and interest in these and other commodities before they leave our shores and American citizens and ships would be kept out of danger zones. As regards possible complications which might arise as a result of the extension of credits to belligerents or of extraordinary profits accruing to any group of producers in this country, it is wholly within the power of Congress at all times to safeguard the national interest in this respect.

Controversies which would involve the United States are far more likely to arise from the entrance of American ships or American cititzens in the danger zones or through the sinking on the high seas of American vessels carrying commodities other than those covered by the arms embargo. In the recommendations formulated by the Executive as a substitute for the present legislation it was especially urged that provisions be adopted which would exclude American nationals and American ships from zones where real danger to their safety might exist and which would divest goods of American ownership, thereby minimizing to the fullest extent the danger of American involvement.

Those of us who support the recommendations formulated for the elimination of the embargo are convinced that the arms embargo plays into the hands of those nations which have taken the lead in building up their fighting power. It works directly against the interests of the peace-loving nations, especially those which do not possess their own munitions plants. It means that if any country is disposed toward conquest, and devotes its energy and resources to establish itself as a superior fighting power, that country may be more tempted to try the fortunes of war if it knows that its less well prepared opponents would be shut off from those supplies which, under every rule of international law, they should be able to buy in all neutral countries, including the United States. It means also that some of those countries which have only limited facilities for the production of arms, ammunition, and implements of war are put in a position of increased dependence. During peacetime they would feel the compulsion of shaping their political as well as their economic policy to suit the military strength of others; and during wartime their powers of defense would be limited.

For these reasons those who are supporting the recommendations for the amendment of existing legislation recognize definitely that the present embargo encourages a general state of war, both in Europe and Asia. Since the present embargo has this effect its results are directly prejudicial to the highest interests and to the peace and to the security of the United States.

In the present grave conditions of international anarchy and of danger to peace, in more than one part of the world, I profoundly believe that the first great step toward safeguarding this Nation from being drawn into war is to use whatever influence it can, compatible with the traditional policy of our country of noninvolvement, so as to make less likely the outbreak of a major war. This is a duty placed upon our Government which some may fail to perceive or choose to reject. But it must be clear to every one of us that the outbreak of a general war increases the dangers confronting the United States. This fact cannot be ignored.

I would emphasize that the course proposed through the substitute legislation recommended by the Executive is consistent with the rules of international law and with the policy of our own country over a period of 150 years. The basis for the recommendations made is the firm intention of keeping this country from being drawn into war. If there existed any desire to assist or to injure particular foreign countries this Government would not have been endeavoring persistently, within the limitations of our traditional policy, over a period of many years to do its utmost to avoid the outbreak of a general war. I earnestly hope that the Congress will lend the fullest measure of its cooperation in the endeavor to avoid war in the first place and to place this country in a position of the greatest security possible, should war break out. In the tragic event that peace efforts fail and that a major war occurs, there will be general agreement within the United States that every effort must be exerted to keep this country from being drawn therein.

I must also refer to the impression sedulously created to the effect that the sale of arms, munitions, and implements of war by this country is immoral and that on this ground it should be suppressed in time of war.

As a matter of fact almost all sales of arms and ammunition made in recent years by our nationals have been made to governments whose policies have been dedicated to the maintenance of peace, but who have felt the necessity of creating or of augmenting their means of national self-defense, thereby protecting otherwise helpless men, women, and children in the event that other powers resort to war. In the face of the present universal danger all countries, including our own, feel the necessity of increasing armament, and small countries in particular are dependent upon countries like the United States which have the capacity to produce armaments. Our refusal to make it possible for them to obtain such means of necessary self-defense in a time of grave emergency, would contribute solely toward making more helpless the law-abiding and peace-devoted peoples of the world. If such action is moral, and if, on the contrary, sales of the means of self-defense for the protection of peaceful and law-abiding peoples are immoral, then a new definition of morality and immorality must be written. This task might be left to the proponents of the arms embargo.

I must also refer to another impression created by propaganda to the effect that the abandonment of the arms embargo would increase power of action on the part of the executive branch of the Government and conversely that the maintenance of the embargo would serve as an additional check on the powers of the Executive. It is difficult to see how either of these propositions could possibly hold true. An impartial granting of access to American markets to all countries without distinction gives the Executive no additional power to choose among them and to commit this country to any line of policy or action which may lead it either into a dangerous controversy or into war with any foreign power.

The legislative proposals which were recommended to the Congress through the communications which I transmitted to Senator PITTMAN and to Congressman BLOOM on May 27, providing for the safeguarding of our Nation to the fullest possible extent from incurring the risks of involvement in war, contemplate the elimination of the existing arms embargo and are as follows:

(1) To prohibit American ships from entering combat areas;

(2) To restrict travel by American citizens in combat areas;

(3) To require that goods exported from the United States to belligerent countries shall be preceded by the transfer of title to the foreign purchasers;

(4) To continue the existing legislation respecting loans and credits to belligerent nations;

(5) To regulate the solicitation and collection in this country of funds for belligerents; and

(6) To continue the National Munitions Control Board and the licensing system with respect to the importation and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

This six-point program was the best that could be devised after much painstaking thought and study, and after many conferences with Members of the Congress of how best to keep this country out of a conflict should it arise. It rests primarily on the established rules of international law, plus the curtailment of certain rights of our nationals, the exercise of which is permitted under international law, but which might lead to controversies with belligerents and eventual involvement in foreign wars.

There has thus been offered as a substitute for the present act a far broader and more effective set of provisions, which in no conceivable sense could breed trouble, but which to a far greater extent than the present act would both aid in making less likely a general war, and, while keeping strictly within the limits of neutrality, would reduce as far as possible the risk of this Nation of being drawn into war if war comes.

In connection with our foreign affairs, I think all must agree that, unless a spirit of collaboration and cooperation characterizes the relations between the executive and legislative departments of the Government, the peace and other vital interests of this country will inevitably be jeopardized.

Having spent the best years of my life as a Member of the two Houses of Congress, I have the warmest feeling of friendliness toward the membership of, and the greatest respect for, the legislative department, and in that spirit I earnestly hope for the closest possible cooperation in matters affecting our country's best interests and its security in the present grave international situation.

At this time when critical conditions obtain throughout the greater part of the world I am sure that we are all equally persuaded that while the fullest measure of constructive criticism is helpful and desirable, and is of course most welcome, partisanship should play no part in the determination of the foreign policy of this country.

In the present situation of danger a peaceful nation like ours cannot complacently close its eyes and ears in formulating a peace and neutrality policy, as though abnormal and critical conditions did not exist. The entire question of peace and neutrality at this serious juncture in its possible effects upon the safety and the interest of the United States during coming months is of the utmost importance. This question should, in my judgment, receive full and careful consideration and be acted upon by this Government without unnecessary or undue delay.

CORDELL HULL.

AMENDING MERCHANT MARINE AND SHIPPING ACTS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 224.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 224

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6746, a bill to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6746) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts. It is an open rule with 2 hours of general debate provided. So far as I know, and I have been so informed, there is no opposition to the passage of the bill itself. I think all parties have agreed upon that. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported the bill unanimously for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] to explain the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt in the time at my disposal to review generally the bill as briefly as possible with a view of eliminating as much time as we can on general discussion.

The bill embraces 14 sections. The first section simply removes the present 2-year limitation on orders, as now prescribed in the acts, and brings the Merchant Marine Act in accord with similar legislation pertaining to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The second section makes it clear that the burden of proof is on the carrier in cases involving the suspension of rates. The bulk of the evidence is, or should be, in its possession; and, therefore, this rule is reasonable and fair; and this, too, is brought into accord with similar legislation applicable to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Section 3 permits employment without regard to civil service of 8 additional naval architects or marine engineers, 8 additional special experts, 10 additional examiners, and 2 inspectors for each vessel at the yards. This is deemed necessary because of the difficulty of getting this particular type of employee.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman point out in his discussion of this bill whether or not any additional expenses will be shoved onto the fishing industry as a result of this legislation? Is there anything in the bill that places the restrictions on or adds to the expense of the fishing industry?

Mr. BLAND. This bill does not impose additional burdens or restrictions on the fishing industry. The only relation to the fishing industry, and I will cover that now, is in the last section of the bill. There appeared to be some doubt as to certain legislation that had already been enacted providing for credit under title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, regarding ship-mortgage insurance and how far it would extend to fishing vessels. While the general counsel was of opinion that the law would extend to fishing vessels, yet in order to remove an apparent conflict between two sections, fishing vessels are expressly named as beneficiaries, so that so far as fishing vessels are concerned, this bill is rather a benefit and clarification.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I know how interested the gentleman has always been in the fishing industry and I wanted to have that cleared up.

Mr. BLAND. This committee will seek never to impose a burden on the fishing industry. When any question comes up which would impose burdens on the fishing industry, the gentleman may be assured that the proposition will receive the most minute and meticulous consideration.

Section 4 allows an increased pay to men drawn from other services sufficient to bring up that pay to what they would be performing in comparable service. In other words, if a man is detailed from the Navy to serve with the Maritime Commisison in a particular class of its work, and if occupying that same status with the Navy he would draw an increased pay, this section is designed to prevent the injustice of giving him a reduced pay while serving with the Commission. It is simply a matter of justice.

Section 6 provides the standards by which construction differential subsidies shall be determined and provides for measuring the differential between domestic yards and foreign yards. The differential shall be that determined by the Commission by comparing the cost in a domestic yard with the foreign yard, which will furnish a fair and representative example for the determination of estimated foreign cost of construction. The words "which may be reasonably availed of" are eliminated, because it may be that the basis of comparison with a yard "which may be reasonably availed of" is too speculative in order to determine a fair basis. So the Commission is given the authority to determine what would be a fair and representative example for the determination of the estimated cost.

The next section—section 7—is probably one of the most important in the bill. It has to do with the "turn in and build" program of the Commission, and pertains to domestic as well as foreign vessels engaged in domestic commerce as well as foreign commerce.

There are only 153 vessels in the subsidized fleet, and about 90 percent of the vessels in the domestic trade are not eligible for subsidy. They are well over 15 years old and 70 percent are 20 years old or more. There are obsolete vessels that are now owned by these persons who are engaged in this industry. Without the restriction now existing in law, some of those vessels could be sold to foreign countries at a rather considerable price for scrap value. Manifestly that is not desirable. Also they could be sold and put into competition with our own merchant marine, which is not desirable.

In our Shipping Act we have provided that these vessels cannot be sold without the consent of the Maritime Commission; so that on the one hand we are denying the present owner the right to sell the old obsolete vessel and on the other hand we are calling for reconstruction.

All maritime nations of the world are doing just exactly what we contemplate doing here. We provide as to vessels over 17 years of age that the Maritime Commission may agree with the owners, if they can agree, upon a fair and reasonable price at which those vessels may be taken over by the Maritime Commission, and whatever amount shall be allowed on those old vessels shall be credited as payment on the new vessels to be constructed; the old vessels will be then in the possession of the Maritime Commission, either to be converted into scrap or, if it is desired or thought reasonably proper, those vessels may be put in the laid-up fleet in order to be retained there for use in the event of emergency. This change will remove a great injustice that rests upon the owners of ships and which exists by reason of existing legislation. It will enable the Maritime Commission to carry out its policies. The agreement must be reached with the owner and there is nothing compulsory about it. It is entirely voluntary.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Can the owner of these private ships negotiate with foreign interests?

Mr. BLAND. Not under the law. If he negotiates, he must get the consent of the Maritime Commission. It is the existing law today. He must get the consent of the Maritime Commission before sale can be made.

Section 8 permits payment of an additional 15 percent over the 75 percent as now permitted. It was not designed or intended when the legislation was framed that as to the ship subsidies that were due, they should be held up in some cases for nearly 9 months. We have provided for a 75-percent payment. This permits an additional payment of 15 percent, but with securities and guaranties that if there should be any error the excess must be paid back. The payments can be made only after there is a very careful audit.

Section 9 is an amendment which we have offered previously, and deals with the problem of countervailing subsidies. It adds nothing to the existing law. The only thing it does is it eliminates the requirement in the existing law that there shall be a unanimous vote of the Commission and provides that if four members so vote it may be paid.

May I say that that provision is identical with the provision that was in the bill that was last considered by the House, supported by the House, sent to the Senate, and reported favorably by the Senate, but it was stricken out on consideration of the bill in the Senate.

Section 11 provides a statutory floor by which persons purchasing ships can be assured that ships built by the Maritime Commission will not be put upon the market at a lower rate than is provided in the act, because of which they would possibly be done an injustice by reason of some subsequent effort to get rid of the ships.

Section 12 is a clarifying amendment to bring section 714 in line with other provisions of the bill. Section 714 of the bill brings the bill with reference to the charter of vessels in accord with title V of the Merchant Marine Act, which deals with the sale of vessels. It will be readily seen that it is necessary to harmonize those sections, because if the section dealing with the sale of vessels offers sale on more burdensome terms than the charter of vessels, then there would be difficulty in selling any vessels and getting the merchant marine in private hands as we desire; whereas section 714 provides that where that cannot be accomplished the vessels may be chartered. Unless section 714 is brought into accord with title V, there would be possibly no inducement to charter, and the operators who cannot at this time effect the purchase of vessels would go on with their old, dilapidated, and obsolete vessels rather than bring themselves into accord with the new policy.

Section 13 provides penalties where none exist. The act of 1936 assumed that certain penalties existed, but it was found that they did not, except for violations of the Shipping Act. Section 13 simply carries out the intent that existed in the original law.

Section 14 is a clarifying amendment as to fishing boats.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. The purpose of the entire bill is to improve the merchant marine of our country and to help develop the merchant marine.

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

I may say there is one other section dealing with cadets on shipboard. The only objection that was interposed with respect to this provision was that they might be used as strikebreakers. That is impossible, because the men who are used must conform with the regulations imposed by the Maritime Commission as to subsidized ships and by the Bureau of Marine Inspection as to all classes, and these men do not fall within the term "seamen or licensed officers," as was provided in the act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is there anything in this bill to give control over the Japanese fishing vessels on the Pacific coast?

Mr. BLAND. No; that is not in this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is the gentleman's committee considering a bill of that character?

Mr. BLAND. Not at this time. There is some such legislation pending before the committee, introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] on which we have heard evidence. I hope that something may be worked out on that matter, but just at this time it would not be wise to bring in legislation of that type. I do hope that the bill we have provided for the establishment of a Coast Guard base in Alaska, and also giving wider powers of supervision to the Coast Guard, will more effectually control that situation.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. There is nothing in this bill that will interfere with rail rates?

Mr. BLAND. Not a thing in the world, unless running ships interferes with railroads, and I do not see how it possibly could. As a matter of fact, I believe that the development of what we have asked for here in an effort to build up our country and establish and restore its commerce would be the finest contribution that could be made to the restoration of the railroads, because I am firmly convinced that what the railroads need today more than anything else is a restoration of business in the country, stability, and the assurance of continued business. However, nothing in this bill affects the situation to which the gentleman has referred. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 6746 was carefully considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and approved by the committee without opposition. The bill provides for a number of constructive amendments to the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts to meet present emergencies with reference to the rehabilitation of our merchant marine. I sincerely hope the rule will be adopted and the bill passed. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to concur fully in the explanation of our distinguished chairman and to say that this measure has the full concurrence of the committee on both sides of the aisle.

In addition, I desire briefly to commend the present Maritime Commission for the excellent work it has done. In writing this legislation during the past 3 years the committee has endeavored to steer clear of the terrible waste and mistakes of the past. The Maritime Commission in its present personnel has ably and conscientiously carried out the will of the committee in the construction and placing of ships on the seas. Most Americans feel that a merchant marine is essential. Three years ago, except for the intervention of this law, the merchant marine bade fair to fade away completely. Under this act the merchant marine is being restored and will serve a high purpose for America both in times of peace and in times of war. [Applause.]

To that end and serving that purpose, as a member of this committee more or less diligent in service at the meetings of the committee, I desire to extend my hearty commendation to the Maritime Commission for the able, patriotic, and impartial manner in which they have performed this high service. No board or commission in the history of the Congress and the country has ever rendered more patriotic or honest service. Under the auspices of the Maritime Commission the American flag is coming back on the seas. They are handling the offshore labor question with sympathy and needed firmness. The shipbuilders for the first time in our maritime history are functioning adequately. The operators no longer write their own ticket. I wish to say again, and in conclusion, that the country and Congress are to be congratulated on the magnificent job being done by the Maritime Commission and its staff. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a short article which appeared in today's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. Perhaps I should call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, to the provision in the bill, which provides that certain employees of the Commission shall be appointed without reference to civil-service laws.

The gentleman from Georgia has reported a bill from his committee extending the classified civil service. That bill is now on the House Calendar. I understand it is the intention to bring it up at almost any time. I assume that the gentleman will be interested in this particular section, and that he will move to strike it out during the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I do not know whether the gentleman from Georgia was present at the time or not, but that matter was very fully gone into by the committee, and it was very clearly demonstrated that this is a peculiar type of official, and that you cannot secure such officials through the medium of the Civil Service Commission, certainly not in time for the construction work that is being carried on. There is building being done on battleships, and, really, the yards themselves are having some trouble in supplying the necessary people, so that careful diligence is required on the part of the Commission in getting these men, and the purpose could be better worked out without the intervention of the Civil Service Commission. The law already contains this provision, and this is merely an additional number.

The acting chairman of the Civil Service Commission is present, and both of the gentlemen are members of my committee, and I have heard no objection to this.

Mr. CULKIN. That is what I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, who is the acting chairman of the committee?

Mr. BLAND. I should have said the ranking member of the committee. There is no acting chairman because the chairman of the committee is present on the floor, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the provision includes, however, classes that it is intended to put under civil service by the bill which is on the calendar reported from the Committee on the Civil Service, such as 12 attorneys, for example, 22 examiners and inspectors for these vessels, as well as some of the experts to whom the gentleman from Virginia has referred.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will permit, I have not read that particular bill, but I do say this is in strict accord with existing law, only increasing the number, and this is very essential now. At one time the number of inspectors in the yards was one in each yard, but it is manifest that with three of our ships being built in a yard, however honest the yard may be, the Government should have its own inspectors checking on the work and they ought not to wait the time necessary to procure the additions needed through the civil service. If that question arises later, it can be covered at that time.

Mr. MAPES. I have not, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, compared the two provisions, but my thought is that the bill which is on the calendar now, reported from the Civil Service Committee, will put these men, once they are appointed, under the classified civil service. In other words, they will be appointed without reference to the classified civil service, but after they have received their appointment and served for a certain length of time they will be brought into the classified service by this bill which is on the calendar.

Mr. BLAND. May I say that what the bill does is to repeat the provisions of the present law. It asks 8 additional naval architects or marine engineers and already the existing law provides for 12 naval architects. In this it simply extends the classification for naval architects specifically to marine engineers. They have 20 special experts instead of 12. It does not increase the number of attorneys. There are 22 examiners instead of 12, and 2 inspectors for each vessel. It is simply an increase in the number.

Mr. MAPES. This increases the number of attorneys?

Mr. BLAND. Not attorneys. It does not increase the number of attorneys.

Mr. MAPES. It names 12 in the bill.

Mr. BLAND. The legislation already on the statute books provides for 12 attorneys. The 12 attorneys are merely repeated in the amendment, so that it does not increase the number of attorneys at all.

Mr. MAPES. This is simply a repetition of the present law?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; it strikes out this language from existing law:

> Twelve each of naval architects, special experts, attorneys, and examiners and not more than two inspectors;

And inserts in lieu thereof—

> Twenty naval architects or marine engineers, 20 special architects, 22 examiners, 12 attorneys, and 2 inspectors for each vessel.

That will be two inspectors for each vessel at each shipyard rather than as in the old law two inspectors at each shipyard.

Mr. MAPES. Are these positions already filled?

Mr. BLAND. Those positions under the old law are already filled.

Mr. MAPES. So that there will be no additional attorneys?

Mr. BLAND. No. None additional to those authorized in existing law.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to compliment the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] in protecting the civil service. I am a firm believer in civil service, and have so demonstrated on every occasion since I have been a Member of this House by voting for civil-service legislation. I do not think the selection of these additional highly skilled men should be restricted by civil service. This requires men of the very finest skill, men trained in this particular work. That is the motive for exempting them in the bill under consideration.

Mr. SEGER. And in addition to that, if the Civil Service were called on to provide these technicians, it would take 7 or 8 months to find them.

Mr. WELCH. Unless the Maritime Commission was successful in borrowing them from another department, as provided in the bill, it would take longer than 7 or 8 months. It requires years of training to bring naval architects, marine engineers, and inspectors to a point of efficiency where they are qualified for this particular service.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, there has been very generous debate upon the bill in the debate on the rule, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 23 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"All orders of the United States Maritime Commission, other than for the payment of money, made under this act, as amended or supplemented, shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, as shall be prescribed in the order, unless the same shall be suspended, or modified, or set aside by the Commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction."

SEC. 2. The second paragraph of section 3 of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended, is amended by inserting before the last sentence of such paragraph a new sentence to read as follows: "At any hearing under this paragraph the burden of proof to show that the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice is just and reasonable shall be upon the carrier or carriers."

SEC. 3. The first sentence of section 201 (e) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the Commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a director for each of not to exceed five divisions, a general counsel, a clerk to each member of the Commission, and not more than 3 assistants, not more than a total of 20 naval architects or marine engineers, 20 special experts, 22 examiners, 12 attorneys, and 2 inspectors for each vessel at each shipyard at which vessels are being constructed by it or under its supervision."

SEC. 4. Section 201 (f) of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Whenever any officer (not exceeding five in number at any time) of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard is detailed to the Commission, he shall receive from the Commission, for the period during which he is so detailed, such compensation as added to his pay and allowances as an officer in such service will make his aggregate compensation equal to the pay and allowances he would receive if he were the incumbent of an office or position in such service (or in the corresponding executive department), which, in the opinion of the Commission, involves the performance of work similar in importance, difficulty, and responsibility to that performed by him while detailed to the Commission."

SEC. 5. Subsection (c) of section 216 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Commission is hereby authorized to train American citizens to become licensed officers of the merchant marine of the United States in a status of cadets and cadet officers on Government-owned and subsidized vessels and, in cooperation with other governmental and private agencies, on other vessels and in shipyards, plants, and industrial and educational organizations, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission and upon such terms as the Commission may arrange, and expenditures incident to such training are hereby authorized.

"(d) The Commission is hereby authorized to prescribe, conduct, and supervise such extension and correspondence courses as it may deem necessary to supplement other training facilities, and to make such courses available, under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as it may prescribe, to the licensed and unlicensed personnel of the merchant marine, and to cadets and cadet officers who shall make application therefor. The Commission is further authorized to print, publish, and purchase suitable textbooks, equipment, and supplies required for such courses, and to employ persons, firms, and corporations on a contract or fee basis (without regard to the provisions of sec. 3709 of the Revised Statutes), for the performance of special services deemed necessary by the Commission in the preparation and editing of such textbooks and other aids to instruction, and in the supervision and administration of such courses.

"(e) The Commission, with the consent of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section, as amended."

SEC. 6. The first sentence of section 502 (b) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The amount of the reduction in selling price which is herein termed 'construction differential subsidy' may equal, but not exceed, the excess of the bid of the shipbuilder constructing the proposed vessel (excluding the cost of any features incorporated in the vessel for national-defense uses, which shall be paid by the Commission in addition to the subsidy), over the fair and reasonable estimate of cost, as determined by the Commission, of the construction of the proposed vessel if it were constructed under similar plans and specifications (excluding national-defense features as above provided) in a foreign shipbuilding center which is deemed by the Commission to furnish a fair and representative example for the determination of the estimated foreign cost of construction of vessels of the type proposed to be constructed."

SEC. 7. Title V of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 510. (a) When used in this section—

"(1) The term 'obsolete vessel' means a vessel or vessels, each of which (A) is of not less than 1,350 gross tons, (B) is not less than 17 years old and, in the judgment of the Commission, is obsolete or inadequate for successful operation in the domestic or foreign trade of the United States, and (C) is owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States and has been owned by such citizen or citizens for at least 3 years immediately prior to the date of acquisition hereunder.

"(2) The term 'new vessel' means a vessel or vessels, each of which (A) is constructed under the provisions of this act, and is acquired within 2 years from the date of completion of such vessel, or is purchased under section 714, as amended, by the person turning in an obsolete vessel under this section, or (B) is hereafter constructed in a domestic shipyard on private account and not under the provisions of this act, and documented under the laws of the United States.

"(b) In order to promote the construction of new, safe, and efficient vessels to carry the domestic and foreign water-borne commerce of the United States, the Commission is authorized, subject to the provisions of this section, to acquire any obsolete vessel in exchange for an allowance of credit. The amount of such allowance shall be determined at the time the owner contracts for the construction or purchase of a new vessel. The allowance shall not be paid to the owner of the obsolete vessel but shall be applied upon the purchase price of a new vessel. In the case of a new vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, such allowance may, under such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe, be applied upon the cash payments required under this act. In case the new vessel is not constructed under the provisions of this act, the allowance shall, upon transfer of the obsolete vessel to the Commission, be paid, for the account of the owner, to the shipbuilder constructing such new vessel.

"(c) The utility value of the new vessel for operation in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States shall not be substantially less than that of the obsolete vessel. The gross tonnage of the obsolete vessel may exceed the gross tonnage of the new vessel in a ratio not in excess of three to one, if the Commission finds that the new vessel, although of lesser tonnage, will provide utility value equivalent to or greater than that of the obsolete vessel.

"(d) The allowance for an obsolete vessel shall be the fair and reasonable value of such vessel as determined by the Commission. In making such determination the Commission shall consider: (1) The scrap value of the obsolete vessel both in American and in foreign markets, (2) the depreciated value based on a 20-year life, and (3) the market value thereof for operation in the world trade or in the foreign or domestic trade of the United States. If the owner of the obsolete vessel uses such vessel during the period of construction of the new vessel, the allowance shall be reduced by an amount representing the fair value of such use.

"(e) No gain shall be recognized to the owner for the purpose of Federal income taxes in the case of a transfer of an obsolete vessel to the Commission under the provisions of this section. The basis for gain or loss upon a sale or exchange and for depreciation under the applicable Federal income-tax laws of a new vessel acquired as contemplated in this section shall be the same as the basis of the obsolete vessel or vessels exchanged for credit upon the acquisition of such new vessel, increased in the amount of the cost of such vessel (other than the cost represented by such obsolete vessel or vessels) and decreased in the amount of loss recognized upon such transfer.

"(f) The Commission shall include in its annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all transactions consummated under the provisions of the preceding subsections during the period covered by such report.

"(g) An obsolete vessel acquired by the Commission under this section which is or becomes 20 years old or more, and vessels presently in the Commission's laid-up fleet which are or become 20 years old or more, shall in no case be used for commercial operation, except that any such obsolete vessel, or any such vessel in the laid-up fleet may be used during any period in which vessels may be requisitioned under section 902 of this act, as amended, and except as otherwise provided in this act for the employment of the Commission's vessels in steamship lines on trade routes exclusively serving the foreign trade of the United States."

SEC. 8. The last sentence in the first paragraph of section 603 (c) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Such payments on account shall in no case exceed 75 percent of the amount estimated to have accrued on account of such subsidy, except that, with respect to that part of the subsidy relating to any particular voyage, an additional 15 percent may be paid to the contractor after such contractor's audit of the voyage account for such voyage has been completed and the Commission's auditors have verified the correctness of the same. Any such payments shall be made only after there has been furnished to the Commission such security as it deems to be reasonable and necessary to insure refund of any overpayment."

SEC. 9. The proviso at the end of section 604 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That no such additional subsidy shall be granted except upon an affirmative vote of four of the members of the Commission."

SEC. 10. The proviso at the end of section 607 (c) (3) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That such reimbursement to the Commission, if so deferred, shall be payable upon termination of the contract from any amounts then in the special reserve fund and the capital reserve fund: Provided further, That if any amounts shall have been transferred to the general funds of the contractor from either of such reserve funds and not repaid thereto, or if prepayments of amounts not due before one year after the date of termination of the contract have been made from the capital reserve fund pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, then the balance of such reimbursement not paid out of said reserve funds shall be payable out of any other assets of the contractor, but the amounts so payable from such assets shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of the amounts so transferred and not repaid, and the amounts of such prepayments;".

SEC. 11. (a) Section 705 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "No vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, as amended, shall be sold by the Commission for operation in the foreign trade for a sum less than the estimated foreign construction cost exclusive of national-defense features (determined as of the date the construction contract therefor is executed) less depreciation based on a 20-year life, nor shall any such vessel be sold by the Commission for operation in the domestic trade for a sum less than the cost of construction in the United States exclusive of national-defense features less depreciation based on a 20-year life."

(b) Section 706 (b) of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "The Commission shall reject any bid for the charter (under sections 701 to 713, both inclusive, of this title, as amended) of any vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, as amended, if the charter hire offered by the bidder is lower than the minimum charter hire for such vessel would be if chartered under the provisions of section 714, as amended, of this title."

SEC. 12. Section 714 of such act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 714. If the Commission shall find that any trade route (determined by the Commission to be an essential trade route as provided in sec. 211 of this act) cannot be successfully developed and maintained and the Commission's replacement program cannot be achieved under private operation of such trade route by a citizen of the United States with vessels registered under the laws thereof, without further Government aid in addition to the financial aids authorized under titles V and VI of this act, the Commission is authorized to have constructed, in private shipyards or in navy yards, the vessel or vessels of the types deemed necessary for such trade route, and to demise such new vessel or vessels on bare-boat charter to the American-flag operator established on such trade route, without advertisement or competition, upon an annual charter hire of not less than 5 percent of the price (herein referred to as the 'foreign cost') at which such vessel or vessels would be sold if constructed under title V plus 3½ percent of the depreciated foreign cost computed annually upon the basis of a 20-year life of the vessel. Such charter may contain an option to the charterer to purchase such vessel or vessels from the Commission within 5 years after delivery thereof under the charter, upon the same terms and conditions as are provided in title V for the purchase of new vessels from the Commission, except that (a) the purchase price shall be the foreign cost less depreciation to the date of purchase based upon a 20-year life; (b) the required cash payment payable at the time of such purchase shall be 25 percent of the purchase price as so determined; (c) the charter may provide that all or any part of the charter hire paid in excess of the minimum charter hire provided for in this section may be credited against the cash payment payable at the time of such purchase; (d) the balance of the purchase price shall be paid within the years remaining of the 20 years after the date of delivery of the vessel under the charter and in approximately equal annual installments, except that the first of said installments, which shall be payable upon the next ensuing anniversary date of such delivery under the charter, shall be a proportionate part of the annual installment, interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances of 3½ percent per annum from the date of purchase.

"Such charter shall provide for operation of the vessel exclusively in foreign trade, or on a round-the-world voyage, or on a round voyage from the west coast of the United States to a European port or ports which includes intercoastal ports of the United States, or a round voyage from the Atlantic coast of the United States to the Orient which includes intercoastal ports of the United States, or on a voyage in foreign trade on which the vessel may stop at an island possession or island Territory of the United States, and if the vessel is operated in the domestic trade on any of the above-enumerated services, the charterer will pay annually to the Commission that proportion of one-twentieth of the difference between the domestic and foreign cost of such vessel as the gross revenue derived from the domestic trade bears to the gross revenue derived from the entire voyages completed during the preceding year."

SEC. 13. Section 806 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(d) Whoever knowingly and willfully violates any order, rule, or regulation of the United States Maritime Commission made or issued in the exercise of the powers, duties, or functions transferred to it or vested in it by this act, as amended, for which no penalty is otherwise expressly provided, shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $500. If such violation is a continuing one, each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense."

SEC. 14. Paragraph (8) of section 1104 (a) of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the word "or" before the designation "(c)", and by inserting before the period at the end of the paragraph a semicolon and the following: "or (d) in the fishing trade or industry."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, lines 18 and 19, strike out "and in shipyards, plants, and industrial and educational organizations."

Page 9, strike out all of section 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. Section 604 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 604. If in the case of any particular foreign-trade route the Commission shall find after consultation with the Secretary of State that the subsidy provided for in this title is in any respect inadequate to offset the effect of governmental aid paid to foreign competitors, it may grant such additional subsidy as it determines to be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That no such additional subsidy shall be granted except upon an affirmative vote of four of the members of the Commission.' "

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on two different subjects and include therein a letter from a farmer in the State of Iowa and another from a merchant in the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TO CREATE NEW NATIONAL FOREST UNITS IN MONTANA

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 26) to empower the President of the United States to create new national forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain just what this bill provides?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I will be very happy to explain briefly the bill. There are large acreages of public lands in Montana. The reason why it is imperative that this bill be passed now is to give the President the authority to transfer supervision of this land to the Forest Department so that we will have adequate fire protection. The fire protection afforded by the Forest Service is very effective. C. C. C. camps are used and these young men do heroic work along that line. In Montana it is now getting dry and hot and the fire season is on. That is one reason why I am asking for immediate consideration of this measure. As I said the main purpose of the bill is to provide fire protection to unprotected public lands from forest fires. The Department of Agriculture has stated the necessity for this bill better than I can state it:

MARCH 31, 1939.

Hon. RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
Chairman, Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DEROUEN: Reference is made to your request of February 22 for a report on S. 26, an act to empower the President of the United States to create new national-forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana.

From the passage of the act of March 3, 1891 (36 Stat. 1103), to that of the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat. 1271), a period of 16 years, the President of the United States had full power to create or enlarge national forests by proclamation or Executive order. By the act of March 4, 1907, that power was rescinded in relation to six of the Western States, including Montana. The bill E. 26 would restore that power in relation to the State of Montana.

At the time the restriction was placed upon the President's power to create or enlarge national forests in Montana, the whole national policy of conservation was in an acutely controversial stage. There also was widely prevalent a belief that the remaining unreserved and unappropriated lands of the United States had infinite and permanent potentialities for constructive and profitable private ownership and management. The ensuing 30-year process of trial and error has provided new and more dependable bases for consideration and decision. The soundness and necessity of a comprehensive national program of forest management and watershed protection is now generally recognized; as is also the indubitable fact that much of the wild land of the West does not produce enough to pay the costs of constructive and permanent private management and hence has little appeal to private interest for other than a quick exploitation of long-accruing resources, to be followed usually by tax deliquency and abandonment.

The entire situation has now so changed as to make unnecessary the checks and safeguards that might have been justified at the time the Presidential authority was withdrawn. The principles governing enlargement of the national forests have been well defined by precedent, practice, and procedure over a further period of 30 years. Before national-forest units or additions are recommended, they are thoroughly analyzed by the Land Use Coordinating Committee of the Department, with particular attention to their relationship to, or effect upon, the plans of other bureaus or departments. The proclamations or Executive orders placing public-domain lands in a national-forest status are drafted by the Department of the Interior and submitted to the President through the Bureau of the Budget, the Attorney General, and the Department of State. Such a procedure would seem to obviate any possibility that final action would be taken without full information or complete consideration of all aspects of the proposal and full opportunity for the several executive departments directly concerned to record their views and recommendations.

The degree to which the proposed legislation would increase the costs of administering the national forests cannot be foretold with any accuracy, since it will depend upon the number, size, and situation of the projects which might be approved by the President. In all probability most of the additions which might be made would be of areas marginal to the present boundaries of national forests and susceptible to effective management without appreciable increase in present personnel or expenditures. No really material increase in costs of administration as a result of the proposed act can now be foreseen.

In the opinion of this Department, enactment of the bill, S. 26, would be in the public interest and, therefore, is recommended.

Upon reference of this matter to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Budget Circular 344, the Acting Director thereof advised the Department of Agriculture under date of February 18, 1939, that there would be no objection on the part of that office to the submission to Congress of this proposed report.

Sincerely,

HARRY L. BROWN,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much acreage is involved?

Mr. O'CONNOR. There are hundreds of thousands of acres, but it is all public land at the present time. This bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand it, it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Committee on Public Lands considered the bill and reported it out unanimously with an amendment, which I proposed myself, limiting the area, and I am going to ask the House to vote down the committee amendment which, as I said, I proposed. I limited the area to three counties, and I find demand for the bill from all over the State.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Has this been administered by the Interior Department heretofore?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It has been administered by both the Interior and Agricultural Departments heretofore.

Mr. DIRKSEN. So only jurisdiction control is being vested in the Forest Service?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has discussed the question of bringing this bill up with the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT]?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have discussed it with the gentleman from California, the ranking minority member, and I have his O. K. I likewise discussed it with the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, the majority leader, and the minority leader of the House, and have their approval of consideration.

Mr. CHURCH. What is the number of the House bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I introduced a companion House bill, but I asked the Public Lands Committee to report Senator WHEELER's bill instead of mine, as his bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. What is the number of that bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not now recall the number of my bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Was it on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CHURCH. This bill is on the Consent Calendar for next Monday.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. I requested that that be done yesterday to insure passage at this session.

Mr. CHURCH. What is the number of the House bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I said, I cannot give that to the gentleman now. I will have it Monday when the bill is reached.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized, in his discretion, to add to existing national forests, or to include within new national forests, by proclamation or Executive order, any unappropriated public lands in the United States situated in the State of Montana, which, in his opinion, are chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of watersheds: Provided, That the inclusion of such lands within a national forest shall be subject to any claim, entry, or appropriation under the public land laws then valid and subsisting and thereafter legally maintained.

SEC. 2. All previous acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed insofar as they apply to the State of Montana.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Montana", insert "in the counties of Fergus, Lincoln, and Missoula."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the committee amendment is rejected.

There was no objection, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 250.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 250

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of S. 281, an act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

I yield myself 5 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

This is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate on the bill S. 281. The matter comes from the Civil Service Committee.

I yield at this time 10 minutes to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Senate sometime back. The House Committee on the Civil Service has stricken out the Senate language and inserted new language amending the civil service retirement law in certain particulars which I will discuss briefly.

Under existing law there are three mandatory retirement ages for different groups of employees who have different occupations. One group retires at the age of 62, another at the age of 65, and another at 70. Under this proposal we eliminate the 62-year group and move them up to the age of 65, leaving only two mandatory retirements, at the ages of 65 and 70.

Under the present law these three groups have the option of retiring at the age of 60, 63, and 68. Under the committee proposal all three groups, or the two that are left after our amendment is adopted, if it is adopted, would have the right of retirement at the age of 60, after 30 years' service.

The present law provides that a person who is retired for disability and thereafter recovers, remains on the retirement rolls only 90 days. We are extending that time to 1 year in order to give the employee who recovers a further opportunity to find reinstatement in the Government service.

Under the present law all claims for disability annuity must be executed prior to the employee's separation from the service, or within 6 months thereafter. We are waiving this 6 months' limitation in the present proposal in the case of employees who at the date of separation or within 6 months thereafter have been adjudged mentally incompetent. We found a few cases where we thought hardship had been worked, and we are attempting to relieve that.

Under the existing law after 45 years of age with 15 years' service an employee may elect to receive an annuity at age 55 of the value that he would receive at age 62. Under the committee proposal we are changing the required service to 5 years and provide that any person may receive an annuity at age 55, if involuntarily separated from the service, which shall be the equivalent of an annuity which he otherwise would receive at age 62.

In addition, we are including in this bill postmasters. They were not included in the original act. In this bill also we are giving the option to Members of Congress and United States Senators to participate in the act if they so desire.

We are raising the contribution required from 3½ to 5 percent of the basic salary. We are also providing that the Government's part of the annuity shall be no less than that purchased by the money contributed to the fund by those who come under the law.

Another change we are making in the act is to provide that any person affected by the act may at the time of retirement elect to receive a lesser annuity and leave the remainder of his annuity to a named beneficiary. No doubt most of you have received letters from people in the Government service advocating the so-called widow's annuity. This bill makes provision by which employees may take care of their widows or other named beneficiaries, but it does not increase the total annuity; it simply means a division of the annuity at the time of retirement.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I am, of course, mindful of the gentleman's interest in and his very fine service to the Federal workers generally. It has been my policy as a rule to follow the gentleman in matters of legislation almost entirely on faith. I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill as amended by the Senate, but my understanding is that the bill has the almost universal approval of the Federal employees generally. Is that right?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct. While there may be some details in it that they would prefer to have changed, in the main they approve it. There are three groups of employees who come under this act who are organized. One group is composed of several organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and belong to what is known as the Joint Conference on Retirement. Mr. Robert H. Alcorn is chairman of that group, and he has issued a letter to the Members of Congress endorsing this bill and asking for its passage. Another group, generally speaking, is affiliated with what is known as the National Legislative Council, headed by Mr. Luther Steward. They have likewise asked for the passage of the bill. There is a third group, headed by Mr. Jacob Baker, which has also endorsed the bill. So I can say that so far as I know every group of organized employees in the Government service favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I wish to second heartily the remarks of my colleague from Michigan to the effect that we recognize the gentleman's [Mr. RAMSPECK's] leadership in work affecting the welfare of the Federal employees. As I understand it, the pending bill includes postmasters.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am not quite clear about the provision under which Members of Congress and United States Senators may participate in the retirement plan. Will the gentleman elaborate on that?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Some 2 or 3 years ago we amended the Civil Service Retirement Act to permit our secretaries, clerks of committees, and legislative employees generally, at their option, to participate in this law. We are now presenting the same right to Members of Congress and Senators, giving them 6 months after the effective date of the act to notfiy either the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate. If they desire to participate in it, they must do so upon the same terms and with benefits limited to the same amount which the 540,000 people who now come under this act receive. They would pay in after January 1 of next year 5 percent of their salaries. If they wish to get credit for their back service, their prior service, they would pay for it at the rate applicable at the time of the service: At the present time 3½ percent, and from 1920 to 1926, 2½ percent.

This will not furnish any large annuity to anybody. It is a contributary plan based upon the same principle which has been successfully applied to the Federal employees since 1920, and it embodies the same principle that we find in title II of the Social Security Act where the employee, or the beneficiary, must contribute half of the cost. It will not furnish any great annuity, but it would furnish to a man who served here for 30 years a very nice annuity in the future. For the back service it will not be quite as large, because the deductions required to be paid for back service are less, and that reduces the amount to the person who receives it.

The annuity received is based on an actuarial computation made at the time he retires based on the life expectancy of the man. It is not, therefore, possible for me to tell exactly what amount any particular individual would receive, but I can assure you that it is slightly more beneficial than one would get from a private insurance company, and still it is fair to the taxpayer.

Mr. RANDOLPH rose.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to add my word of congratulation to the gentleman who is the distinguished chairman of the House Civil Service Committee. It has been my pleasure to serve under and with him for 7 years on what I consider to be one of the important committees of this House. I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that the civil-service retirement program is designed primarily to effectuate a proper and humane method of retiring those individuals from employment in the Federal Government when they become disabled or who through advanced age are not able to properly perform their duties in the Government. The gentleman, I am sure, feels as I do that this legislation improves the civil service retirement system.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman. I think these amendments will be beneficial both to the Government and to the employees.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is retirement at the ages mentioned for the different employees compulsory?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The compulsory age, if this amendment is adopted, will be 65 for the postal groups and those engaged in what might be called hazardous occupations, like the navy-yard workers. It is 70 for all other groups.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And the age of 70 would apply to postmasters?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; the age of 70 would apply to postmasters.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will that age apply to Senators and Members of Congress?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. There is no mandatory age applied to legislative employees, nor will there be to Members of Congress or Senators. They can serve until they are 100 years of age if they could be reelected for that long.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I have two questions to ask. First, what is the reason for and the result of the increase in the contribution from 3½ to 5 percent? Secondly, how will the postmaster retirement feature operate with reference to back years served by a postmaster?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The back years served by a postmaster can be counted for the purpose of receiving an annuity provided he pays up for the back time, just like we will have to do if we come under it.

The reason for the increase is twofold. In the first place, it will produce a larger annuity and a great many of the employees want that because they want to build up a larger annuity so that they can provide for their widows or some named beneficiary. In the second place, it will reduce the Government part of the cost. When this law was drafted in 1930 it was designed largely for the benefit of the lower pay groups and it is quite generous insofar as they are concerned. Because of a minimum annuity provision in the law, the Government must pay and does pay a deficiency cost as to that group of employees.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question with regard to permanent and total disability. Is there any provision in this retirement act which grants benefits at an earlier date in case of total or permanent disability?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. Any employee or any person who comes under the act and is totally disabled at any time after 5 years of service can get an annuity. The amount of it, of course, will be based upon length of service and the age of the employee at the time the disability occurs.

Mr. DINGELL. The principle of permanent and total disability is included in the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. There have been a number of employees retired for total disability.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the percentage of increase in the Federal contribution toward the retirement and annuity payments under the provisions of this bill, if there be an increase? Is there an increase in the Federal contribution and if so, how much?

Mr. RAMSPECK. We are providing that the Government's part of the annuity shall not be less than that purchased by the savings of beneficiaries under the act.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I recall that statement, but is that an increase over the present contribution?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is an increase in a small percentage of cases. It will affect only those employees who are getting larger salaries. Under the present law they are discriminated against in favor of those who earn $2,000 a year and less.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the percentage of increase for the lower salaries?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It cannot be named in percentages because it varies with different salaries; but in no event will the Government pay to those benefited by that provision more than 50 percent of the cost of the annuity.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman cannot give us an estimate of the increased Federal cost?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does the gentleman mean the amount in dollars?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It would be very little. I have not the exact figures, but it would be a small amount.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman explain to the House what the amount of the annuity would be to a person who became permanently disabled, or would that be determined upon the amount that he had contributed to the fund?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It would be governed by the amount he had contributed to the fund, and his age would be taken into consideration also. Of course, I cannot figure that out unless I have a specific case, and even then I could not do it instantaneously. It is an actuarial computation.

Mr. DONDERO. His contribution to the fund would be one of the determining factors?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. And the years of service enter into that also?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; years of service would determine the amount he paid in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COLLINS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, and 71.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000,000"; and on page 2, line 8 of the bill after the word "Columbia," insert the following: "and this Act shall be effective as of July 1, 1939, and any appropriations and authority contained herein shall have the same force and effect between June 30, 1939, and the date of the enactment of this Act as though the same had become law on July 1, 1939; and the acts of any officer or employee performed during such period in anticipation of the appropriations or authority contained herein shall not be invalidated, declared ineffective, or questioned solely because of the lack of such appropriations or authority during such period,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,623,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$900,000, and not to exceed 10 per centum of this appropriation and of Federal grants reimbursed under this appropriation shall be expended for personal services, including the employment of one general superintendent of public assistance services at $5,600 per annum, one assistant superintendent of such services at $4,600 per annum, and one stenographer-typist (secretary) at $2,000 per annum, to be appointed without reference to civil-service requirements,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Appropriates $6,000,000 as a Federal contribution to the operation of the government of the District of Columbia, instead of $5,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $7,750,000, as proposed by the Senate, and provides that the provisions of the act and the action of administrative officers in anticipation of enactment shall be effective as if such act had been approved on July 1, 1939.

On amendment No. 59: Provides $229,000 for the construction of an eight-room addition to the Ketcham School, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 60: Strikes out the provision of the House appropriating $20,000 for plans and specifications for a new building to house the Abbott Vocational School, and eliminates the provision of the Senate with reference to this school.

On amendments Nos. 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, and 71, relating to school buildings and grounds: Strikes out the Senate amendments providing for plans and specifications for new buildings to replace old elementary schools and for the purchase of land for such new school buildings, and corrects the totals for such items.

On amendment No. 101: Appropriates $900,000 for relief in the District of Columbia, as proposed by the House instead of $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, and provides that 10 percent of such sum shall be available for personal services, instead of 8½ percent, as proposed by the House, and the elimination of any limitation on personal services, as proposed by the Senate.

ROSS A. COLLINS,
GEORGE MAHON,
KARL STEFAN,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 5610.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi explain what has happened in connection with this conference report?

Mr. COLLINS. The conferees have agreed on a lump-sum contribution by the Federal Government toward the operation of the government of the District of Columbia of $6,000,000 applicable only to the next fiscal year. No agreement with reference to any future years has been reached, because this bill deals entirely with the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. DINGELL. No commitments of any kind have been made?

Mr. COLLINS. No commitments whatever.

As to the appropriation for relief, the House figure of $900,000 is retained. That is the same amount provided for the last fiscal year with regard to the consolidation of elementary schools, the Senate has yielded on all amendments relating to this proposal.

These three subjects constitute practically all the matters which remain in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is my understanding correct that all the House conferees are in agreement on this matter that the chairman presents to us from the appropriations subcommittee?

Mr. COLLINS. I am certain they are all in agreement. All the Members have signed except the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], who, I understand, is out of the city.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman has every reason to believe, then, that this is a unanimous report?

Mr. COLLINS. I would say it was unanimous, although I would say that the consent to the $6,000,000 contribution is begrudgingly given.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I say, because of the gentleman's statement in connection with the lump-sum contribution of $6,000,000, that I imagine this action is predicated on the feeling on the part of the House conferees on the District appropriation bill that there is a critical condition connected with the financial status of the District of Columbia?

Mr. COLLINS. The agreement was reached purely and simply because a critical condition exists in the District of Columbia and the committee felt the necessity of passing an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I wish to personally congratulate the gentleman because I do feel that this is a critical time, and I am very certain the action of the committee comes at a most opportune time.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the District of Columbia Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee has explained, this agreement was reached between your committee and the Senate committee just a little while ago because a critical condition does exist in the District of Columbia. It is so critical that newspaper headlines scream that money must be borrowed from local banks to pay the District bills.

With regard to our yielding on the $6,000,000 figure as compared with the House figure of $5,000,000, I should like to state that we found ourselves in an impasse and yielded begrudgingly to the Senate. I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that your committee started out facing a figure of something like $8,000,000 or more as the lump-sum contribution of the Federal Government to the District. We have been opposed to that amount. Had this critical situation not arisen, I am sure we would not have yielded on the $6,000,000 figure. But it is merely your committee's report and it is now up to you—every one of you to vote on this report. You can vote against the report and we will go back and fight some more with the Senate. For one, I am willing to do that, as I feel the House figure is sufficient.

I believe your committee should be credited with a considerable amount of saving. I believe the saving will run over $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, as you will discover if you give some of your valuable time to a reading of the bill as it comes before you today on the conference report.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is merely a report on the District appropriation bill; that in this bill there is absolutely no attempt to direct a mandate to the legislative committee with regard to taxation. There is nothing in this report that tells the District legislative committee what kind of a tax bill they should write. I sincerely hope the District legislative committee will take that example to heart and not in a tax bill attempt to dictate to the Appropriations Committee what it shall appropriate.

The objection that was raised to the report of the conferees on the District tax bill the other day, from the standpoint of some of us, was based on the fact that the report directly and specifically directed an appropriation for the next fiscal year and for each year thereafter a certain amount. I submit to the Members that the appropriation should be based upon the showing of the need for appropriations as this showing is made before the Appropriations Committee.

As has been stated, the conference report comes in here as a unanimous report from the conferees because of the condition existing. We have passed the opening of the new fiscal year and the semimonthly pay day comes tomorrow. The other body originally asked for $7,750,000; the House had appropriated $5,000,000. The other body then asked for $6,500,000. So we feel that in finally setting the figure at $6,000,000 we had come more nearly to the House figure, which was based on what, in the evidence before the Appropriations Committee, seemed to be what was needed.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to emphasize the fact that when we brought in a conference report on the District revenue bill we did seek to emphasize the emergent and critical condition that faced the District of Columbia. It is rather interesting, of course, to hear the members of the Appropriations Committee indicate now that this increase to $6,000,000 was begrudgingly done. There rings in my mind a little couplet from the Vision of Sir Launfal—

> Not what we give, but what we share,
> For the gift without the giver is bare.

I think the givers might have gone along with the gift, since they gave the $6,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is there any provision in this conference report on the appropriations bill for the collection of taxes for the support of the revenues of the District for the next fiscal year, 1940?

Mr. COLLINS. No; this bill will enable the District Commissioners to levy taxes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Just as they have done during the year 1939, even if we do not pass the tax bill.

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois has said in reference to the words "begrudgingly given," I would like to call the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that your committee has been working many weeks on this appropriation bill, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe anybody in Washington or anyone in this House really knows right now whether $2,500,000 or $5,000,000 or $8,000,000 is the correct lump sum which should be given to the District of Columbia by the Federal Treasury. Who really knows what we should give, if anything? We believed after the justifications given to us that $5,000,000 was enough. So far as I am concerned, I believe, from the evidence presented to our committee, that $5,000,000 is more than enough. My chairman believes that. Practically every member of our committee believes that, and yet we are confronted with a critical and a serious condition which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have to face. We find the Senate, which demands $8,000,000, will not yield further. We were faced with 135 or more amendments by the body at the other end of the Capitol, most of them making increases, most of which we succeeded in eliminating.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And yet the fact remains you spent or appropriated $1,000,000 more of the taxpayers' money than the House intended to spend.

Mr. STEFAN. There is no question about that. The gentleman from Kansas knows of my attitude against this spending. I tell him now that every penny of this $6,000,000 represents taxpayers' money from the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Mississippi, and all the other States of the Union. Something should be done in the District of Columbia to give correct information to this body or the members of the Appropriations Committee so that we may be fair to the people of the District of Columbia and yet be fair to the taxpayers of the various States which we represent. Once the lump sum given was far in excess of the amount here. Once it was far less. All of the compromises have been through guesswork. The people of the District believe because we have Government property here and the city renders much service for the Federal Government the lump sum should be equal to the service rendered. Congress wants to be fair. Because no one really knows how much the total should be, there is criticism for both sides. So here is a compromise by Members from both House and Senate. There are only three of us. There are 435 Members of this House. Everyone of you is a member of the council for this town. If you think this amount is too much, all you have to do is vote against this report and cut the amount down. I will go along with you. But in the future let us be furnished with the fair amount to which this city is entitled. I know the people in my State want me to be square with the people of Washington and also protect our Treasury.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. Is it not true that the amount provided in the bill was raised by the Senate to more than $7,000,000?

Mr. COLLINS. It was raised $7,750,000 by the Senate, and this conference agreement fixes the amount to be contributed by the Federal Government at $6,000,000.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the observation that I am not going to object to this bill today, but I am serving notice now that any time the Senate raises the District of Columbia appropriation bill from what the House provides from now on, I shall object if the matter is brought up under a similar situation.

Mr. Speaker, inquiries from my colleagues concerning the enormous salaries paid in the motion-picture industry leads me to place in the RECORD this article from the New York Sun. There is still a worse side of the picture, and that is the thousands of legitimate workers in the film industry who are maltreated and paid starvation wages. The situation would more easily be recognized to have opposite each name of these high-paid executives, the list and annual income of those thousands of extras, stand-ins, property men, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, one phase of the comprehensive program which is being developed for consideration of the Congress is the divorcement of production from exhibition in the motion-picture industry. Some of my colleagues have made particular inquiry as to the constitutionality of such a proposal. I submit a brief memorandum with reference to that question:

[From the New York Sun of April 7, 1939]

LIST OF HIGH-PAID FILM FOLK

MEMORANDUM ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL BASIS OF THE BILL TO PROHIBIT THE OPERATION OF MOTION-PICTURE THEATERS WHICH ARE OWNED OR CONTROLLED BY PRODUCERS OR DISTRIBUTORS OR IN WHICH PRODUCERS OR DISTRIBUTORS OF MOTION PICTURES HAVE AN INTEREST

The bill is designed to bring about the separation of the business of producing and distributing motion pictures from the business of exhibiting them in theaters. Its principal substantive provision prohibits the operation of motion-picture theaters which are owned or controlled by producers or distributors or in which producers or distributors have an interest. In aid of enforcement it is required that every exhibitor, as a condition of lawful operation, shall file annually with a designated State officer an affidavit to the effect that the requirements of the law are being complied with. Criminal penalties are imposed for violations, and provision is made for civil proceedings, after the manner of antitrust actions, to prevent and restrain violations. The effective date is deferred until 1 year after enactment.

The aim of the bill is to give each community a better opportunity to have the kind of pictures it wishes to see. This end is to be accomplished in part by freeing the local exhibitor from the compulsion to buy whatever the producers offer, exerted through the existence or threat of producer-owned theaters. The bill is intended by this means to give the local exhibitor freedom to respond to the pressure of community standards of taste in his choice of pictures. There is now pending before Congress a bill designed to contribute to the accomplishment of the same end by forbidding the motion-picture trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling. These two bills complement each other, and have in common the goal of a positive effect, to stimulate the production of better pictures, which goes beyond, and may render less necessary the negative effects of censorship laws.

The important constitutional question involved is whether the bill, if enacted into law, would violate the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment, and this question in turn depends largely upon the facts, for "underlying questions of fact may condition the constitutionality of legislation of this character." (Brandeis, J., in O'Gorman & Young v. Hartford Fire Ins., Co., 282 U. S. 251, 257 (1931).) If the legislature finds from the testimony at the legislative hearings or otherwise that by means of producer-distributor owned or controlled theaters practices are being engaged in contrary to the local public interest and concludes that the breaking up of those practices would give further protection to the morals and welfare of the people, especially of children, then the main foundation will have been laid for the exertion of the legislatures' power. Upon enactment of the bill a presumption of validity will come into play which "must prevail in the absence of some fact foundation of record for overthrowing the statute." (O'Gorman case, supra.)

1. There is nothing novel about the power exerted in the bill, but on the contrary it is merely the application of a long-known and well-recognized power to new conditions.

The bill comes within what is commonly known as the police power of the State. "That power extends to all the great public needs. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare" (Holmes, J., in Nobla State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104 (1911)). In one respect the bill is an antitrust law to break the power of the producers not over pocketbooks but over public morals. Antitrust laws are too well known to need further comment; all but seven States have them.[1]

In another respect the bill is an equally well known form of regulation, the enforced separation of two kinds of business when in the combination the public interest is jeopardized by conflicting interests. When it appeared[2] a few years ago that many bankers had engaged in the investment business and in stock trading and that as a result banks had acquired interests in particular securities opposed to the interest of the depositors in having the bank's funds invested in securities of general safety, Congress[3] and at least two States[4] passed statutes requiring separation of the businesses of banking and investment. Conditions in the liquor business have prompted many States to forbid manufacturers and wholesalers of liquor to have any interest in a retail liquor establishment or its fixtures.[5] A widespread investigation in 1930–31 by public-service commissions and legislative committees revealed that gas and electric companies were using their advantageous position in the communities to engage in unfair competitive practices in the retail merchandising of appliances,[6] and resulted in the enactment by Kansas [7] and Oklahoma [8] of statutes forbidding such companies to engage in merchandising. The Supreme Court of Illinois, has held [9] that grain warehousemen are forbidden by the public nature of their calling to engage in grain trading. And when Congress found that the public was being inconvenienced by discriminatory practices of railroads, which favored with special rates goods from mines or factories in which they were interested, it enacted the "commodities clause" [10] of the Hepburn Act, which forced separation of manufacture and mining from transportation of goods.[11]

The police power certainly includes regulations of the kind here proposed, though the validity of its exercise may depend at any given times upon the conditions prevailing in the industry and the public interest manifested in respect of those conditions. In the exercise of that power the States have a wide discretion.

It is primarily, but not solely, a matter of legislative judgment whether such evils exist as should be corrected and whether the means selected for their correction have a real and substantial relation to the ends sought to be attained.[12]

The validity of the bill is not imperiled by any doctrine concerning business "affected with a public interest."

The doctrine of "affectation with a public interest" as laid down in the early United States Supreme Court cases involves two elements: (1) The division of all enterprises into two classes, those strictly private in character and those "affected with a public interest"; and (2) the principle that certain kinds or regulations could constitutionally be applied only to the matter. But the doctrine has seldom been discussed by the Court except in cases involving price fixing,[13] so that it is uncertain what kinds of regulations are limited to the second class of enterprises. This bill does not, of course, involve price fixing. Moreover, the Supreme Court has in recent cases minimized the significance of the doctrine, if not repudiated it altogether. In Nebbis v. New York,[14] in which, by the way, a price-fixing statute was sustained, the Court said:

"It is clear that there is no closed class or category of business affected with a public interest, and the function of the courts in the application of the fifth and fourteenth amendments is to determine in each case whether circumstances vindicate the challenged regulation as a reasonable exertion of governmental authority or condemn it as arbitrary or discriminatory (citation omitted). The phrase 'affected with a public interest' can, in the nature of things, mean no more than that an industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good. * * * There can be no doubt that upon proper occasion and by appropriate measures the State may regulate a business in any of its aspects * * *.

"So far as requirements of due process is concerned * * * a State is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare and to enforce that policy by legislation adapted to its purpose."

If a State may adopt any economic policy tending to promote the "public welfare," it may certainly adopt an economic policy designed specifically to promote public morals, especially where the morals of children are involved.

3. The motion-picture industry, particularly the operation of motion-picture theaters, is affected with a public interest.

In one of the early Supreme Court cases [15] discussing the doctrine the Court defined businesses "affected with a public interest" as consisting in part of "businesses which, though not public at their inception, may be fairly said to have risen to be such and have become subject in consequence to some Government regulation. They have come to hold such a peculiar relation to the public that this is superimposed upon them. In the language of the cases, the owner by devoting his business to the public use, in effect, grants the public an interest in that use and subjects himself to public regulation to the extent of that interest, although the property continues to belong to its private owner and to be entitled to protection accordingly."

That the motion-picture industry has risen to become the subject of a vast public interest is beyond dispute. Equally certain is it that there is widespread concern about the industry and its influence upon the public. This concern has been manifested in many ways. It is shown by the fact that a group of sociologists, psychologists, and educators recently made a study [16] of the industry in which they found, first, that 77,000,000 persons attended the movies every week in the United States, of whom one-third are minors and 11,000,000 are under 14 years of age; and, second, that the movies constitute for children a separate powerful system of education, affecting their health, attitudes, emotions, conduct, and social philosophy. The Honorable Samuel B. Pettengill, who introduced the block-booking and blind-selling bill in the House of Representatives, listed 25 organizations, including parent-teachers and church organizations, and individuals who are supporting that bill.[17] Writers in newspapers [18] have urged regulation of the movie industry. In 1930–31 the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America conducted an investigation and published its findings under the title "The Public Relations of the Motion Picture Industry," in which the investigators say (p. 50): "Theater operation affects the public's interest from several angles. Theater patrons, and also those in the community who do not attend the theater, are interested in the selection of pictures, the make-up of programs. * * * And again (p. 149): "The opinion is widespread that the motion-picture industry should be regulated in the public interest."

The United States Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce reported favorably [19] the Senate block-booking and blind-selling bill. The courts have also recognized the public interest involved; the United States Supreme Court, in a case [20] sustaining an Ohio movie censorship law said: "* * * and not only the State of Ohio, but other States, have considered it to be in the interest of public morals and welfare to supervise moving-picture exhibitions. We would have to shut our eyes to the facts of the world to regard the precaution unreasonable or the legislation to effect it a mere wanton interference with personal liberty."

In view of the many quarters in which concern about motion pictures, particularly the exhibition end of the industry, has been manifested, and in view of the proven influence of pictures upon the manners, dress, and morals of the people,[21] it would be difficult to discover an enterprise more aptly fitted to the category described by the Court in Wolff Packing Co. v. Industrial Court, supra (footnote 12).

4. Without regard to legal labels, the States have ample power to control the business of the public exhibition of motion pictures to the extent necessary to protect the general welfare.

This decision carries no weight in regard to the present bill, since the court's findings of fact concerning the purpose of the Kansas statute and its relation to the public welfare required it to reach the result it arrived at.

In Tyson v. Manton, 273 U. S. 418 (1927), a statute of New York fixing fees to be charged by theater-ticket brokers was held invalid. That statute was directed at the practice of ticket "scalping" in connection with legitimate stage productions in New York City, and has no factual and therefore no legal (in the due-process connection) relevance to the motion-picture problem.

In New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U. S. 262 (1932), the doctrine was sued to invalidate a statute requiring a certificate of convenience and necessity from a State officer as a condition precedent to engaging in the manufacture or distribution of ice. This case has likewise no relevance here, since the statute there held invalid would have restricted competition and erected a monopoly whereas one effect of the bill will be to free motion-picture exhibition from certain monopolistic restrictions now burdening it.

Cabot, honorary vice president, Motion Picture Research Council, at the hearings before the House subcommittee in charge of the block-booking and blind-selling bill, March 9, 1936.

The power of the States is abundantly illustrated by statutes already on the books. There are laws forbidding certain kinds of pictures,[22] laws setting up licensing or censorship systems,[23] laws regulating the admission of children to theaters. Wisconsin and Ohio [24] forbid the lessor or vendor of a film to dictate the days of the week on which the film shall be shown, and New Mexico,[25] regulates drastically the contracts for and process of distribution of films among exhibitors.

Little, if any, apprehension need be felt in regard to other constitutional objections which may be urged against the bill. Thus it raises no question under the commerce clause, since, designed only to regulate exhibitions within the State, its effect upon interstate commerce will be only indirect (Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission, supra (footnote 19)). The contracts clause presents no problem, because, first, to the extent that the distributor-exhibition contracts in the motion-picture business are for terms of 1 year or less, the delay of 1 year in effective date provided in the bill would prevent it affecting those contracts; and, second, all private contracts are subject to the exercise of the State's police power (Home Building and Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U. S. 398 (1933)). Nor is the bill objectionable under the equal-protection clause. "The equal protection of the laws does not mean that all occupations that are called by the same name must be treated in the same way. The power of the State 'may be determined by degrees of evil or exercised in cases where detriment is specially experienced' (citation omitted)." (Holmes, J., in Dominion Hotel v. Arizona, 249 U. S. 265 (1919).)

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to have been the belief of the members of the House committee that $5,000,000 was enough, but you are going to surrender to the Senate just because the Senate is willing to stand pat. Who is going to be responsible to the taxpayers for this—the House of Representatives or the Senate?

Mr. COLLINS. I am willing for it to rest on both of them.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Mississippi has just made the statement that he is not going to permit the Senate in the future to raise this bill. I want to say to the gentleman that the Senate has raised every appropriation bill that the House has sent over there. The Senate is responsible for increasing the amount of these bills more than the House of Representatives. While the House of Representatives has tried to cut down the amount of these bills, they are still way above what they should be, and the Senate is more responsible for this than anybody else, because every appropriation we have sent over there the Senate has been responsible for increasing it.

Mr. DINGELL. And where are you going to get the money?

Mr. RICH. Yes; where are you going to get the money?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest that is manifested in regard to this very serious situation by the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and members of the District Committee, which have been trying to settle this question, it is very interesting to me to observe that the opposition to this bill, particularly, is coming from several States represented on the floor of the House by certain Members because they feel that their States are going to contribute such a tremendous sum to the cost of the administration of the District government.

Let me just insert these facts in the RECORD.

The figures represent the revenues collected in each State by the Federal Government and also the direct grants—not loans—by the Federal Government to the various States mentioned.

In the State of Colorado the Federal Government collects $29,000,000, and the Federal Government gives them back $46,000,000.

In the State of Mississippi the Federal Government collects $5,100,000 and returns $41,000,000.

In the State of Nebraska the Federal Government collects $13,000,000 and gives back $44,000,000.

As for Oklahoma, the Federal Government collects $56,000,000 and gives back $60,000,000.

For South Dakota the Government collects $1,400,000 and returns $43,000,000.

In the District of Columbia the Federal Government collects $29,000,000 and returns $21,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering what is the basis for this opposition to the people of the Capital City of the Nation, which city is rendering such signal service to the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOSER) there were—ayes 135, noes 13.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the vote on the grounds that there is no quorum present, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MOSER (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the point of order.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive a message from the Senate on H. R. 5610, and that the Speaker be authorized to sign the enrolled bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement upon the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Michigan to use some time now.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] has said, this is an open rule. There is no particular reason why it should not be adopted so that the retirement bill reported by the Committee on the Civil Service may be considered by the House.

As to the bill itself, the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], has very clearly and fairly explained the provisions of it. There are many provisions in the bill which I would like to support. I am in favor of the provisions that improve and perfect the present Retirement Act. It is difficult for one to think straight when his own personal interests are concerned, and the House is confronted with that situation this afternoon. My understanding is that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], a member of the committee, intends to move to strike out the provision in the bill which provides for retirement pay for Members of Congress. Personally I shall support that motion to strike that provision from the bill. If that motion prevails I shall vote for the remainder of the legislation. It seems to me a poor time for Congress to provide retirement pay for its own Members. I am inclined to agree with the statement I heard one Member make, that if Members of Congress cannot take care of themselves, who can? In any event, it seems to me a poor time to be providing for that kind of legislation, and for myself I expect to vote to strike that provision out of the bill. If that motion prevails I shall vote for the rest of the bill. If it does not I shall vote against it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Merely to say that I endorse the statement of the gentleman and shall follow his example.

Mr. MAPES. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if I would have asked time had I known what the gentleman from Michigan was going to say because his views are identical with mine. I have the very highest regard for the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service. He has brought some excellent legislation to this House. He is most sincere in his belief in the merits of the civil-service system. I have watched the civil-service system for a long time, and the more we see of it in action the more convinced are we that it is good for governmental purposes. We have had too many new establishments set up here wherein the civil-service provisions were omitted from the law. There is no need of touching on that matter today, but I am in hearty accord with the provisions of this bill that offers retirement opportunities to people who regard their occupation under the Government as their life's work.

For instance, letter carriers and all the different persons designated under the employment provisions on page 7, the first section—postal clerks, city, rural, and village letter carriers, post-office clerks, railway postal clerks, sea-post clerks, and all that list—those are men who are definitely engaged in a life work. Civil-service retirement is their protection. We are for it and strongly in favor of it. I think that we, as Members of Congress, are in a very different situation. There is not a man or woman within the sound of my voice now who regards his membership in the House of Representatives as a life occupation. It cannot be so regarded. It is incidental. Political contingencies that arise in our States are variable from time to time. Our stay here is naturally temporary, depending on local conditions. Therefore, there are other provisions for our personal care, both of our own affairs and that of our families.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I prefer not to. My time is quite limited.

Further than that, I consider that we are thoroughly recompensed for the service that we render. Take, for instance, the situation as we face it today, here now we are hurrying, and the country wanting Congress to adjourn just as soon as possible. Nevertheless, if we should leave here next week or within a brief period of time, our salaries continue just the same, whether we are in session or not. It is a very different type of employment. In addition, there is the honor that every Member of this House feels in his membership in this body.

It is not in the classified service but we hold our positions by election of the people. Therefore it seems to me that the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] to favor this measure provided the opportunity of pension status being granted to Members of Congress is stricken out, is the proper attitude, and I shall heartily support the bill if that amendment is carried. The amendment which I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] expects to offer to strike this provision allowing pensions to Members, I shall be glad to vote for.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know of any Member of this body who seriously contends for the adoption of that provision, making provision for Members of Congress? Does he know anybody here who wants the bill with that provision in it?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not found anyone, but nevertheless it is in the bill and it is here under consideration. It is so reported by the Civil Service Committee.

Mr. COX. Was the measure put in there as a bait for Congress in order to get them to support the bill as drafted?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I do not know anything about the conditions under which the bill was drawn. I know it is in the bill and we want to vote it out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to have inserted in the RECORD a comparison of the present retirement bill and the bill that is under consideration at the present time, and certain charts and tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope this bill will be passed, or certain provisions of it. I believe it will be somewhat of a help to a great many civil-service employees. It has the endorsement of many civil-service groups. I am sorry the provision is in it which provides a pension for the Members of Congress, because I feel that that should be in a separate measure and voted up or down on its merits. I am not going to suggest to the Members of Congress how they shall vote upon that, because that lies within the wishes of each individual Member. I am not going to attempt to dictate to them what they shall do. I personally feel strongly against that provision, and I am very sorry it is in the bill and I shall vote to remove it; but I earnestly hope the other provisions in the bill will be passed. If the bill contains the annuities for Members of Congress, I shall be obliged to vote against the bill. We have a great responsibility to the taxpayers of the country; and I mean by that everyone in the United States, as everyone in the United States pays taxes either directly or indirectly. We have a very serious economic condition in the country today. Our responsibility is greater than ever before in all our history.

	Existing law	Proposed changes in S. 281
RETIREMENT AGE GROUP	Three age groups—62, 65, and 70. Retirement compulsory upon attaining age prescribed for group in which employed after completing 15 years of service.	Two age groups—65 and 70, eliminating 62-year group, the employees of which will hereafter be assigned to the 65-year group. Service requirement for compulsory retirement continued at 15 years.
RETIREMENT OPTIONS	Employees who have served at least 30 years may retire at own option 2 years earlier than normal retirement age—that is, at age 60, 63, and 68.	(a) Uniform optional retirement age for all employees regardless of compulsory retirement age groups in which employed. Option to be exercised either by the Government or employee. Employee must have reached age of 60 years and rendered 30 years' service or attained age of 62 years and rendered at least 15 years of service. Government's option limited to those cases in which employee is disqualified for efficient service. Employing office must give notice to employee before requesting his retirement by the Civil Service Commission, which Commission will conduct necessary examination to determine whether request is justified.

Existing law	Proposed changes in S. 281
	Employee granted right of appeal from original decision and may appear or be represented by person of his choice in any hearing on his case. (b) Voluntary retirement on part of employee after reaching age 55 and serving 30 years or more on a reduced annuity having a value equal to present worth of annuity at 60 years of age.
DISABILITY RETIREMENT
In case of recovery from disability, annuitant carried on rolls for 90 days from date of examination showing recovery unless reemployed prior to expiration of such period.	Ninety-day period extended to 1 year.
All claims for disability annuity must be executed prior to employee's separation from service or within 6 months thereafter.	Permits waiver of 6 months' limitation in cases of employees who at date of separation or within 6 months thereafter are adjudged mentally incompetent, the claim in such cases to be executed within 1 year from restoration to competency or appointment of fiduciary, whichever is earlier.
INVOLUNTARY SEPARATION, NOT BY REMOVAL FOR CAUSE ON CHARGES OF MISCONDUCT OR DELINQUENCY
After 45 years of age with 15 years of service, employee may elect annuity upon attaining retirement age or decreased annuity of equivalent value beginning at 55 years of age. If 55 when separated, deferred annuity at retirement age or immediate decreased annuity. Or employee may elect refund of retirement deductions with interest at 4 percent to date of separation.	At any age with aggregate of 5 years of service, employee may elect annuity at 62 or decreased annuity of equivalent value at 55. Interest at 3 percent allowed on individual account from date of separation to date annuity begins.
VOLUNTARY SEPARATION OR DISCHARGE FOR CAUSE
Refund of sum to credit of employee's individual account with interest at 4 percent to date of separation.	With aggregate of 5 years of service, annuity allowable at age 62, interest being allowed at 3 percent from date of separation to date annuity begins. (This protects the employee and makes unnecessary any merging of civil service retirement and social-security benefits to insure against want in old age.) If less than 5 years of service, refund of individual account with 4 percent interest to date of separation.
COVERAGE
Excludes postmasters except those of the first, second, and third classes who have been promoted, appointed, or transferred from the classified civil service.	Includes all classified postmasters, including those of the fourth class. Includes Congressmen, Senators, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners at their option, no requirement for automatic retirement at any age applying to legislative officers.
COMPUTATION OF ANNUITY
Government's portion of annuity limited to $30 for each year of service, not exceeding 30 years, such amount not to exceed three-fourths of average salary for 5 highest years.	Continues existing Government annuity with the added provision that this portion of the annuity shall not be less than the annuity purchased by the amount credited to employee's individual account with interest.
TYPES OF ANNUITY
Life annuity, or increased life annuity, with forfeiture of individual account.	Same as existing law, with added option on part of employee retiring on account of age and service to receive a reduced annuity with provision that upon his death payments will continue to a duly designated beneficiary during life of such beneficiary in an amount equal to or one-half the annuity received by the employee. This option not effective if employee dies within 30 days after effective date of retirement.
DEDUCTIONS FOR RETIREMENT FUND
Three and one-half percent of basic salary.	Five percent of basic salary. Employee accorded privilege of depositing additional sum up to 10 percent of salary in multiples of $25 to purchase additional annuity, 3-percent interest allowable on such additional deposits. Refund of such additional deposits with interest may be made upon death or separation from service before retirement.

Showing on basis of fixed annual salary of $10,000 the approximate accumulations of salary deductions (with interest) and the annuities payable to Members retiring in 1940, 1945, 1950, and 1960 under S. 281, as amended June 14, 1939, at attained ages 62, 65, and 70 after service of 15, 20, 25, and 30 years (male, nonforfeiture plan)

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the 5 minutes that have been allotted to me I want to direct attention to the particular portion of the bill, being a part of section 3, which provides that Members of the House and Members of the Senate may take advantage of retirement service if they desire to do so. I take the floor at this time to tell you that I shall expect at the proper time to offer an amendment to strike that particular paragraph from this bill. In the first place, Members of Congress are not under civil service. They are elective officers. It seems to me that we are taking advantage of a situation by adding a clause and trying to get this kind of legislation passed when we seem to fear to bring such legislation in under a separate bill. In other words, this particular piece of legislation should stand or fall on its own merits. If there is demand for it from the Members of Congress or from the people of the country, and I feel sure the people are not asking for it, then let us consider it under a separate bill, but let us not put it in a bill that is simply to modify or amend or change our present retirement system.

A great deal of effort and time has been spent to provide fairer legislation for those in civil service. Then we put in a section which puts in postmasters, who under our system of blanketing in are put under the bill, and then when we go that far we seem to have taken another step and allow Members of Congress to share its benefits. It is not a very good time and it does not come with very good grace to enact this kind of a measure.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think we have reached the stage when it would be advisable for Congress to seek to graft upon the General Government by contributing a pension for its Members?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad the distinguished gentleman from Georgia raised the point. I do not think so. I think there never should be a time when that sort of thing could be done.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Should we call this proposal a pension, or is it a businesslike retirement plan? I agree that if it is in this measure as a bait to draw votes to pass the bill, I am against it; but I wonder from the general tenor of the gentleman's remarks whether he would be in favor of some kind of retirement for Members of Congress if it should be placed in another bill and properly drawn and considered?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am not in favor of any kind of retirement for Members of Congress where the taxpayers' money is being used to provide for the retirement.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Gladly.

Mr. RICH. Ultimately we will have everybody on the Government pay roll, either in the form of a salary or a pension. Where are you going to get the money to pay all these bills?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can answer that just as well as I. I do not know, but nobody seems to care the way we are operating these days.

Mr. RICH. That is the point, nobody cares. What is going to happen to your children and your children's children?

Mr. HOFFMAN. And your children's children's children?

Mr. RICH. And your children's children's children's children's children?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. How can any Member go back and ask his electorate to return him to this body when he votes for a pension for himself? Is it not a signal to the electorate to retire him for his effort to retire himself on pension?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I will let the gentleman answer his own question when he votes on the amendment I shall offer to strike out this particular section of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the New York Sun.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on the Civil Service now in the bill, that such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill, and that any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, with Mr. CLARK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], has announced that he proposes to offer an amendment to strike out the language giving an option to Members of Congress and to Senators to participate in this fund. Let me say to the membership that we have provided a social-security plan for 40,000,000 private employees in this country, a civil-service retirement plan for some 550,000 people who draw their pay from the Federal Government; and I see no reason why we should deny to ourselves the protection we have extended to more than 40,000,000 people in this country, especially when it is based upon a contributory plan and is the same in principle as that applied under the Social Security Act, the Railroad Retirement Act, and under the Civil Service Retirement Act to our own employees and other employees of the Federal Government. I hope this Committee will vote down such an amendment. Let us for once have courage to do something for ourselves while we are setting up a social-security system for everybody else in the country.

This is not a political grab bag that we are setting up here. If a man serves here for 15 years under this plan and contributes $500 a year out of his salary he has to reach age 62 before he gets an annuity, and then he will get $1,673.16 a year.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. COX. What contribution does the Federal Government make to this annuity?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Exactly the same that the Member of Congress would make.

Mr. COX. How much per year?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It would be $500 per year.

Mr. COX. That is taken out of the pots and pans of the poor people of the gentleman's district as well as mine.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Not any more than the gentleman's salary and my salary. I may say to the gentleman I think it is warranted and it is justifiable and that we have just as much right to do for ourselves the thing we are doing for others as we have to do it for them.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that the Federal Government pays in $7,500 and the individual Congressman would pay in $500 a year for 15 years, which would be $7,500. That is a sum total of $15,000.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is right.

Mr. RICH. And at retirement you will receive back for 15 years' service an annuity of $1,673.16.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is right.

Mr. RICH. The interest on $15,000 at 4 percent would be $600. You will be short over $1,000 a year over and above the interest that you will receive from the investment of this money at 4 percent. You will be that much short of what you take in. Where in the world are your children's children and your children's children's children's children going to get the money to pay that additional $1,073.16?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not agree that the gentleman's figures are correct. According to the computation made by the actuaries, a person who serves 15 years would have accumulated in the fund $9,967.01. Of course, $7,500 of that would be his actual payments and the balance would be interest. The Government would contribute an equal amount and the annuity would be $1,673.17. Those figures are furnished by the actuaries connected with the Civil Service Commission, and I assume them to be correct.

Mr. RICH. The only thing about that is that the figures we get from these actuaries that come here do not ring true to good sound business. You are going to compel taxes to be paid in the amount that they will receive and you are sinking the ship. You will never get us out.

Mr. RAMSPECK. May I ask the gentleman if he voted for the social-security law?

Mr. RICH. There might be some justification in trying to give social security to some other people so that they can get $40 a month, that would amount to some compensation to them, but here you are trying to give Members of Congress three times as much.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And we are paying in three times as much and more.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. In the biographical index of the Congressional Directory there is listed the vocations of the various Members of Congress. There are listed lawyers, publishers, insurance men, department-store managers, and so forth. Is it not a fact that almost without exception every Member of Congress is engaged in some form of business or profession other than that of being a Member of Congress and that he has some other source of income other than that received as a Member of Congress?

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman asks my opinion, I would say that I doubt if 15 percent of the Members of this House today have any other source of income than their salaries here. If a man stays here 10 years or more, he will find it very difficult to reestablish himself back home in whatever business or profession he may follow. I am serving my tenth year here. I am a lawyer. If I have to go back home and start practicing all over again, I know I would find it very difficult. I think that if we can furnish some security for the Members of Congress, they will be more independent in their attitude toward legislation, and it will help to get better legislation for this country.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. How many years does a Member have to serve before he would be entitled to any benefit and what age would he have to be before he participates?

Mr. RAMSPECK. He must serve a minimum of 5 years to be a beneficiary under this act. If he serves less than that he gets back all he has contributed, plus 4-percent interest. If he serves 6 years and retires from Congress and is not old enough to receive an annuity—in other words, he is less than 55 years of age—the money he has contributed stays in the trust fund until he reaches 55 and at that time he can draw an annuity which will be based upon his contributions and his age at the time.

Mr. PARSONS. There are different rates for the various ages and for the years of service he has put in the House?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. It is computed upon an actuarial basis.

Mr. PARSONS. If he serves 10 years, then retires from Congress, he cannot draw anything until he reaches the age of 55?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is the minimum age at which he can get an annuity.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am concerned about one feature of the bill. I am not contending that the bill is not justified, especially as applicable to some Members of Congress; but I think there is a difference in the status of a Member of Congress who goes out and by his wiles or his ability of some sort is able to get himself elected to this position of honor that pays $10,000 a year and the fellow who qualifies himself to do some kind of clerical work for the Government of the United States. In addition to that, there is another thing that would bother me, not because I fear it will have anything to do with my reelection. We are in the midst of a period now where there is a great deal of unrest. The people are depressed. There are hundreds of thousands of people all over this country who would be tickled to death if they could get $10,000 in 20 years. Here we are getting $10,000 a year. Does the gentleman from Georgia think it is really in good taste to insist upon the passage of this provision under the circumstances?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes, I do; just as much as it is for us to do that very thing for the man downtown in one of the executive departments who is drawing just as much money as we are and who comes under this law today, and just as much as by title II of the Social Security Act we provide for 40,000,000 people in private employment. We should not deprive ourselves of this opportunity simply because we get elected to the Congress.

As far as I am concerned, I am not afraid to go back home and face my people on this issue and talk to them about it. I believe we are entitled to an annuity system the same as any other person in this country.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I agree with the gentleman in some respects, but my thought is this: Is it right and is it good propriety for us, as representatives of the people of the United States, to vote ourselves an additional salary?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is not an additional salary; it is an annuity and I believe it is right. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I am using this time to discuss again exactly the same proposal I discussed a few minutes ago. I want to express my appreciation to our distinguished chairman, Mr. RAMSPECK, for his fairness and for the fine manner in which he has handled this and other legislation that has been presented to the Committee on the Civil Service. I want to pay tribute to him because of the effort that he has put forth, as well as the earnest consideration he has given such measures. His judgment commands the respect of the membership of this House. Here is a measure that contains a provision that would permit Members of Congress, elective officials if you please, take advantage of civil-service retirement and permit the Federal Government to contribute to the payment of retirement annuities on their behalf. For the life of me, and I am expressing my own opinion, I cannot see why this legislation should ever be brought to the House in connection with a bill to amend the law affecting civil-service employees.

Is the House expected to let it ride through just because it happens to be a part of that bill? We have been following that practice a little too much in this Congress, and there is another body that does it more than we do. If this provision is worth while, and if the Members of the Congress want it, then bring it in as a separate measure, but not as a part of this most important bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does not this proposal impress the gentleman with the idea that we are undertaking to take advantage of the position of trust we occupy and to pinch something for ourselves off the fund that passes through our hands? In other words, is it not an abuse of the confidence the people in our respective districts have reposed in us?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I believe the gentleman is correct. Furthermore, I am afraid it is an abuse of authority that has been granted to us as Members of this great body.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman believe that the people in the districts back in the country, when informed of what we have done if we adopt this bad proposal, will take action with respect to whipping out of public life every man who votes for this bill?

Mr. REES of Kansas. It is my humble opinion that the people will not only lose respect for this membership but they will likewise be pretty much disappointed in us.

Mr. COX. It will prove to be a retirement bill, and very much more quickly than those sponsoring it now figure.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am afraid it will.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROMJUE. I expect to support the gentleman's amendment when he offers it, but I wish to ask the gentleman if it does not appear to him that there is no need to make this expenditure. Is not this a time when we ought not to make expenditures that are not necessary? And your amendment should be adopted, striking out the annuity for Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. REES of Kansas. This most certainly is a time when we should not be offering a gesture of this kind. It is certainly a time, it seems to me, when we should attempt to cut down expenses, no matter what the amount may be. The very principle of this provision, I believe, is wrong. I will agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] that you do not have to take advantage of it if you do not want to. Each Member of Congress can do as he pleases about that. Let us get it straight that you are not compelled to take advantage of it. But I believe what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] said a moment ago—that it is not in very good taste.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. For a brief question.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe that the people who elected the Members of Congress to come here and serve them had any thought that the Members would try to do anything at the expense of the taxpayers that would in any way further their own interests while serving here or after they cease to serve here?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Not intentionally, anyway.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is a member of this committee, and I should like to ask him a question. Is it not true that this bill provides generally for a very material increase in the contributions from the Federal Treasury toward retirement and annuity benefit payments?

Mr. REES of Kansas. My contention is that this bill does increase such payments. However, our distinguished chairman feels that in the general change in the measure it does not make much difference so far as all the civil-service employees are concerned. It is my own personal judgment that it does create a considerable additional expense on the part of the Government, and with this amendment in the bill there is no question about it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I asked the gentleman that question because he is the ranking member of the committee. I have a very high regard for the views of the chairman of that committee, but I believe it is peculiarly unfortunate that, in connection with a bill where there is at least room for the contention that the Federal contribution for retirement is being increased, Members of the House and Members of the Senate should be included.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Of course, that is my contention, too.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I believe it is in bad taste.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is my position. It is not right.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Always glad to yield to my good friend from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. May I say to the gentleman from Kansas that I agree with everything he has said on this question, but may I ask the gentleman if his amendment will be to strike out that section which deals with the retirement of Members of the House and of the Senate?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. I wish to say I will support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to have the opinion of the gentleman from Nebraska, whom I have observed always gives his most careful and earnest consideration on the measures of importance that are presented on the floor of this House.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. We have heard the merits of the congressional provision of this bill discussed very fully, but I should like to hear the gentleman discuss the merits of some of the other features of the bill. No one has done that yet.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I should be glad to do so, but I thought the gentleman from Georgia explained the general features of the bill pretty well a while ago.

I would not like to take up too much time on those changes, because I am particularly interested in the amendments I expect to propose in a few minutes.

I am not, on this occasion, offering objections to the portions of the bill. I am directing your particular attention to paragraph G which should be stricken out.

Something was said about our contribution to this fund. We do not even take any chance if we put our money into this fund, even if we go out of office. If we had been here for 2 years and had paid in our money, even then under this section we are entitled to receive our money back with interest on it from the Government. So we are not only protected, but we are getting our money back with interest on it at the proper time. So, I say to you that we do not even take a chance if we make our contribution to the fund.

I say to the Members, just use your own judgment. If you think the Members of Congress are entitled to this, if you think as a matter of right we ought to do this so far as you are individually concerned, well and good, but I do not think now is the time and I cannot think of any other time when Members of Congress, with all of the trust that is imposed in them, or is expected to be imposed in them, should attempt in anywise to dip into the Federal funds in this way. It just is not in good taste. It is not fair to the Government or to the people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not seriously believe this body is going to pass this bill with a clause in it granting pensions to Members of Congress?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know. In view of a lot of extravagant legislation that has been passed by this Congress, it is rather difficult to hazard a guess. I certainly hope not.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I shall be pleased to support the gentleman's amendment, and I may say that I believe the people of this country are expecting Congress to pay more attention to the question of Federal expenditures than they are to providing retirement funds for the Members themselves. [Applause].

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the gentleman is right in his statement. I appreciate his contribution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think that if the House should adopt this provision giving Members of Congress an opportunity to receive a large amount of money from the Federal Government—and it really is that—that we are going back on the duty we owe our constituents at this time?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the gentleman is correct, and along with that I have in mind the very principle of the thing—the very idea of doing a thing of this sort. It just will not do, and you know it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. I am against the amendment in this measure that provides pensions for Members of Congress.

I know that public life is about as strenuous as any vocation. I know that public service takes more of one's energy, time, and industry than almost any other vocation, but no one drives us to public service. All of us, I believe, are in public life because we enjoy it and, irrespective of the difficulties, the time and energy required, there is not one of us who is not concerned about remaining in public life as long as our people are willing to have us remain there. I never knew a Member of Congress who ever died in the poorhouse; in fact, when Members of Congress leave here, as a rule, if they are lawyers there is a lucrative practice awaiting them at home or they hang up a shingle here in Washington to practice before various Government bureaus. My own United States Senator hung up his shingle after his defeat last year and I am told has a very fine practice here in the city of Washington. I know several Members of the House in my home city who are now practicing law and doing very well. I believe, from an examination of the Congressional Directory, that practically every Member of this House is engaged in some other work.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he feels that a Member of Congress cannot live in Washington on the salary that he is receiving? In that case, unless he has an independent income, he must borrow money to be a Congressman.

Mr. BENDER. I did not say that. I said that in connection with his service and his campaign and the time required by his service here, that it is necessary for him to have some other means of support. I believe, from an examination of the Congressional Directory, that, with the exception of possibly two dozen Members of Congress, the Members do have means of support other than the salary they are receiving.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I think the gentleman's estimate is far too high on that particular. Would the gentleman be in favor of having a requirement that a member of a lawmaking body such as this should have an independent income in addition to his salary? If so, why not do away with salaries and let rich men write our laws? Do the American people want that?

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, one never knows whether he will be continued here in Congress or not. The great majority of the Members, before they came here, were successful businessmen, lawyers, or publishers, or were engaged in some field of endeavor which distinguished them in their own communities, which provided them with the opportunity to represent their constituents in this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Permit me to say to the gentleman that I am opposed to the bill with the amendment that would permit Members of Congress to be pensioned, but I feel sure that the gentleman is in error if I understood him correctly in the statement that there are not more than a dozen Members of Congress who have not other means of support. I say to the gentleman that he would come nearer stating the situation correctly if he would say there are not a dozen Members of Congress who have any other means of support than their salary.

Mr. GEYER of California. And does the gentleman believe that a man can properly represent his constituency and have an interest in some other business?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak briefly in favor of the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] to eliminate the section of this bill which would provide pensions for Congressmen. I expect to support this amendment as I feel I should as a representative of one of the great farm States of the country. Most of the people in my State belong to that thirty-million-odd people of America who are engaged directly or indirectly in agriculture. I want to say just a few words in rejoinder to a statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] that he felt we were justified in voting for this security pension for Members of Congress because it would be doing for Congressmen only what we have done for the rest of the Nation.

I do not believe we have as yet provided a social-security system for the agricultural people of America which would warrant us in appearing before the people of the country and sincerely contending that in providing social security for Congressmen we were simply doing for ourselves what we had done for the rest of America. I submit that until and unless we have been able through our collective thinking and efforts to correct the injustices and inequalities in the present social-security set-up which will enable the farmers of this country to enjoy some of these benefits and social-security privileges that are enjoyed by certain other groups at the present time—until that happy day has come we, as Members of Congress, should not concern ourselves about providing a social-security system for ourselves, but should continue to study the problem in behalf of the agricultural population of America. We should not forget that at present the farmers of this country are already paying in increased taxes and higher prices for a social-security set-up from which they are largely denied the benefits.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNS. Does the gentleman know of any farmer in this country who has any money from social security at the present time.

Mr. MUNDT. No; I do not, and I represent one of the best agricultural States in the country.

I think this is not a reasonable time to approach this problem. There certainly is considerable merit in the contention of those who state that a Congressman who serves here for a long period of time is not able to save any money during his service. I grant that it is an expensive profession, but I believe that social security for Congressmen and Senators should come as the finishing touch to a well-rounded American social-security program enacted by them. Let it come as the last shingle on the roof of the social-security house, and not be inserted as one of the first foundation stones in such a security program. Our first responsibility is to provide an honest and impartial pension and social-security program for others, and until we have solved this problem, at least, we should not in good conscience pass legislation simply providing for ourselves.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman comes from the same section of America that I do. Would the gentleman like to go and face an audience of farmers or small-business men in our section and try to convince them, regardless of the merits of this bill, that Congressmen are entitled to any such consideration from the Government, when the gentleman and I both know that many a farmer is losing his farm today through foreclosure?

Mr. MUNDT. Well, I would not like to do that, because I do not believe we are entitled to it, at least until such time as we have provided a Federal social-security program which includes the agricultural class in its advantages. We have tried on a number of occasions during this session of Congress, by several different methods, to equalize and perfect the advantages of social security for our agricultural groups. Thus far we have conspicuously, definitely, and dismally failed. Until we succeed I urge you to support the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] and exempt ourselves from these social-security benefits. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am rather put out as I listen to some of the remarks of my colleagues on the left side of the aisle and likewise some on this side of the aisle who, in their pharisaical way, say that they are so thankful that they are not like the speaker here, in that they would not think of providing social security for themselves. I think this is a show of sheer, downright demagoguery, and it is an indication that with the most sacred things the Members of this House will play politics. It is pure bunk. It is lack of courage for the Members here to express themselves in that manner. I am willing to take my chances with my people and I think you should. I think they will be fair with you. The people of this land of ours are convinced that social security is essential to the welfare of each and every Member of this House as much as it is essential in the lives of the lowliest of our people.

Insurance figures indicate that 85 percent of our people, and that includes Congressmen, sitting Members of today, at the age of 65 will become totally or more or less dependent on someone else for a livelihood, for support. They will become objects of charity. Why not make some provision for that contingency here and now.

I remember in the Seventy-third Congress talking to an old Republican war horse whom most of you know. I met him in the office of the Whip of the House, and I asked him why it was that he chose to retire. He told me he had served in this House for some 24 years, and it was high time that he got back to private life in order to reestablish himself because he was financially down and out.

I had a colleague from Michigan who in that same session told me he was going to retire. The Lord have mercy on his soul. He never did retire, and he never risked knowing what dependency really meant; but he, too, was going to retire from this House in order that he might provide for himself and his aging wife.

There are men who have served in this House who later became doorkeepers. There are others who have pleaded for a miserable job in one of the departments. There are Members sitting in this House today who are going to be down and out some time in the future.

Now, you are asking for no charity. You are not the first foundation stone in the plan, as my rookie colleague said a moment ago. We are really the last shingle on this social-security structure, if the gentleman wants to know. We have provided for everybody else but ourselves. The generals and admirals in the armed forces are taken care of by retirement provisions. All Federal judges and Government employees have been similarly protected.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I am sorry. My time is limited.

Mr. MUNDT. The gentleman referred to me.

Mr. DINGELL. I told the gentleman I refuse to yield. He understands English, I presume. He made a misstatement, and I am simply calling it to his attention.

The membership of this House avail themselves of this plan or they do not have to. There is nothing compulsory about it. My good friend from Pennsylvania and my good friend from Massachusetts spoke in favor of this amendment. If I had their incomes, certainly I would be insistent that this House of Representatives be made an exclusive and a rich man's club and that only those who could show so much on the profit side of the ledger would have any right to come here. They will not need any assistance after they retire, but in my position and in the lives of 90 percent of the Members of this House this legislation is very desirable; it is essential. I am wondering how many Members here have confidence in the fairness of their constituents and have the courage to stand up and be counted and take their chances.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that Congress has provided for full retirement for all Federal judges who have attained the age of 70 years and have served a period of 10 years. They are to receive a full $10,000 a year for the balance of their lives—Supreme Court and circuit court judges even greater amounts for life. These retirements are provided as a gratuity. The Nation has not objected to that. People have not risen in rebellion against the generosity of the Government. I want to say to you that the people of this Nation generally will approve of this action of the House. They are making no distinction between Members of Congress and any other class of Federal employees.

Ninety percent of the Members of this House are employees of the Federal Government. Our businesses as a rule are nonexistent. They have evaporated and we have no industrial enterprise to depend upon. We have no hotels. We have no business of any kind that will sustain us. Therefore this is our only employment. If I am willing to make my contribution on the same basis as any other civil-service employee, I do not believe there is a single, solitary individual in my district who will raise any objection. I am willing to take my chances on that point. I am sure that I could sustain my position.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. My time has about expired.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DINGELL. If the gentleman will get me more time, I will yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think it is good business after a Member has served here, we will say, 15 years, and paid in $7,500, then draw out of the Federal Treasury forever after during his life the amount of $1,673.16 a year?

Mr. DINGELL. That is the same sort of question the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked the gentleman from Georgia. The plan is based on an actuarial study. If the actuaries consider it sound, I think it is good business; yes.

Mr. RICH. The point is that the Government pays 4 percent interest on this money, yet the Government cannot get 4 percent on any of its own money. When the Government pays $600 a year interest on that money the beneficiary is getting $1,073.16 more than the Government can possibly get. It seems to me that after 15 years' service Members of Congress are going to get a lot more than they really deserve.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman has asked me a question and has answered it in his own way without giving me the opportunity.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 9 minutes.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota who wanted to make a reply to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say a word in reply to the somewhat amusing—although I suppose it was intended to be sarcastic—remark of the gentleman from Michigan. I did make the statement that if we were going to provide this social security for Congressmen it would be in the form of a foundation stone in the structure of social security, because we have not yet provided for the 30,000,000 agricultural citizens in this country and call the attention of the committee to the fact that in none of the gentleman's remarks did he show where or how we have provided social security for the farmers of this country. Therefore, while he charges me with misstatement in this connection, he completely fails to answer my argument.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I am sorry; I cannot yield further.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] in substance charged everyone who has taken a position against this amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] with demagoguery. I am not inclined to take that view. I do recognize the fact that Members who have spent many years in the House are in such position that should they leave Congress they would have a very hard time to rehabilitate themselves. There is no doubt in the world about that. On the other hand, we must take into consideration the fact that we are being besieged on all sides for social security from all classes of people, people, may I say, who are probably much less able to rehabilitate themselves than most of the Members of this House; and I do feel with those conditions existing throughout the country we would be somewhat remiss in our duties if we at this time voted ourselves into this retirement system.

There is another point I wish to bring to the attention of the membership, and that is that the Members of Congress from the State of New York, and I am one of them, have the right to join the retirement system of the State of New York. May I say that should this amendment which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], will shortly present by any chance be voted down, I intend to offer an amendment which will preclude the Members from New York State from receiving Federal retirement benefits or joining the retirement system of the Federal Government as well as that of the State; in other words, that they will have to elect between the two systems.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, with that in mind as a preamble, I say again I think it is not fair for anyone to take the floor and say that a Member who opposes this provision of the bill is a demagogue or is guilty of demagoguery. In opposing it myself, I do so because I feel from my short experience in this House that we should not, particularly at this time, vote ourselves any benefits. I say this, mindful of the fact that I have been here only 6 months and mindful, also, of the fact that many of the Members have given marvelous service to the country through many years of their lives as Members of this body. I take this position, too, knowing full well that the Senate sent this bill to us without this provision in it. Members of that body have served equally long and, in most instances, equally honorably as Members of this House. They sent this bill to us without this retirement provision for Members of Congress and Senators. Are we not somewhat presumptuous in inserting such a provision in this bill at this time? Are we not setting a bad example to put such a provision in the bill at a time when the Government is spending more Federal money than ever before? Are we not in a rather poor position to come in and try to save some appropriations and then place ourselves in the position of getting additional funds from Uncle Sam.

I voted for the bill. We recently voted on an appropriation bill for W. P. A., and I was in accord with the recommendations of the administration and the W. P. A. Administrator on that and most recommendations of our Appropriations Committee. Can we, after having done that so recently, come in here and say in all good grace that we are willing to take a fund from the Federal Treasury to help ourselves? I admit that the fund will be comparatively small, but nevertheless it is taking something from the Federal Treasury. I do not believe in such actions. I am going to support the amendment to be offered, and I do not believe any one can seriously question my integrity when I say that I am doing that by the dictates of my conscience and there is no demagogy in my action. Nothing would please me more than to favor this for the benefit of some in here whom I love and whom I feel have given of their best years and best talents to the people of this country.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. With reference to the entire bill, I wonder if the gentleman does not agree with me that the Federal employees constitute the favored class of workers in this country already, that much is being done for them at the expense of the rest of the people, and that this bill as a whole is a proposal to do more for them than has already been done?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I agree with the gentleman to the extent that during these times of stress it would seem that people on the Government pay roll, whether it be of the States or the United States Government, if you please, are in a favored position.

However, I have definitely in mind that men of intelligence, men who have been able to earn in private industry more than they could with the Government have come into the Government service at a pay which was not commensurate with what they could earn in private industry. However, during these depressed times I feel that those who are on the taxpayers' pay roll, if you want to call it that, are rather favored. I may say that I propose to support the balance of the bill.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Is it not a fact that the average income of the Government employees is about three times the average cash income of the farmers of this country?

Mr. HARTER of New York. The gentleman is speaking of the present time?

Mr. HAWKS. Yes.

Mr. HARTER of New York. The gentleman has in mind the economic stress that exists today?

Mr. HAWKS. Yes.

Mr. HARTER of New York. I assume that is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I think there are certain features of this bill that are very important, and I am frank to say I do not think they are the ones that have been discussed today. I would like to ask the able and devoted chairman of the Civil Service Committee a question, if I may. I have been very much interested in the problem faced by the people in our country beyond the age of 50 and the matter of their employment. I think there should be no discrimination against them in Government employment. I realize the problem of retirement provisions is serious in connection with the older age group. Therefore, I am anxious to know what this bill will do with regard to those Government employees who are not now covered by any existing retirement law? Does it have any provisions that will cover them?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman it does not. As a matter of fact, a committee, composed of Senator NEELY, myself, and some Government officials, is studying that question now, and I think there will be some effort made to take care of them at an early date. However, they are not included in this bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman think that can be done during this session?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I doubt it, unless the session lasts longer than I think it will.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. What does the language at the top of page 12 and at the bottom of page 11 mean? I refer to subsection (i). Does that not give the President the power to extend the benefits of the retirement system to people who are not now covered? Could that not be done by Executive order?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I think the President could extend it if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. May I ask the gentleman if he will explain a little bit further for my benefit at least the meaning of subsection (d) at the bottom of page 13, which I believe, if I understand it correctly, is a most important provision of this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. I may say to the gentleman we wrote that provision in here so that it will be possible for an employee or other person coming under the benefits of this act to divide his annuity with a named beneficiary, sometimes called a widow's annuity, although it is not that. It does not increase the annuity. It simply gives the option of dividing the annuity.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The man who is entitled to the annuity can take a smaller amount during his lifetime, then extend the benefits of it to somebody who survives him?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. It is safeguarded so that the total amount paid out will not exceed the amount which would have been received by the single person.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, in concluding the general debate, may I remind my colleagues that this Congress not long ago voted retirement at full pay for judges of the United States courts after 10 years of service without any contribution; that we have provided retirement benefits to retired officers of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marine services, which are more generous than can be given Members of Congress under this proposal and without requiring any contribution whatsoever. May I also remind the Members of the fact that we propose here to give ourselves nothing more than has been given for nearly 20 years to people who draw their pay from the same employer—the United States Treasury. May I say to my friend who talked so feelingly about the farmers that while it is true they do not come under title II of the Social Security Act, they have received a great many financial benefits from the United States Treasury. I am in favor of them getting that, but that is no reason why we should deny ourselves some protection for our later years when we may be retired from service here. I feel that we are justified in making this provision, and I can remind you that no Member of Congress and no Senator is required to exercise the option conferred in this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the Civil Service Retirement Act approved May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by striking out the whole thereof and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) All employees to whom this act applies who shall have attained, or shall hereafter attain the age of 70 years and have rendered at least 15 years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this act shall be eligible for retirement on an annuity as provided in section 4 hereof: Provided, That city, rural, and village letter carriers, post-office clerks, railway postal clerks, sea-post clerks; laborers and mechanics generally, mechanics and laborers in navy yards, and such supervising mechanics and laborers, master mechanics, leadingmen, quartermen, and foremen who perform mechanical or manual work in connection with their supervisory duties; those employees engaged in pursuits whose occupation is hazardous or requires great physical effort, or which necessitates exposure to extreme heat or cold; employees of the Indian Service at large excluding clerks; and those employees whose terms of service shall include 15 years or more of such service rendered in the Tropics, shall, under like conditions, be eligible at 65 years of age; the classification of employees for the purpose of assignment to the various age groups shall be determined jointly by the Civil Service Commission and the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government concerned: Provided further, That the term 'mechanics,' as used in this act, shall include all employees in the Government Printing Office whose duties are to supervise, perform, or assist in apprentice, helper, or journeyman work of a recognized trade or craft, as determined by the Public Printer.

"(b) Any employee to whom this act applies who shall have attained, or shall hereafter attain the age of 60 years and have rendered at least 30 years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this act, or who shall have attained, or shall hereafter attain the age of 62 years and have rendered at least 15 years of such service may, upon his own option, retire and shall be paid an annuity computed as provided in section 4 of this act.

"(c) The head of a department or independent Government agency concerned may request the retirement of any such employee described in subsection (b) of this section who, by reason of a disqualification is unable to perform satisfactorily and efficiently the duties of his position or some other position of the same grade or class as that occupied by the employee and to which he could be assigned. No such request shall be submitted to the Civil Service Commission unless and until the said employee has been notified in writing of the proposed retirement. Each such employee shall, upon request by him, have opportunity for a hearing before the Civil Service Commission, at which hearing the employee may appear in person or he may be represented by a person of his choice. No such employee shall be so retired unless the Civil Service Commission after examination finds that he is so disqualified. The determination of the Civil Service Commission as to whether the employee shall be retired under this subsection shall be final and conclusive. Any person so retired shall be paid an annuity computed as provided in section 4 hereof.

"(d) Any employee who has completed 30 years of service computed in accordance with the provisions of section 5 hereof and who has reached or may hereafter reach the age of 55 years may voluntarily retire and shall be paid an immediate life annuity beginning on the 1st day of the month following the date of separation from the service having a value equal to the present worth of a deferred annuity at the age of 60 years computed as provided in section 4 of this act.

"If none of the options provided in this section is exercised prior to the date upon which the employee would otherwise be eligible for retirement from the service, the provisions of this act with respect to automatic separation from the service shall apply."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 7, after the word "concerned" in line 23, add the following: "Provided, however, That those employees who at the date of approval of this act are serving in the 62-year-age group and those supervisory employees who by the provisions of this act would fall within the 70-year-retirement-age group, shall be and they hereby are exempted from the provisions of any law relating to the automatic retirement of civilian employees until the effective date of this act after which such employees shall be subject to automatic separation from the service in accordance with the terms of this act upon reaching the retirement age for the group to which assigned.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this amendment I should like to point out that we are raising the compulsory age of retirement for one group from 62 to 65. This deals primarily with the Railway Mail Service and the navy-yard workers. A great many of them who will reach the age of 62 between now and January 1, which is the effective date of this act, have asked that an extension of 3 years in the permissible time of service be given to them. That is the only change this amendment makes. It simply would provide that any person in the 62-year age group reaching that age before the effective date of this act would get the benefit of the change in the compulsory age.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that a very small group is involved?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; it is a rather small group. Of course, it will involve only a few people, those who may reach the age of 62 between now and January 1 of next year.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The Civil Service Commission advises that this change be made, as I understand?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; they drafted this amendment for me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Strike out all of section 2 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Except as provided in section 204 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 404), section 3 of the act of July 13, 1937 (Public, No. 206, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), and section 3 (g) of this act, all employees to whom this act applies shall, on the last day of the month in which they attain retirement age as defined in the preceding section; and having rendered at least 15 years of service, be automatically separated from the service, and all salary, pay, or compensation shall cease from that date, and it shall be the duty of the head of each department, branch, or independent office of the Government concerned to notify each such employee under his direction of the date of his separation from the service at least 60 days in advance thereof.

"(b) No person separated from the service who is receiving an annuity under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be eligible again to appointment to any appointive office, position, or employment under the United States or of the government of the District of Columbia."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 10, line 14, after the word "any", insert the word "permanent."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall take no great amount of time in discussing the proposed amendment. The amendment merely provides for the insertion of the word "permanent" in line 14 between the words "any" and "appointive." The reason for this amendment is simply that lots of these annuities will run from $15 to $20 a month, or $30 or $40 a month, but they will certainly not be enough by themselves to sustain any individual. Under the language carried in the bill providing that an annuitant shall not be eligible again for appointment to any appointive office, such an individual could not even accept a job as a census enumerator for 2 weeks. It would mean that he could do no temporary work of any kind. Surely it is not the intent of the Congress of the United States to preclude an annuitant from accepting temporary or emergency work that may provide a bit of funds to supplement an otherwise meager annuity. For this reason I believe the word "permanent" should be inserted in the bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman, speaking only for myself and not for the committee, that I have no objection to having the gentleman's amendment adopted and letting it go to conference.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I submit it to the wisdom and good grace of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Section 3 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by striking out all of that portion thereof beginning with paragraph (g) and continuing to the end of the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(g) All persons duly elected as Senators, Members of and Delegates to Congress, and the Resident Commissioners in the legislative branch of the United States Government: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any person described in this paragraph until such person gives notice in writing to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, of his or her desire to come within the purview of this act. Said notice must be given in the case of any such person in the legislative branch of the Government on the effective date of this act, within 6 months from such effective date, and in the case of any such person elected and serving after the effective date of this act, within 6 months from the taking of the oath of office: Provided further, That no provision of this or any other act relating to automatic separation from the service shall have any application whatever to any person described in this paragraph.

"(h) This act shall not apply to such employees of the Lighthouse Service as come within the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 20, 1918, entitled "An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes,' nor to members of the police and fire departments of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, nor to such employees or groups of employees as may have been before the effective date of this act excluded by Executive orders from the benefits of the act of May 22, 1920, and amendments thereof.

"(i) The provisions of this act may be extended by Executive order, upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, to apply to any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States not included at the time of its passage. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any employee or group of employees in the civil service whose tenure of office or employment is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

"(j) Any officer or employee to whom the act of July 13, 1937 (Public, No. 206, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), applies who has failed to exercise the option provided thereby to come within the terms of the Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, may exercise such option within 6 months from the effective date of this act."

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES of Kansas: On page 10, line 21, strike out all of paragraph (g) of section 3 of the bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can get an agreement as to time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that an agreement cannot be made because there has been no debate on this section.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it should be necessary for me to take the floor for the third time this afternoon on the subject of this particular amendment, but I wish to say again that in my judgment it is an extremely important one.

The gentleman from Michigan offered some suggestions and I would like to answer in a brief way some of the things that he said. The gentleman said that, after all, the vote on this bill was a matter for demagogues, I believe. If you want to classify yourselves as demagogues, go to it, but there is not any demagogy about voting against this particular portion of the bill as I see it. It is a matter of keeping faith with the folks at home. If you figure it out in that way, then it is all right with me. You vote your own opinion on it because that is a matter which is up to you. I hope there is no one here who does not use his own judgment as to how he should vote, and let us not call it demagogy.

The gentleman has said that he is willing to take his chances. We are all willing to do that or we ought to be, but let us not forget the fact that we are elective members. We are not appointive members, and we are going clear out of the classification of civil service in this matter and you and I know it. You are saying that here is a group of Members of Congress who happen to have this authority in their hands and they want to use it and they have decided this afternoon that they will not only use this authority, but usurp it, if you please.

We have not even begun in this Congress to take care of the thousands, yea, millions, if you please, of aged persons in this country who actually, honestly, and fairly need assistance, and it is just too bad that living in a great democracy that there are 435 Members here and 96 Members in another body who, regardless of party affiliation, have not been able to solve the problem by even providing the necessities of life for the aged people of this country; yet we come in here this afternoon and say that so far as we are concerned we are going to at least take care of ourselves; that we are going to see to it that so far as we are concerned, as Members of Congress, we are going to be protected, anyway, in our old age, and we are going to ask the taxpayers of this country to help us in that respect. If you feel that way about it, as Members of Congress, or if you feel that the taxpayers of this country owe us what we are asking this afternoon, it is perfectly all right with me; go ahead and support it; but I just do not believe you want to do that sort of thing. I do not think it is right. I do not think it is fair to the taxpayers of this country in your district and in mine.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How did the gentleman vote on the Townsend bill?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I voted against the Townsend bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, you had a chance there to do something for the old folks of the country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is a matter of judgment. If you think that is the kind of bill that ought to be passed by this Congress, well and good, but you and I know that so far as the Ways and Means Committee is concerned, they have not recommended any measures yet that would have done much along that line. They submitted that bill under a gag rule to us and we voted it down. It might have been amended or worked out in such fashion that it could be used, but as it came before the House I voted against it, and the RECORD shows it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. HILL. To be consistent the gentleman ought to favor an amendment to retire all judges without pay because they can now retire after 10 years of service on full pay. The gentleman ought to be consistent and offer such an amendment.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If the gentleman wants to be consistent, he will vote against this bill, anyhow, and then if he wants to bring in that sort of measure he can bring that up separately.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman support that kind of amendment or that kind of bill? To be consistent the gentleman ought to do so.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If the gentleman wants to support that kind of bill, bring it in separately. We will be glad to discuss it on its merits. But I just do not see how the distinguished gentleman can support a measure with this kind of a provision in it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In all fairness, are not all judges appointed for life just as civil-service employees are hired for life, and are not judges in a different position from those holding elective positions?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes. Certainly they are appointive offices.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman amend that and make it 30 minutes?

Mr. RAMSPECK. We are anxious to get through, and it seems to me this would give us enough time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARTER of New York. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The late Speaker Clark on a number of occasions in this House said that if there is anything in the world that is more cowardly than a Congressman it is two Congressmen, and the debate this afternoon has demonstrated beyond peradventure of a doubt that Mr. Clark knew what he was talking about. In his long, distinguished, and patriotic service in this body he learned what goes to make up a Congress. I presume that time has proven that it is no more possible for a Congress to change its modus vivendi than it is for a leopard to change its spots. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] deserves credit rather than censure for bringing this measure before the House. [Applause.] I recall some years ago, when a member of long and distinguished service in this body passed away after having been defeated and retired to private life. When he died it was necessary for our delegation to make up a purse of $1,000 to send his remains home for burial and make some provision for his widow. Members of Congress rarely lay aside anything. We are beseiged on all sides for contributions for this and that and every 2 years have expensive campaigns to go through.

I think this is about the only country in the world that makes no provision for its legislators when they retire. We make generous provisions for those who have served in the Military and Naval Establishments when they retire, either as a result of long service or for disability. We have made generous provision for the judicial and civil lists, but nothing for those who give up their business or practice to come here and probably serve for 8 or 10 or 12 or 15 or 18 years and then go back home, to find that all of their connections are broken. Then they are in the sunset of life and for them there is no such thing as a new start. I appeal to the membership of the House to lay aside their fears of what the people back home will say and face this thing in a realistic and a manly manner. [Applause.] The best investment the American people can possibly make is to provide for their National Legislators in their old age so that they may face every issue and measure fearlessly and honestly. In my own case, after 23 years of service I would only draw $775.75 annually unless I can pay into the retirement fund $9,266.08. If I had that much cash I would not be concerned.

I believe in old-age pensions. It should be on a contributory basis and it should apply to all.

Mr. Chairman, sooner or later we must remove the fear of dependent old age, whether it be for the high or the lowly.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, should this bill pass in this form, I presume it would be the first time in the history of America that any legislative body, be it a city council, a State legislature, or Congress, which had the power to appropriate money, voted themselves a pension. Of course, I know there is a certain amount of demagoguery about this, but in spite of what you say, we are all here as a matter of choice, because we prefer to be here to doing something else. There is no dispute about that, and at this time of financial crisis, with so many people demanding aid, it is the wrong time of the year, the wrong time of the moon, for Congressmen to vote themselves a pension, and then go back to have hurled in their teeth some particular thing that did not get through that somebody else wanted. People would say that we had voted a pension for ourselves and had failed to do so for somebody else. Talk about retirement. God knows that as far as retirement is concerned you will get it pretty quick—those of you who vote for this bill. You will get it and you will get it without pay besides. This is a nice issue with which to go before the people in 1940, is it not? What about the Democratic Party? Remember if this bill passes, it will have to pass through a majority of Democrats voting for it. Then I say especially again that it is the wrong time of the moon to take this question up.

Further, there are certain sections of the country where the political party on one side or the other is predominant and where Members come back to Congress year after year, but more than half of the districts waver back and forth as between the two parties, and it is not fair to those men who live in doubtful districts, as compared with those who live in districts where the politics is one way and where Members have opportunity for coming back year after year. I shall be quite well satisfied if I can come here the required length of time to which I might be eligible to get an annuity, without the annuity, and please do not forget that there are lots of people just as able as you are, just as smart as you are, regardless of who you are, who are ready and willing to take your places at any time you indicate that you are through—and sometimes when you do not. This is laden with political dynamite, and lots of you who cast your vote for this bill will get retirement without annuity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is recognized.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a bill for more generous treatment of Federal employees. That can mean but one thing. This bill cannot be more generous than the existing law unless it provides for larger contributions and appropriations from the Federal Treasury for the retirement and pensioning of Federal employees. I follow the committee and the distinguished chairman of that committee respecting Federal employees because I believe in adequate salaries for Federal employees; but I think that in a bill that increases the Federal contribution for Federal employees it is most unwise that provision should be made for retirement for Members of the House and Senate, even if such retirement were desirable. Moreover, if such provision is to be made by the Congress it should be made in a separate measure, and should not be effective until the succeeding Congress, just as an increase in salaries of Members of Congress has not been effective until the following Congress.

Mr. Chairman, whatever else may be said with respect to spending and appropriating in excess of the revenues of the Government, this must be admitted: That finally whether recommended by the Executive, whether requested by our constituents, the responsibility for continued borrowing in order that we may spend more and appropriate more lies at the door of the Congress of the United States. We have made provision for increasing the efficiency of our office during this term. We voted for an additional clerk. Personally I opposed the increase and personally I voted against it, but it is not fair to say that we have not made any provision this session for the Members of Congress. Additional provision has also been made for Senators under the conference report that is now pending.

I respectfully submit that if elective officers, not appointed by the Executive either as employees of the Government or judges of the courts, but elective officers, Senators and Representatives, are to be retired, it should be at another time when there are not so many demands from those who are in need, from the suffering, from those out of employment; when there is no grave emergency that confronts the country, but in normal times. The case of Senators and Representatives is not parallel with Federal judges and Federal employees. They serve until they reach the age of retirement and are usually dependent upon their salaries. Federal judges often serve long after they have reached the three score years and ten. Generally they make sacrifices to accept positions on the bench. Who would deny Justice Brandeis retirement when he was earning many times the salary when he was appointed to the Bench? All thoughtful patriots know that borrowing and spending cannot continue. If there is to be economy and retrenchment, Congress must set the example and make the necessary sacrifices. If we provide any additional benefits to Members of Congress when there is widespread unemployment, we estop ourselves from maintaining that Congress will reduce public expenditures so that they will not exceed public revenues. So far as I am concerned, I oppose the principle of retirement for Senators and Members of Congress. They should be impartial and not embraced in legislation that provides for additional Federal benefits for Federal employees. I trust that this amendment to eliminate Senators and Representatives from the retirement benefits of the pending bill may be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Chairman, mention has been made here of retirement and pension for judges. Some speaker this afternoon said he had heard no complaint of that. Let me say to you that I believe New York State is probably as generous in its care and treatment of government employees as any State, and I do receive considerable complaint from my district concerning these very same pensions for judges. It so happens that in our legislature, which has just adjourned, effect was given to a reduction, not to the present judges, but those who were retired and acting as referees. I just make that comment in passing.

If this amendment should not be agreed to, then I have an amendment which in substance will require Congressmen who do come from States where they have a State-retirement system, to elect to enter one or the other but not both. By that amendment or by my opposition, I do not intend to keep any Congressman who has been here longer in service than I have from getting any benefit; but I do urge that you Members who come from States which have no retirement system, to see to it that your States provide a retirement system and then recognizing the sterling service you are giving to the State and to the national Government, you be included in that retirement system, the same as New York has done. Do you not believe that if you were in a State retirement system rather than in a Federal-retirement system you might give better and freer attention to matters having to do with the retirement system than you could if you were a member of it? Not that I feel that we would be consciously affected by it, but naturally when we have something at stake we are unconsciously affected. We might be affected in favor of it or we might sit up so straight that we would fall over backwards, as the saying goes. Do you not think that gives you something to think about? Go back to your States and if they follow your advice, see that not only a retirement system is given which will include you, but will take care of the lower salaried people in your State as well. Let us see that they get something. I understand that New York State is one of the very few, if not the only one in the Nation, which gives retirement benefits not only to employees of the State but to Congressmen as well. It strikes me that when we sum up this whole picture it not only affects you in your actions in your district, but it affects all of us in our actions that we will give to legislative matters, particularly legislative matters having to do with the retirement system of the Federal Government.

I appreciate that the amount which would go into this is insignificant when you take into consideration the amount of money we have been spending, which, by the way, we do not have, but some of us seem immune to any plea along the line of curtailed spending. I admit that if this amendment is passed we will be curtailing very, very slightly, but I, for one, want to see that we curtail to the greatest possible extent. The taxpayers of the Nation pay into the Federal retirement system, while your State taxpayers only take care of the State's share in a State system.

I pause to call to the attention of the Nation that if benefits from the Federal Treasury, or debt, whichever you will, measured by States against the taxes paid State by State determined the issue of Congressmen being permitted to join their State retirement system, New York Congressmen should be about the last to be so rewarded.

The record of Federal tax moneys collected State by State, and Federal moneys paid out State by State, is well known to all. If not, go to a Representative from a State which pays more to Uncle Sam in taxes than it receives and you will quickly get the figures.

I have been here a little over 6 months, during which time I have listened to many beautiful memorials in this House in honor of Members passed away, Members who gave of their exceptional talents for their State and Nation services that money, in most instances, could not buy, services given early and late, day in and day out for their State and for their Nation. Yes; the press also recognized the value of their services. The same thing can and will happen to practically each Member of this body should he survive, politically or otherwise, for a reasonable time, because he sincerely carries out the oath of his office.

This is an age of security-mindedness and as the affairs of our country are being handled with continuing and astounding increases in our Federal debt and deficiencies, it might well be argued that the additional claim upon Uncle Sam's Treasury required to put Congressmen under the Federal retirement system not only means little but is far more justified than many of the bills passed in the last few years which have taken so many of Uncle Sam's millions and billions that he just does not have. However, that cannot justify our action, and we well know it. You can well point out that as a Congressman you are serving not only your district but your State and Nation as well. This is recognized when we are paid our salary from the Federal Treasury, given offices at Federal expense, and so forth. I frankly admit the weight of that argument, but I believe other matters I am attempting to point out make the amendment the more advisable course for us to follow.

If we by legislation place ourselves under the Federal retirement system we must justify our action, at least to ourselves. Probably it would be comparatively easy to justify our action in our own minds, but let us look carefully.

Again I repeat the truth that Members in the past have and in the future will continue to give their all for their Government, irrespective of action on this bill. However, your State should not object to making some "flowers" available to you while you are serving, rather than leaving all until you are dead. That being so, the enactment of State retirement systems for State employees, including recognition of your service by permitting you to join, is the answer, and not the section of this bill subject to this amendment. Such State retirement systems will help to give security to you and your fellow employees of your State, and at the same time help you to give freer attention to your duties as a national legislator and Representative.

I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I assure the House and the country that I will not ask or receive any benefit under this act. In the first place, I expect to remain in service until it will not be necessary for me to draw any retirement. [Applause.] I feel that most freshmen on the Republican side—I do not blame them for being opposed to the bill—I fear that they will not be the beneficiaries of this bill, because it provides that they must be in service for 5 years before any benefits can be derived under its terms. [Applause.] I have not heard any of the older Members on the Republican side, however, or on our side, with the exception of one or two, oppose this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No, no, no!

Mr. RICH. I want the gentleman to hear from somebody who is opposed to the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Rich men do not need it. This legislation is designed to help the poorer men and the poorer Congressmen.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I do not yield. Please do not interrupt me.

Mr. RICH. The poor are those who will have to pay for it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, when Members oppose this provision they are making a great deal of noise about very little. This will apply to only a few who will be retired. I realize there will not be more than 40 or 50 Members retired on the Republican side, and very few on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I do not yield.

So for the first few years this will affect only a very small number, not more than 60, I should say.

The amount involved is very small, indeed. I, as one Member who for many years has advocated old-age pensions, naturally cannot oppose this proposition. I am in favor of it because it will not apply to those rich Senators and Congressmen trained in the law who have a lucrative practice. It will apply to the Members who have devoted years of honest effort in behalf of the country; Members who, when retired involuntarily, find themselves financially embarrassed. I can say in all sincerity that if I have helped one Member in my many years of service I have helped 50 who have been retired, men who have appealed to me for aid. I have done it because they were deserving. Many of them did not deserve to be retired. They served their country well; but, unfortunately, when a man serves his people well, the vested interests dislike him and make every effort to bring about his retirement; and I am for those Members, whether they serve on the Republican or the Democratic side. I want to be helpful to them, and this provision will be.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by unanimous consent.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I submit the further unanimous-consent request that notwithstanding that, the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield out of those 2 minutes?

Mr. SABATH. I will if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. We provide retirement for judges. Private industry takes care of many men at much greater rates of retirement. We take care of the Army and the Navy splendidly. We take care of the officers from childhood when we send them to the Naval and Military Academies. I do not see why we should not do something for Members of this House who are deserving and who are in need of it. I maintain that those who do not need it will not apply for it, and I have given you my word that I will at no time ask for any benefit under this bill. I plead, however, in behalf of those who may be retired who have served the country well. I feel that this legislation is a step in the right direction.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. According to the Treasury statement of July 12, the Government is going in the red about $25,000,000 a day. This means its expenditures exceed by $25,000,000 the revenue it receives. In spite of this, however, you add to the taxpayers' burden by a new bill. How are you going to get the money?

Mr. SABATH. I will answer the gentleman. This bill will not increase taxes by one red cent, not by the thousandth part of a cent. The charge that this will increase taxes is not well taken.

As to the farmers, I know what you are trying to ask. We have been taking care of the farmers through bills we have passed here year after year. Unfortunately you Republicans failed to vote for social security, and today you regret that we have not gone further. I am with you at any and all times to increase old-age pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, Thomas Paine met Benjamin Franklin in a London coffee shop, and by him was urged to come to America where thinkers were needed, and with letters of introduction became the editor of the Pennsylvania Gazette, later to write Common Sense, proceeds from the sale of which he donated to the cause of American freedom and liberty.

As a soldier in General Greene's ragged army, leaving its bloody footprints in the snow on the retreat from Fort Lee to Newark, N. J., by the light of the campfire's embers at night he wrote The Crisis, which General Washington had read to every company.

When Benjamin Franklin, in Paine's presence, made the statement: "Where liberty is, there is my country," Paine immediately replied: "Where liberty is not, there is my country." Having been in the unrivaled position of contributing to, being present during, and sharing in the struggle for liberty on the part of the people of three nations, it was Robespierre who had condemned him to be beheaded because he pleaded to save the life of the conquered, degraded, and completely subdued French King Louis XVI, but the assassination of Robespierre before Paine's execution was accomplished left him to languish ultimately in destitution in a garret in Paris.

Here it was that James Monroe, as Minister to France, a future President of the United States, found him; revived, restored, rejuvenated, and thus resurrected, sent him back to America, where he immediately became politically insistent that President Jefferson appoint him Postmaster General.

It was a grateful Congress that provided for his old age at a place near New Rochelle, in New York State, where he died. When a predecessor of mine lay dying in an attic in his district, forgotten by all, there was no Congress that looked after him. When his widow died in a bathtub of a rooming house some months thereafter there was no one to look after that destitute family, whose only offense toward society was poverty after years of public service and sacrifice in rendering it. There is now a living predecessor of mine and successor of the former, whom the court has committed to an institution. These are some of the vicissitudes that have overtaken men who preceded me.

Let me say to my colleagues that if I am to be retired, as has been suggested here by those supporting to those opposing the pending amendment to this bill on the ground of demagoguery, if we support this measure, I will willingly submit to retirement at the hands of the constituency that trusted in my judgment to represent them here. I know the class of people I represent; they expect frugality; they counsel it; they practice it; and want the Government to practice it. They are more apt to applaud than condemn, emulating by legislation if necessary, their example as set. I have never heard of the Government's system of compulsory saving on the part of its employees toward their old age and retirement challenged, criticized, or condemned by any but its own employees who would prefer to spend their portions like prodigals and have the public taxed to provide liberally for their retirement in old age that they might evade any share in their own responsibility. I have never heard a word of criticism from the public against the retirement of rural carriers, city letter carriers, post-office clerks, or any other employee of the Government. I have yet to hear the first word of criticism raised or voiced against Congress for having extended the Retirement Act to legislative employees at their option. On the contrary, you have under the pending bill an answer to the appeal to permit those who did not avail themselves of the privilege within the time limit in giving further opportunity to embrace it.

The proposal to permit Members of Congress to exercise their own option of availing themselves of the Retirement Act is not novel. It has been extended to all others of the legislative branch of the Government. The demagoguery that has been practiced in predecessor Congresses should the more readily apply to that act which created retirement to the employees of the Government, who receive gratuitous retirement benefits exclusively at the hands of the taxpayers of the Nation through the several acts of Congress bringing it about, without compulsory or optional contribution from their salaries, which are high, yea, very high as contrasted to those coming within the arbitrary, compulsory, or optional classifications. To those who charge demagoguery today, I can only inquire, what could it possibly have been termed when retirement without contribution or assessment was extended to judges, and officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and by what term can it be styled that individuals so retired at public expense, without forfeiting retirement pay or rights, continuing physically and mentally active, are permitted to fill appointive positions at salaries higher than available to them under their series of promotions or politically sponsored appointments? I make the challenge to all who condemn this proposal to state publicly whether they would vote to stop the practice I have just cited. If it is supposedly wrong to encourage a Member of Congress to accept Uncle Sam's reassuring suggestion of thrift and frugality to provide against old age and destitution, how much further wrong is the other course in the sight of the public demand that Congress practice frugality?

It was deemed advisable as well as necessary, to provide for the integrity of the courts, to also provide for the security of the judges, who are permitted to retire optionally at full pay, without contributing anything to a retirement fund as herein proposed to the legislative branch. With 303 judges of record who are receiving full pay for active and retired pay, at rates up to $20,000 per annum for an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, if this security is necessary for the integrity of those who judge the law, recent evidence to the contrary notwithstanding, how much more desirable should it be determined that those enacting the law should have the right to contribute to their own security under the terms of the pending bill? Note that no member of the judiciary contributes one penny to his own security from his salary.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill and oppose the pending amendment. May I say further that in the State of Pennsylvania the judges have a very liberal retirement law. People who are otherwise employed by the State do not have such latitude under the retirement law. A very eminent judge who was defeated later got himself appointed by a Governor to subsequent public employment, and by the most clever and adroit manipulation of the application of the retirement law of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania was retired with a very substantial bounty. Though the press widely publicized the skillful application of this retirement to the act, there was no public criticism. The man was a particular friend of mine; his uncle served with me in the classified civil service. I shall not refer to individuals by name, because I would not want to embarrass anybody.

From the standpoint of the classified civil service, as has been referred to this afternoon by one of my colleagues on the committee who did not oppose bringing this bill out for the action of the House that we are safe if we elect to make our contributions to the retirement fund; that we cannot lose because the money contributed will be paid back if retirement precedes the date of eligibility. It is optional. He failed to distinguish, however, there is not a single person in the classified service of the United States now having the compulsory benefit of the retirement fund, nor anyone having exercised the optional privilege, who, on retirement, does not have compulsory or optional contributions to the fund reimbursed to the person so retiring from the public service.

I believe this is a proposition we should face fairly and squarely, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] stated when he was quoting the late Champ Clark. I could not possibly know Champ Clark made the statement. But I have heard it said by many of my colleagues in the House that if every Member of the Congress could be guaranteed to retire at the end of his term, at full salary in the same manner and form with which the judiciary has been provided with financial security, we would have representative government in the interest of the publ'c good and general welfare of the Nation under the Constitution, and there would not be any demagoguery such as has been referred to here this afternoon. Catering to articulate and clamoring minorities as organized to the prejudice of the unorganized would cease, and there is not one among you who does not believe and know it to be true. [Applause.]

Who is there to condemn or decry the optional and voluntary action of a Member of Congress to elect to have 5 percent of his salary deducted and held by the Government against his retirement? If he retires early, his money is refunded; and if he serves his district long and well and retires in advanced age, where is there anyone to deny he has well earned his retirement pay to which he has long contributed voluntarily?

Mr. Chairman, I shall support the bill, and yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] is recognized.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the distinguished chairman of the Civil Service Committee yield to me?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. As ranking member of the Civil Service Committee I want to call the attention of every Member of the House to the fact that the great State of New York has 45 Members of Congress in this distinguished body, all loyal, patriotic Members. Fifteen years ago the Legislature of the State of New York passed a retirement act, which included every Member of Congress, and provided that they had the right to optional retirement by paying in 5 percent of their salary. No one has ever questioned that and every Member here has observed what the great, progressive State of New York has done. We can all do the same thing here today by voting for this fine measure of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], that will give to the Congressmen of the other 47 States, the rights, privileges, prerogatives, and immunities that the great State of New York has given to its Members of Congress.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I thank the gentleman for the contribution. May I say to the Members of the House that certainly I am not going to quarrel with anybody who does not see this matter as I do. I shall not accuse anybody of being a demagogue. You have a right to vote your convictions and I presume you will. But sitting right in front of me is one of my colleagues who succeeded to the representation of a district here, although he was not the direct successor, of a fine gentleman who served in this Congress for 26 years. He rendered a faithful service to his people. He gave his salary away to the people in his district who made requests of him. When he left here, after having given more than a quarter of a century of the best years of his life to the public service, I doubt seriously whether he had enough money to live on for 30 days.

That is what I am trying to stop by making it possible for the men who come here and serve faithfully, who stay here for years, who do not accumulate any money and who have no outside source of income, to put aside some money through this saving plan, which does not provide a large amount. It does not entail any large cost to the taxpayers of this country, but it would contribute not only to the peace of mind, the happiness, and the welfare of the Members after they leave this body, but it would also inspire many of them to have more confidence when they cast their votes to do what they think is for the best interests of the country. [Applause.] I hope that we will not be swayed in this matter by a fear that some demagogue back home may charge us with having done something for ourselves. Of course, there are many people who would like to have these jobs. There are many people who would like to have any Government job in the United States. It is also true there are not many people who make as much salary as we make. But it is likewise true that we have to spend most of that money in living expenses and in campaign expenses. I do not know of a single Member who has been here during the 10 years it has been my privilege to serve in the House who has accumulated anything out of the salary he has drawn as a Member of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when we might well make some provision by way of savings for ourselves so that when we reach old age or we retire from this service, we might find it possible at least to prevent ourselves from facing want and misery in our old age.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REES of Kansas) there were—ayes 104, noes 71.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. RAMSPECK and Mr. REES of Kansas.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 119, noes 73.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Strike out all of section 4 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and insert in lieu thereof the following, so that this section shall read:

"(a) The annuity of an employee retired under the provisions of the preceding sections of this act shall be a life annuity, terminable upon the death of the annuitant, and shall be composed of (1) a sum equal to $30 for each year of service not exceeding 30: Provided, That such portion of the annuity shall not exceed three-fourths of the average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation received by the employee during any 5 consecutive years of allowable service at the option of the employee; nor shall such portion be less than an amount equal to the employee's purchasable annuity as provided in (2) hereof; and (2) the amount of annuity purchasable with the sum to the credit of the employee's individual account as provided in section 12 (a) hereof, together with interest at 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each year, according to the experience of the civil-service retirement and disability fund as may from time to time be set forth in tables of annuity values by the Board of Actuaries.

"(b) The total annuity paid shall in no case be less than an amount equal to the average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, not to exceed $1,600 per annum, received by the employee during any 5 consecutive years of allowable service at the option of the employee, multiplied by the number of years of service, not exceeding 30 years, and divided by 40.

"(c) Any employee at the time of his retirement may elect to receive, in lieu of the life annuity herein described, an increased annuity of equivalent value which shall carry with it a proviso that no unexpended part of the principal upon the annuitant's death shall be returned.

"(d) Any employee retiring under the provisions of section 1 of this act may at the time of his retirement elect to receive in lieu of the life annuity described herein a reduced annuity payable to him during his life, and an annuity after his death payable to his beneficiary, duly designated in writing and filed with the Commission at the time of his retirement, during the life of such beneficiary (a) equal to or (b) 50 percent of such reduced annuity and upon the death of such surviving beneficiary all payments shall cease and no further annuity shall be due or payable. The amounts of the two annuities shall be such that their combined actuarial value on the date of retirement as determined by the Civil Service Commission shall be the same as the actuarial value of the single life increased annuity with forfeiture provided by this section: Provided, That no election in lieu of the life annuity provided herein shall become effective in case an employee dies within 30 days after the effective date of retirement, and in the event of such death within this period, such death shall be considered as a death in active service.

"(e) For the purpose of this act all periods of service shall be computed in accordance with section 5 hereof, and the annuity shall be fixed at the nearest multiple of 12.

"(f) The term 'basic salary, pay, or compensation,' wherever used in this act, shall be so construed as to exclude from the operation of the act all bonuses, allowances, overtime pay, or salary, pay, or compensation given in addition to the base pay of the position as fixed by law or regulation."

SEC. 5. Section 6 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is hereby amended as follows:

"(a) At the end of the first paragraph add the following: 'The time limitation for execution of claims for retirement under the terms of this section may be waived by the Civil Service Commission in cases of employees who at the date of separation from service or within 6 months thereafter are adjudged mentally incompetent, but the application in such cases must be filed with the Civil Service Commission within 1 year from the date of restoration of any such person to competency or the appointment of a fiduciary whichever is the earlier. In the case of any such person heretofore separated from service application may be filed within 1 year after the effective date of this act.'

"(b) The second paragraph of section 6 of such act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by striking out the words '90 days from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: '1 year from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery.' "

SEC. 6. Section 7 of the said act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof the following is substituted:

"(a) Should any employee to whom this act applies, after having served for a total period of not less than 5 years and before becoming eligible for retirement become separated from the service, such employee shall be paid a deferred annuity beginning at the age of 62 years, computed as provided in clauses (1) and (2) of section 4 of this act: Provided, That any such person involuntarily separated from the service not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency may elect to receive an immediate annuity beginning at the age of 55 or at the date of separation from the service if subsequent to that age having a value equal to the present worth of a deferred annuity beginning at the age of 62 years, computed as provided in section 4 of this act.

"(b) Should an annuitant under the provisions of this section be reemployed in a position included in the provisions of this act, the annuity and any right to an immediate or deferred annuity as provided herein shall cease as of the date of such employment. If such annuitant is reemployed in any position in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia, not within the provisions of this act, annuity payments shall be discontinued during the period of such employment, and resumed in the same amount upon termination of such employment.

"(c) Interest shall be allowed on the amount credited to such separated employee's individual account in the retirement fund at 3 percent compounded on June 30 of each year until the beginning date of annuity."

SEC. 7. That in section 9 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, after the words "and also 3½ percent of the basic salary, pay, or compensation for services rendered from and after July 1, 1926" insert the following: "and prior to January 1, 1940, and also 5 percent of such basic pay, salary, or compensation for services rendered on and after January 1, 1940."

SEC. 8. Add to the first sentence of section 10 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, the following: "Provided, That after December 31, 1939, there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of any employee to whom this act applies a sum equal to 5 percent of such employee's basic salary, pay, or compensation."

SEC. 9. The following paragraph shall be inserted after the first paragraph of section 10 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended:

"Any employee may at his option and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission deposit additional sums in multiples of $25 but not to exceed 10 percent per annum of his annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, for service rendered since August 1, 1920, which amount together with interest thereon at 3 percent per annum compounded as of June 30 of each year, shall, at the date of his retirement, be available to purchase, as he shall elect and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission with the approval of the Board of Actuaries, in addition to the annuity provided by this act, an annuity according to the experience of the civil-service retirement and disability fund as may from time to time be set forth in tables of annuity values by the Board of Actuaries based on an interest rate of 4 percent. In the event of death or separation from the service of such employee before becoming eligible for retirement on annuity, the total amount so deposited with interest at 3 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each year shall be refunded in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of this act."

SEC. 10. Strike out paragraph (b) of section 12 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"In the case of any employee to whom this act applies who shall be transferred to a position not within the purview of this act, or who shall become absolutely separated from the service before he shall have completed an aggregate of 5 years of service computed in accordance with section 5 of this act, the amount of deductions from his basic salary, pay, or compensation credited to his individual account, together with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year shall be returned to such employee: Provided, That when an employee becomes involuntarily separated from the service, not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency before completing 5 years of creditable service the total amount of deductions from his basic salary, pay, or compensation with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year shall be returned to such employee: And provided further, That all deductions from basic salary, pay, or compensation so returned to an employee must, upon reinstatement, retransfer, or reappointment to a position coming within the purview of this act be redeposited with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year before such employee may derive any benefits under this act, except as provided in this section, but interest shall not be required covering any period of separation from the service."

SEC. 11. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect any rights of employees separated prior to the effective date of this act, but all such rights shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as though this act had not been made.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 16, line 10, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That any such person separated from the service not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency may elect to receive a refund of the aggregate of all payments made hereunder along with interest computed at the rate of 4 percent per annum compounded to the date of separation from the service."

Mr. DIRKSEN rose.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, if I correctly understand the reading of the amendment, persons who have served and not reached their retirement age but have separated from the service shall get the money contributed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; with interest.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The purpose of having a person who has served more than 5 years leave his money in the fund until he reaches an age at which he can get an annuity is to tie this system in, if possible, with the social security. It is recommended by the Commission. For that reason, while I understand the gentleman's motives and his purpose in offering the amendment, I really believe that we would be better off to leave the money in the fund so that a person who goes out of the Government service can have that "backlog" of annuity, because he would not have time to build up much annuity under title II of the social security if he went out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that, irrespective of the reason for which one might be separated—it might be voluntary or it might be involuntary—it would appear to me to be a very poor practice for him, having paid into the fund and then separating himself from the service of the country, not to be able to regain his money with interest compounded to the date of separation. That would follow out only good practice followed by every insurance company in the country. Certainly the Federal Government ought not to be barred from that good, settled, actuarial practice.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Under title II of the Social Security Act a person might work in industry, we will say, for 18 years and reach the age of 45, and then quit his job and buy a farm and retire to it for the purpose of engaging in farming. He would not get back the money he had paid in under title II of the Social Security Act. The money would stay there until he was 65 years of age, and then he would get an annuity. It is the purpose of this provision to tie in with that principle established in the Social Security Act.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Of course, I would say in answer to the contention of the gentleman from Georgia that one who separates himself from the service might have money in the fund and might need that money, but it would be frozen there under the provisions of this bill unless there was the right of election to receive a refund.

On page 18 of the bill, where an employee makes a separate contribution in order to make the annuity come at an earlier date, there is provision for a refund, but where he has served for more than 5 years but not for the retirement period which would make him eligible for the annuity the money is frozen. He ought to be entitled to take that money out, as would be the case if he had an annuity in an insurance company.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment commends itself to fairness, to common sense, and to good practice, and should be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I have the highest regard for my friend from Illinois. I believe he is one of the most able and conscientious Members of this House. However, I really believe that in order to tie in with the principle established under title II of the Social Security Act a person who has worked in the Government service 5 years or more ought to have his payment left in this trust fund to accumulate interest. The purpose of all these laws dealing with the question of an annuity or social security is to make it possible for a person to have some income when he gets past the earning age of life.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will vote down this amendment.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro forma amendment not because I have any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois but for the purpose of reading into the RECORD a little incident that happened on a similar occasion, on February 26, 1925, when the question was before this House of raising the salaries of Members of Congress. The action then was very similar to that taken today, many Members arguing and intending to vote against the proposition with their fingers crossed and hoping to God it would pass. A man who had the real courage of his convictions was the Honorable Frank Clark, of Florida, who was succeeded by the gentleman from Florida, the Honorable LEX GREEN. He came down into the Well of the House and said this:

Mr. Speaker, $10,000 is not commensurate with the service performed here. Some of my good friends opposed this increase and I know they did it conscientiously and sincerely. They did not want it but sometimes it is necessary to make people, for their own good, do things against their will. The action of some of my good friends reminds me of a story told me by a colleague only a few days ago, and I will repeat it here because I think it illustrates the point.

"An old gentleman who had been a drinking man in his day, had finally concluded to quit, and he did quit. A few months later he was taken deathly ill, and lying upon his bed of pain and sickness, and as everybody said, his last illness, he called his wife to him one day and he said, 'Mary, down in the hall is an old hair trunk of mine. Many months ago I hid in that trunk a bottle of good old peach brandy. I hid it from you, Mary, and I have not touched it since. I want you to go down there and get that bottle of peach brandy; I want you to take a glass, pour it about half full, put a little sugar in it, and stir it; then put a little piece of ice in it, Mary, and then bring it up here, and, Mary, no matter what I do or say, you make me take it."

[Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLARK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration Senate bill 281, and pursuant to House Resolution 250, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate still further insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 6577) entitled "An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; that it agrees to the still further conference requested by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. OVERTON, Mr. KING, Mr. GLASS, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5610) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1796) entitled "An act to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933."

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered Mr. WALSH and Mr. CONNALLY be appointed additional conferees on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6635) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 5748) entitled "An act to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on the calendar for Wednesday next may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is entitled to recognition for 20 minutes.

THE HIGH COST OF CHEAP TRANSPORTATION

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, there are few, if any, congressional districts in this country with a larger proportion of population dependent on the railroad industry than the Twenty-third District of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor to represent. For that reason it is only natural that I take a keen interest in legislation to afford a measure of relief to the railroads, which contribute directly and indirectly to the economic welfare of so many of my constituents.

Aside from such practical considerations, I have a deep personal interest in railroad-relief legislation. I come from a family of railroaders. I am a railroader myself, with 24 years of service. Most of my friends in my home town of Altoona, one of the great railroad centers of the country, are railroaders. So I have a sentimental feeling about railroading and a sympathetic understanding of the railroaders' problems, which are bound up with the general railroad problem.

For these reasons I am doubly anxious to contribute anything I can to the solution of the railroad problem; and, aside from these personal and practical considerations, my knowledge and experience in railroading convinces me that this problem must be solved in the interest of the national welfare. The railroad employee, the management, and the investor in railroad securities are not the only parties interested in a sound solution of the problem. Primary consideration must be given to the public—the passenger and the shipper. Any legislation which fails to consider all the factors involved in this problem is neither just nor in the national interest.

And, inasmuch as the railroads constitute a vital part of the national defense, the Government itself has an interest of paramount importance in the efficiency of the rail-transportation systems. The break-down of the railroads in a war crisis would be disastrous. We had a sad experience in Government operation of the railroads during the World War. We should profit by that experience in the face of danger in the future.

Fortunately, the American public realizes the railroad problem must be approached from a broad, national standpoint. The people understand the human side of the railroad problem. They know the high wages paid to the army of skilled workers who man the roads constitute an important factor in our national economic well-being. They know the numerous investors in railroad securities must receive a fair return on their money or the funds will be diverted to other industries and enterprises. They know the roads cannot be expected to produce revenue to pay dividends unless the rail carriers are given something approaching equality with competitors in matters of taxation and regulation.

In fact, the crux of the railroad problem is the unequal and economically wasteful competition for traffic among the various modes of transportation. This unequal and economically wasteful competitive problem has been growing more acute with each passing year. No other industry in the country is confronted with such a difficult competitive situation as the railroads. Most of the other modes of transportation enjoy some sort of Government subsidy not granted to the railroads. This favoritsm has resulted in the creation of transportation facilities beyond the ability of the traffic to support them all. The favoritism to the competitors of the railroads in matters of subsidies, taxation, and regulation has produced the present crisis in the railroad industry. The only sound way to meet this crisis is to adopt a policy of equal rights for all modes of transportation and special privileges for none in matters of regulation, taxation, and subsidies. That policy should be pursued so as to preserve the special advantages of each mode of transportation.

Whether the legislation now in the making will accomplish this result remains to be seen, but at least a somewhat tardy recognition of this crisis has come from the administration, and, in response to public demand for action, the President has called upon Congress to enact remedial legislation to solve some of the more pressing railroad problems. It is encouraging that railroad-relief legislation is among the important matters remaining for Congress to complete before this session adjourns sine die.

Already the Senate has passed a bill designed to reach and correct some of the factors contributing to the railroad problem. For several months the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been working on the legislation, and a measure is expected to be reported to the House within a few days. I wish to call attention to certain activities from without Congress in connection with that legislation.

Everyone who takes even a casual interest in this matter knows the railroad-relief bill passed by the Senate provides that the transportation facilities on inland waterways shall be placed under the supervision and regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the first time in our history. And despite the fact that these inland waterways transportation facilities enjoy subsidies and taxation advantages over the railroads and some other land carriers, in addition to a great difference in the cost of equipment and numerous items of overhead and maintenance, these interests are raising a great row about the provision in the Senate bill.

The railroad employees and the investors in railroad securities, as well as the people who pay for the Government subsidies, have a legitimate complaint about unjust discriminations which affect their bread and butter, their investments, and their taxes. But certainly, the inland-waterway interests have no right to complain. Even under the strict regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, these interests still will enjoy many advantages over the railroads.

Not content to rest their case on a solid foundation of fact, some of the inland-waterway interests are inspiring false and misleading information in an effort to fool Congress and the country. As might be expected under the circumstances, the farmer is being used as a foil to fight the battle of the water lines. All too frequently the farmer is used for such purposes without his knowledge or consent, and it seems this case is no exception to that rule.

Certain statements have been made to the effect that the farmers are opposed to the regulation of the water lines by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is very doubtful whether some of those who assume to speak for the agricultural industry really are authorized to do so. And here is a case in point.

Recently, Mr. Harry Feltus, who claimed to speak for 400,000 farmers, appeared before a Senate committee in opposition to regulations of waterway transportation facilities. On the heels of his appearance there came a denial from the very association which this gentleman claimed to represent and a disclaimer that he spoke for the members. There appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 22, 1939, page 5876, a complete repudiation of Mr. Feltus and his views on this issue. Mr. Feltus had opposed regulations of waterways, but the Farmers' Union, which he claimed to represent, wrote to Senator WHEELER, of Montana, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and condemned his statement. This repudiation stated, in part:

> So far as the regulation of traffic on the river is concerned, there is no more reason why traffic thereon should not be regulated than as applied to railroads. In any important branch of our industry, bad practices, such as discrimination, rates, rebates, preferences, or what not, can only be minimized through governmental regulation.

That statement leaves no room for doubt as to whether Mr. Feltus speaks for the farmers or whether that group of farmers speaks for itself.

More recently, Mr. Brenckman, the Washington representative of the National Grange, issued a statement in which he opposed any legislation which would subject the water carriers to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. He indicated that his statements reflected the sentiments of the farmers of the country.

Now, let me call attention to certain resolutions of the Farm Bureau and Grange organizations. These do not indicate that Mr. Brenckman really voices the sentiments of the farmers of the Nation.

The Indiana State Grange declared:

> Corresponding regulation of rates and service should extend to all other agencies—water, highway, and air—to the extent that they are competitive with railroads.

The Iowa State Grange declared that—

> Federal regulation of rates and service should be extended to truck lines, waterways, and pipe lines.

The Ohio State Grange recommended—

> Equality and fairness in regulation of rates and service.

The development and improvement of inland waterways have cost the American taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars. There is a question about the wisdom of these huge outlays of the taxpayers' money. Now, let us apply the test that must be applied to the essential problem in dealing with any agency of transportation: Does the consumer get the benefit of vast expenditures of his tax money?

The only valid reason that can be given for spending millions and millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money every year on inland waterways is to provide transportation at more reasonable rates than can be furnished by other carriers. This saving in transportation costs is supposed to be passed on to the taxpayers who pay for the facility. So, unless the rates for water transportation actually result in a saving to the taxpayers, then the only reason and excuse for the waterways is gone. Now, let us apply the test.

Senator WHEELER, speaking before the Senate and basing his remarks upon extended hearings on this subject, said:

> The fact of the matter is that when the oil companies, the steel companies, or any of the rest of them ship their products by water they receive a benefit, but the consuming public does not get one 5-cent piece benefit out of it. As a matter of fact, when the companies ship oil or steel on the Mississippi River they charge the railroad rate from Pittsburgh to the particular point, whether the commodity is shipped by water or whether it is shipped in any other way.

That statement appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 22, 1938, page 5872.

The Senator also referred to hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, held in Memphis, Tenn., in February 1939. It involved rates on gasoline and kerosene from Baton Rouge to Alabama points. In that case, Mr. A. M. Stephens, general traffic manager of the Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, testified thus:

We exercise our judgment and foresight in consideration of all these matters. We have found that none of the other companies are passing any of this money on to the consuming public.

Now, as an instance in mind, I have before me at the present time a statement of the market price delivered to points in northern Georgia, to which you move gas out of Guntersville, for instance, at Dalton when you first began operation the market price at Dalton was 18 cents; that is, the posted market on May 8, 1938. In December 1938 it was 17.5, reflecting a reduction in the refined market at Shreveport and the Gulf coast, and it represents one-half cent reduction entirely in the tank price so far as dollars are concerned. In other words * * * we have not seen any passage of this savings to the consuming public. * * * We have not found that any of that has been passed on to the consumer.

Recently Mr. W. H. Reed, an oil dealer in Memphis, Tenn., made an address in which he said:

Taxpayers are fed the baloney that the Mississippi River is a wonderful thing for the people of Memphis. * * *

As to the oil business, the truth is "the Mississippi River is the curse of Memphis."

On the one hand, public taxes keep the river highway open for oil barges of the oil corporations. On the other hand, water transportation, made possible by millions of dollars of public money, has crucified the railroads and there would be thousands of jobs for railroad men if they got the freight that now moves by water.

The question is * * * if the public pays millions in taxes to get the benefit of cheap water transportation, does the public get the benefit of water transportation or what?

The answer is that the oil corporations get the benefit of cheap water transportation. And the oil corporations keep the profits themselves. The public pays the bills to make water transportation possible. The oil corporations get richer.

When I buy a tank of gasoline I pay the spot market price for the gasoline. But in addition I have to pay the oil company as freight the railroad freight rate on gasoline from Shreveport, La., to Memphis. Understand that the gasoline I get never saw Shreveport, La. It came to Memphis by water from the New Orleans refining district. The actual water charge on this gasoline is about one-half cent per gallon, but I have to pay a railroad rate from Shreveport, which is over 2 cents a gallon. In other words, the oil corporation takes me for a buggy ride to the extent of 1½ cents per gallon. In money, this means that every time I get a 10,000-gallon car of gasoline the oil company makes $150.

The Federal Trade Commission has just finished a study of the motor-vehicle industry. In summarizing their conclusions, the Commission said:

Some manufacturers often bill their dealers for transportation in amounts in excess of the actual cost of delivering automobiles to the dealers. * * * The Ford Motor Co.'s transportation charges are based on the carload rate from Detroit, Mich., to destination. Both General Motors Corporation and the Ford Motor Co. have assembly plants in various parts of the country.

Transportation charges in excess of the actual amount paid apparently are not confined to deliveries from assembly plants.

Both these companies use water as well as highway operations, and yet charge the purchaser the rail rate, whatever the savings may have been on subsidized waterways and highways.

Much has been said in support of waterway improvement to the effect that it would benefit the producer, especially the farmer, in his production of grain. On this point Mr. M. W. Thatcher, of the Farmers' Union Grain Terminal Association at St. Paul, has written to Senator WHEELER as follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 22, 1939, p. 5876):

Years ago we built a terminal elevator at St. Paul, on the river. I have managed that elevator, with over 2,000,000-bushels capacity, for several past years. I have made many attempts to secure facilities and rates of transportation that would permit us to put farmers' wheat through that elevator and ship it abroad in competition with others. I have not once been quoted a rate on the river that would enable us to ship any grain in foreign commerce because the rate was just too high. We have been able to move a little oats and barley in domestic commerce down the river, and all in the world that accomplishes is to put us into competition with producers in other areas who had a railroad advantage over us. That sort of business, which would give us an advantage by river over another group of farmers in the United States using rail service, tends to bear down on price of the agricultural product. It certainly doesn't enhance the income to agriculture.

Our entire group has historically been for development of waterway transportation. The theory back of our support rests upon an excess charge by the railroads, but, since railroads are generally in the "red," the question now comes to our mind as to whether or not there is a great deal of value in our old position. We believe that water transportation is desirable as a means of competition against railroads, which might otherwise have a monopoly. It is generally believed amongst our group that with some of the products moved up the river to our consumers, that gain from lower transportation is sometimes retained by the shipper and not of any material benefit to the consumer.

As further proof of my statement that the farmers and the farm organizations are being used in a deliberate effort to mislead Members of Congress as to their true position on the question of regulation of inland waterways, I wish to place some documentary evidence in the RECORD at this point. I am submitting statements and resolutions made and adopted by various farm organizations to show that the farmers favor the regulation of the water lines and other methods of transportation in competition with the railroads. These statements and resolutions come from North Carolina, Montana, Arkansas, California, Ohio, Mississippi, Wisconsin, Nevada, Minnesota, Louisiana, Indiana, Iowa, and Virginia.

I believe there can be no doubt of these documents reflecting the views of a representative cross section of the American farmers on this issue of equality and fairness in regulation of transportation facilities. I would be very happy to have the gentlemen representing districts in those States to examine these resolutions in case there is any question in their minds about the position of the farmers in their own district on this important national question. It might set some of these gentlemen straight on this question.

Statement of position on behalf of the North Carolina Farm Bureau by its executive committee, meeting at Wilson, N. C., Wednesday, August 31, 1938, with respect to transportation

1. We believe that an adequate and efficient railway system is essential in the interest of agriculture's development and prosperity.

2. We believe that the best interests of agriculture will be served by a continuation of private ownership and operation of our railroads.

3. We believe that our railroads should continue under reasonable regulation of rates and service to assure to agriculture a fair consideration as to reasonableness of rates and adequacy of service. Reasonable freedom and flexibility should be left to management to enable it to explore all avenues to economy, all improvements in service, and every advancement in methods. A reasonable element of competition should be retained between railroads themselves. Corresponding regulation of rates and service should extend to all other agencies—water, highway, and air—to the extent that they are competitive with railroads and for that reason. Competition as to every agency should be fair.

4. While the interests of agriculture require adequate, dependable, and efficient transportation service, with a reasonable element of healthy competition, an excess of facilities and unnecessary duplication will prove to be a burden in which agriculture must share. The Farm Bureau has always stood for improvement of farm-to-market roads to reduce cost of initial movement of produce from the farm, and we believe that expenditures on such roads should be stressed rather than on expensive through highways duplicating existing agencies, or on waterway improvements of doubtful usefulness. Proper coordination of service can best be secured this way and total cost of transportation be kept down.

5. We believe that Government should not compete unfairly with private business in transportation. Government barge lines now operating do not have to meet all costs paid by private companies in competition, such as interest, taxes, damage claims, telegraph, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance. In fairness, Government should dispose of its waterway facilities to private interests on all inland waterways, where they compete with privately owned and operated facilities.

6. Abandonment of unprofitable mileage and consolidation of lines should be permitted where, in the first instance, other transportation is available and, in the second, public interest is served.

7. Under reasonable regulation of rates and service railroads should be permitted to become transportation agencies, utilizing all agencies to best advantage, and to develop to the fullest the inherent advantages of each.

8. There should be adopted a fair and comprehensive national transportation policy with full consideration given to the needs and usefulness of each agency so as to bring about a genuine coordination and a smoothly working relationship among them all. This will result in the best service at the lowest cost.

Resolutions adopted by Montana State Farm Bureau and associated women of the Farm Bureau at annual meeting, November 15, 1938

Whereas the railroads of the Nation have come to a place where definite changes must be made in their policies of operation and revenue income: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we support the railroads in this matter:

1. Railroads are the most important and essential means of transportation. Other agencies have developed more recently. All are useful and should be sustained within their bounds of usefulness. The growth of all agencies has been without plan or program or policy. The situation in the transportation field today, and especially with respect to railroads, demands a sound, consistent national policy covering all agencies, so that the people of the country will be given an efficient, smoothly working system at the lowest level of cost. In framing this policy organized agriculture must have a voice.

2. In determining a national transportation policy, provision should be made for a continuance of railroads under private ownership and operation.

3. With adequate protection to public interest, provision should be made for a fair and reasonable coordination of facilities and service, for consolidation and unifications found to be in the public interest in reducing costs and improving service, and for eliminating unproductive investment.

4. Regulation of rates and service should apply fairly to all agencies engaged in the business of transportation for hire and competing for the same traffic, and with ample protection to shippers and the public, should leave management the necessary freedom to seek out every practical possibility for improved service and lower costs and to make required adjustments to meet changing conditions.

5. We go on record as being opposed to government going into business in competition with private enterprise, including transportation.

6. Since hazards at rail-highway grade crossings are now largely created by highway operations, the financial burden of crossing protection and elimination should be removed and the present policy, now an emergency policy, should be made permanent. A fair principle is for each agency to pay in proportion to benefits received.

7. State and Federal policies should be harmonized with fair and consistent treatment to every means of transportation. This includes fair treatment with respect to taxation, as well as other policies.

Resolution of the Arkansas Farm Bureau Federation in Little Rock, November 17 and 18, 1938

We believe that the regulation of all forms of transportation—railways, waterways, highways, pipe lines, and airways—should be under one Government agency.

We favor the enactment of new laws or amendments of existing laws that will give the railroads greater freedom in making rates to meet competition.

We think that the railroads should be permitted to remain under private ownership, and continue to pay taxes so necessary for the maintenance of our State and local governments and our public schools.

Resolution adopted by California Farm Bureau Federation at State convention, Sacramento, Calif., November 17, 1938

Resolution No. 11

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION LEGISLATION

Resolved, That the public interest demands that, in order to preserve an adequate rail transportation system, helpful legislation must be enacted relative to the rate-making power of the railroads, land-grant rates repealed, increased tolls established for inland waterways, restrictions removed to enable the securing of governmental or other loans, the revision of the long-and-short-haul rules, and other remedial legislation passed in connection with taxation, consolidations, grade crossings, coordinated and allied transportation on highways, construction of bridges, labor relations, and other important matters materially affecting the ability of the railroads to operate and to render effective service to the public, and be it further

Resolved, That agriculture be represented on all governmental or quasi-governmental bodies or groups organized for the purpose of recommending remedial action in connection with rail matters, or formulating rules or regulations in connection therewith.

Resolution regarding transportation passed at the annual meeting of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, Columbus, Ohio, November 17 and 18, 1938

1. The great majority of farmers, being located at points not adjacent to seaports or navigable inland waters, are dependent in large measure upon rail transportation in sending their products to market. We believe that every increase in general traffic carried by the railroads will have a tendency to minimize the burden upon the farmers and to lower the rates upon agricultural products. In order to obtain volume of traffic, the railroads should be permitted to adjust their rates promptly to meet the needs of commerce and to meet competition. Therefore, subject to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend tariffs, to fix maximum and minimum rates, and to prohibit unreasonable discrimination, we favor the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act.

2. Recognizing that an economical and a speedy interchange of commodities between farm and market is necessary to agricultural prosperity, we believe that an adequate and efficient system of railway transportation, privately owned and operated under reasonable regulations, is essential. In furtherance of this belief, we think the following principles should be recognized by the public, the Government, the railroad employees, and the railways:

a. Equality and fairness of treatment in regulation of rates and service and in taxation among all competing forms of commercial transportation agencies—air, highway, pipe line, rail, and water.

b. An immediate abandonment by State and Federal legislative bodies of expensive, make-work, or unnecessary transportation legislation.

c. A state and national transportation policy providing for such consolidation, coordination, private ownership, and public regulation of all competing forms of commercial transportation agencies as may best promote adequate and more economical service to agriculture.

3. We oppose any further increase in freight rates on fertilizer or fertilizer materials at this time.

Resolution with respect to transportation, by Mississippi Farm Bureau, November 30 to December 3, 1938, Jackson, Miss.

We believe that an adequate, efficient, and dependable system of railway transportation is vitally necessary to Mississippi agriculture, and that a continuation of private ownership and operation of our railroads is to the best interest of agriculture. Regulation of rates and service should be extended to all forms of transportation alike, and safety to life and property be required and assured by all transportation agencies. Finally, we believe that there should be adopted a fair and comprehensive national transportation policy with full consideration given to the needs of each agency so as to bring about a genuine coordination and smoothly working relationship among all.

Resolution adopted by Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation in convention at Madison, Wis., December 6, 1938

In view of the fact that large sums of money are being expended for the construction of new highways to accommodate today's traffic, much of which is commercial hauling, be it resolved by the Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation in convention assembled, That further studies be made by our legislative bodies in order that we may establish a sound policy of transportation legislation, which will give a fair chance for each form of transportation to compete in that field of service for which it is best adapted; and that the practice of subsidizing certain forms of transportation to the detriment of others be discontinued.

Resolution adopted by Nevada State Farm Bureau in annual convention at Reno, Nev., January 31–February 3, 1939

1. The time has come for the adoption of a sound national transportation policy, including all agencies engaged in competition for interstate commerce, and for a corresponding policy within the States, recognizing all agencies are useful, each should be developed to the extent of its usefulness, fully protecting the inherent advantages of each, avoiding excess facilities and making possible a proper coordination of both facilities and service.

2. Railroads should continue in private ownership and operation.

3. With proper public safeguards, provision should be made for coordination of facilities and service under one management, unification of lines for improvement of service and reduction of cost, and for the abandonment of unproductive mileage where other agencies exist.

4. Regulation of rates and service of competing agencies that is fair to all and with ample protection to shippers and the public and such necessary freedom to management as to enable it to seek out every practical possibility for lower costs and improved service, and to make necessary adjustments to changing conditions.

5. The law creating a government corporation to operate in interstate commerce and in competition with private business intended the sale of these Government facilities to private business. The intent of the law should be carried out and the Government operations disposed of to private interests.

6. Each transportation agency should bear its own burden for protecting persons and property. No higher standards should be set up for one agency than for another. In respect to rail-highway grade-crossing protection and elimination, each agency should bear the cost in proportion to benefits received.

7. State action relating to transport agencies, like Federal action, should be fair to all, and should be in harmony with Federal action, the State preserving fully its essential rights and authority. This includes fair treatment with respect to taxation.

Resolution of Minnesota Farm Bureau

To the end that each form of transportation shall be enabled to do the work for which it is best suited and that agriculture may be adequately served at lowest level of cost, we recommend the adoption of a sound national transportation policy that will give to each form of transportation:

1. The right to meet competition on equal terms;
2. The opportunity to coordinate facilities and service;
3. Equality in the matters of regulation, taxation for general governmental purposes;
4. Repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause;
5. Repeal of land-grant rates.

The Minnesota Farm Bureau further goes on record opposing any legislation, either State or national that will increase the cost of transportation.

Resolution adopted by American Farm Bureau Federation at New Orleans, La., December 13–15, 1938

American farmers are vitally interested in the maintenance of a highly efficient transportation system. We reaffirm the comprehensive resolution on transportation adopted at the annual meeting in 1936.

We recognize that American railroads constitute an essential transportation agency and believe their continued operation under private ownership will best assure the highest degree of efficient and improved service to the public.

Rules and regulations causing enforced costs entering railroad operations and transportation rates of the railroads should be adjusted to the extent necessary under efficient operations to permit improvement of services and a reasonable return on prudent investment.

On the other hand, the railroads must continue under such reasonable regulation as will assure the public fair and reasonable rates and adequate service; but the underlying purposes of such regulation should be to foster and encourage, rather than to restrict, sound and orderly development and operation, of an efficient and economical railroad system. Reasonable freedom and flexibility should be left to railroad management in fixing rates and in exploring all avenues to economy, including consolidation and elimination, all improvements in service, and every advancement in methods.

To accomplish this end requires immediate readjustment of governmental policies to provide relative treatment of different types of transportation without limiting any natural advantages accruing to any particular type where such advantages are being reflected to the public interest.

Report of Resolutions Committee at Indiana State Grange Annual Meeting, Goshen, Ind., October 20, 1938

A TRANSPORTATION PROGRAM

1. We believe an adequate and efficient railway system is essential to the interest of agriculture's development and prosperity.

2. We believe the best interests of agriculture will be served by a continuation of private ownership and operation of our railroads.

3. We believe our railroads should continue under reasonable regulations assuring agriculture fairness in rates and adequate service.

4. Corresponding regulation of rates and service should extend to all other agencies—water, highway, and air—to the extent that they are competitive with railroads.

5. Organized farmers have always stood for improvement of farm-to-market roads, and we believe that expenditures on such roads should be stressed, rather than on expensive through highways duplicating existing transportation agencies or on waterway improvements of doubtful usefulness. Proper coordination of service can be helpful in keeping the cost of transportation to a minimum.

6. Abandonment of unprofitable mileage and consolidation of lines should be permitted where other transportation is available and the public's interest is not impaired.

Report of the legislative committee, Iowa State Grange, 1938 session, Newton, Iowa

The time is here for organized agriculture to take a stand for farmers and demand just treatment of the Government toward all agencies of transportation so that agriculture and industry may be well and efficiently served and real progress made toward a more sound and better transportation policy. Such a policy should include:

1. Continuation of railroads as privately owned and operated enterprises.

2. More flexibility in rates and service of common carriers based on general price levels and density of traffic.

3. Federal regulation of rates and service should be extended to truck lines, waterways, and pipe lines.

4. Safety to life and property should be required and assured by all agencies.

5. Preferential rates based on old land grants should be repealed.

6. Government subsidized transportation agencies should not be continued so long as taxpayers must support them.

Be it

Resolved, That we favor the enactment of a law limiting the speed of motor vehicles to 50 miles per hour; be it

Resolved, That we are opposed to recipients of relief from either Federal, State, or local funds being holders of liquor permits; be it

Resolved, That we are opposed to additional hard surfacing of primary roads until at least all existing mail-route roads are graveled and all farm-to-market roads brought to grade; be it

Resolved, That we advocate legislation requiring the registration of all unnaturalized foreign born, with deportation of those refusing to become naturalized within a reasonable time.

RALPH LONGLEY, Chairman.

Adopted.

Report of transportation committee, Virginia State Grange Meeting, Marion, Va., October 26 and 28.

Recognizing that an adequate, efficient, and dependable system of railway transportation is vitally necessary to Virginia agricultural development and prosperity, we believe that—

The best interests of agriculture can be served by maintaining the railroads in their full vigor and usefulness; and also recognizing that fair and equitable competition and regulation in transportation are essential to the economic well-being of the Nation, we favor a national transportation policy which will treat all agencies of transportation fairly and impartially.

We favor the coordination and unification of all Federal activities in the field of common-carrier transportation developments to the end that costly and unnecessary duplication of transportation system and overproduction of transportation facilities may be avoided.

We believe that amendments should be made to existing transportation laws and regulations to permit railway management, under proper regulatory supervision, all proper freedom of judgment and action in meeting changing conditions and competition. We believe that under present conditions the best interests of agriculture and the Nation at large will be served by a continuation of private ownership and operation of our railroads.

Ohio State Grange, adopted Thursday, December 15, 1938

Maintaining a speedy and economical transportation is a vital necessity to agriculture, our national defense, and prosperity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we stand for just treatment by the Government toward all agencies of transportation.

We recommend:

1. Continued private ownership of railroads.

2. Equality and fairness in regulation of rates and service, based on general price levels and density of traffic.

3. All agencies should be required to assure safety to life and property.

One of the popular fallacies of a few decades ago to the effect that inland waterways furnish "cheap transportation" also has been exploded. Even a casual examination of this question reveals that what once may have been "cheap transportation" is now dear. And the cost, as usual, falls on the taxpayers. They are paying for service they do not receive. And that is a fraud on the taxpayers.

For example, let us take the old Erie Canal. That was a genuinely cheap and useful public project in its time, but that time has long since passed. The Erie Canal now is a "white elephant" and a very expensive one on the hands of the American taxpayers.

When the Erie Canal was dug the shippers who used it were willing to pay for its use. Later the shippers were unwilling to pay tolls for the use of the canal. More than 50 years ago we relieved the users of the payment of tolls and added the cost of maintaining and operating the canals and improved waterways to the general tax burden. Thus did we cast free from the only true test of economic justification and embark upon a program of so-called "cheap transportation." It was "cheap transportation" for a very few shippers at the expense of all the American taxpayers.

Now, let us take another look at this so-called "cheap transportation" with the old Erie Canal, now the New York State Barge Canal, as an example. Since 1903, when its rebuilding started, this particular piece of "cheap transportation" has cost the American taxpayers in construction work alone about $337,000 a mile. It is costing nearly another $5,300 per mile per year to maintain and operate it. And that figure does not take into consideration anything at all for interest on the enormous investment per mile. This waterway, created at such a cost and used without any toll payments, has only a fraction of the annual freight-carrying capacity of a good single-track railroad. But this was done and is being continued in the name of "cheap transportation."

Now let us consider the cost of an improved natural waterway. Take the Ohio River. It is regarded as the most successful of the long-distance inland river transportation projects. The improvement of the Ohio River amounted to the virtual building of that waterway. It cost the taxpayers approximately $142,000 per mile for that job. Now it is costing them about $3,880 per mile per year in maintenance and operating charges. And all that is provided free of charge to the comparative few who are in a position to make use of this "cheap transportation."

We find the same story of "cheap transportation" on the Mississippi River. No sooner was the Mississippi improved with a 9-foot channel up to St. Louis then a demand came from Minneapolis and St. Paul for an extension of the channel up to them. That was done at a cost so far of $228,000 per mile for construction and of $2,300 per mile per year for maintenance and operation. And all the American taxpayers are paying for it day in and day out, year after year.

Now, let us compare those costs with the investment in rail roadway. The average for a mile of rail roadway is about $61,000 for each mile of line. That includes the cost of sidings, yard tracks, and second, third, and fourth, and other additional main tracks. Maintenance of track and structures averages $1,733 a year for each mile of line, less than half the cost of maintaining the channel of the Ohio River.

And—do not overlook this fact—the total economic cost of doing the job on the railroads is less than it is on the rivers and canals—even when it is considered that, besides paying their own costs, the railroads pay taxes averaging more than $1,400 per mile of line each year.

Go down the list of river building and the development, improvement, and maintenance of all the inland-waterway projects in the country and you will find the same story in a slightly varying degree. The result will be the inescapable conclusion that this so-called cheap transportation is a myth, a delusion, and a snare and a fraud upon the American taxpayers. If the American taxpayers were getting their money's worth, you would hear no protest from me. But the facts show they are not even getting a good run for their money and therefore I protest.

The gentlemen of this House would do well to scrutinize closely all of this false and misleading propaganda being put out in the name of the American farmers and their falsely alleged opposition to the regulation of the water lines. Gentlemen would do well to remember there is no substitute for rail transportation. But no matter how economically and how efficiently the railroads may be run, they cannot be expected to compete with subsidized transportation facilities of all sorts, which also go untaxed and unregulated. At any rate, none of the competing modes of transportation is regulated as rigidly as the railroads and none of them pay taxes comparable with the levies imposed upon the railroads by Federal and State governments and municipalities.

If gentlemen look sharply, they will find these fake farmers wearing false whiskers in an effort to perpetrate further fraud upon the American taxpayers and ruin the best, cheapest, and safest means of transportation yet devised for weight and distance. And probably the unkindest cut of all is the use of the taxes paid into the Treasury by the railroads themselves to create and subsidize unregulated and untaxed competition.

The railroads are not asking for any special concessions. All they ask is that Congress place subsidized, unregulated, and untaxed competitors, such are the water carriers, upon a footing nearer an equality. Absolute competitive equality is impossible because even with the proposed regulations, the water carriers still would enjoy extra breaks in many respects.

The railroads long have been one of the best business barometers in this country. Railroad prosperity means national prosperity. Sound public policy with respect to the railroads, economic statesmanship, and fair dealing will have more effect than any other single factor in restoring prosperity in this country. There is economic advantage to the country at large in other modes of transportation, but let us assess them at their true value to the American people. Let every transportation facility stand on its own feet, on an equality with all others so far as subsidy, taxation, and regulation are concerned. Do that and you will hear no complaint from the railroaders, the investors, or the public.

After all, the public—the taxpayer—is the chief sufferer from this economic nonsense. The public is learning the fallacy of "cheap transportation." The taxpayer is learning that he is paying two prices for his "cheap transportation." He is paying for the subsidies and he finds no saving in the rates charged for "cheap transportation." It is only a matter of time before the taxpayers make this discovery in sufficient numbers to bring about a change in our national transportation policy. When that time comes some gentlemen will be retired from public office by the voters and we will establish a policy of just and equal opportunity for all transportation agencies, for all will be free to render their best service at the lowest true cost. Then and only then will we have truly cheap transportation in the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE WRECKERS ARE AT WORK

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the wreckers are at work destroying the economic structure of our country; depriving the citizen of his property, his liberty; tearing out the very foundations of our constitutional government.

John L. Lewis, his C. I. O. with its communistic methods and leaders, assisted by this administration, using the N. L. R. A. and the National Labor Relations Board, on the background prepared by the activities of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, are making good the prophecy of Wilson's Secretary of State, Bainbridge Colby, when, in 1934, of the President's advisers, he said:

> The overthrow of our institutions, including the Constitution, is their avowed goal.

DENIAL OF CIVIL LIBERTIES

In Harlan County, Ky., are coal mines. Twenty-two of the companies operating these mines belong to the Harlan County Coal Operators Association, and for years there was comparatively little labor trouble. Steadfastly they refused to submit to the demands of John L. Lewis that all miners join his United Mine Workers Union.

Remember, now, that John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers is the organization which contributed $470,000 to the New Deal campaign fund and that it is the organization which loaned the Democratic National Committee $50,000. Do not forget that other sympathetic organizations contributed other sums, swelling the grand total of the campaign contributions from these labor organizations to $1,700,000.

With this in mind, consider the attempt of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, the so-called La Follette committee, to brand Harlan County, Ky., as "bloody Harlan." Recall its strenuous efforts to stigmatize the operators of those mines who had refused to yield to Lewis' demands as greedy, lawless, and the instigators of violence. Do not forget that at the instigation of that committee one of the operators, Ted Creech, was charged by the agents of the La Follette committee with giving false testimony before it; forced him to trial for perjury, where he was acquitted by a jury of his peers.

Keep in mind, if you will, the fact that many of the companies and many of the operators who rejected Lewis' demands were indicted and tried at London, Ky., for a criminal conspiracy; that the jury disagreed; and as they filed out of the courtroom the five jurors who voted for conviction were met and warmly greeted by Government agents, thus indicating that the Government officials who prepared and assisted in the trial of the case had some knowledge of the deliberations of the jury.

Keep in mind, also, the fact that some of the companies operating these mines were charged by the National Labor Relations Board with unfair labor practices, and that one was charged and convicted by the N. L. R. B., and that in at least one instance a heavy money judgment was about to be rendered against it.

UNION CONTRACT SIGNED

Under these circumstances, in September of 1938, the operators signed a contract with the United Mine Workers union. The contract, however, did not provide for a closed shop although it provided for the check-off. The contract expired on the last day of March 1939.

Lewis then demanded the execution of a closed-shop contract, under the terms of which only those miners who joined and remained members of his organization would be permitted to work in the mines of Harlan County.

MINERS LOSE

Under these contracts the miners, in some instances at least, received less than they did prior to the making of the contracts.

Let me give you this illustration taken from the books of one operator, from the statement of miners who worked prior to the date of the contract and who worked after the contract was made.

In this particular mine, when the contract was signed in September of 1938, there were less than 10 union men of the 369 employed. The lowest wage, and that was the wage paid to the old men and the boys—the slate pickers—was $4 a day. Many of the miners made $33 a week. Under the union contract, the maximum they could hope to earn was $20 a week. The tonnage of the mine dropped from 33 to 35 cars a day to 22 to 24 cars a day.

Before the contract was entered into with the union, the miners were paying from $6 to $6.50 per month for house rent. The contract was signed. Under its terms, a charge of $2.25 per room was made, which raised the rent to $9 for a four-room house, which, prior to the making of the contract, rented for from $6 to $6.50.

MINERS' PAY CUT

In this particular mine, working under the union contract, the miners, instead of receiving 65 cents a ton, took a cut to 59 cents a ton. The cutting machine operator was cut from 10 cents a ton to 8 cents a ton on over two-thirds of the mine's operation.

One miner, and I have his name and saw his record on the books, made, in October of 1937, $306.71; in the corresponding month in 1938, he made $111.48. In November of 1937, this miner made $300.57; in November of 1938, he made $54.04. In December of 1937, he made $242.37; in December of 1938, he made $89.92. In January of 1939, he made $156.16; in February, $149.72; and in March, $152; and since April has been on strike, earning nothing.

The books disclose that the miners made less. Now what of the operators?

OPERATORS LOSE

In 1937, the company mined 455,000 tons, and they made 4½ cents per ton on the coal mined. In 1938, they mined but 270,000 tons and they had a net loss of 26.4 cents per ton. This year, up to June 1, they had a net loss of 47 cents on every ton mined, and they now have 145 men working.

LEWIS CAUSES LOSS TO MINERS AND TO OPERATORS

The foregoing is an illustration of what happened to the miners and to the operators in this one mine after Lewis, the wage and hour law, and the social-security law began operating.

In June 1939, not working under a union contract, a 19-year-old boy, a coal loader working 6 days a week, made $146.40, while his father, a small man, during the same month and loading coal, made $200.49. Another young man 22 years of age, a coal loader, in June of 1939 made $151.63.

This mine had been operated without a strike from 1922 until April 1, 1939, and the relations between management and workers had always been good.

MINER WHO IS AN ECONOMIC ROYALIST

I talked with one man who has worked for this company since June of 1920. He is now a tipple man, 56 years of age, married; has raised an adopted son now 25 years old. This miner told me he had never been overworked, never forced to put in any excessive number of hours, and that for most of his work he was paid by the ton. That he had been sick off and on for 3 years; that an operation performed last March cost him $425. That his wife had been operated on at a cost of $300. That he never drew relief money of any kind.

That when he began working at the mine he had about $700. He now has in excess of $19,000, all of which he has saved from the earnings he has made from working for this coal company. He never at any time has denied his wife or adopted son anything they needed, and never performed any work except manual labor.

MINERS DO NOT WANT TO JOIN U. M. W.

At the time that the so-called La Follette committee was making its charges that these operators were denying the civil liberties of the miners, the union claimed that, if given 60 days, it could and would organize all of the miners in the district. It was given an unrestricted opportunity for more than 60 days to organize the miners in this county. At one time it had as many as 60 organizers in the district. It had 12 additional weeks in which to carry on its organizing activities.

Some of its organizers, or those acting in its behalf, told the miners that if they joined they would get unemployment insurance in 9 days from the time they became unemployed. They told the men that unless they joined the union they would not be eligible for unemployment insurance, and they made many other statements which were not justified by the facts.

LABOR BOARD ATTEMPTS INTIMIDATION

Leonard Shore, a Labor Board representative, on one occasion, in the presence of Charles Ryan, attorney for the Board, told an operator that it was foolish for the Harlan operators to attempt to buck the United States Government; that the Government intended to see that everyone signed with the United Mine Workers and that, if they did not sign, the Labor Board would bankrupt them, and, for good measure, he made the added statement:

We may also put some of you behind penitentiary bars.

This man, Turnblazer, whose speech on Sunday last may well be termed the inciting cause for the attack which on Wednesday last resulted in the death of one man and the serious wounding of four others, from a sound truck in front of one of the mine offices, on June 30, 1939, made the statement in substance that, if the company did not sign up with the U. M. W. A., "Phillips—regional director for the N. L. R. B.—has promised me to take up the Labor Board case just as soon as he returns from his vacation."

COLLUSION BETWEEN UNION HEAD AND REGIONAL DIRECTOR OF LABOR BOARD

Early this last spring the members of the Harlan County Coal Operators Association, with one exception, refused to sign a United Mine Workers' closed-shop contract.

Forthwith, Turnblazer, president of the local union, made a complaint to Phillips, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, and Phillips forthwith notified the companies that charges had been preferred against them.

The Wagner law does not require an employer to sign a contract with his employees. All that it requires, and the Supreme Court in at least two cases has so held, is that he negotiate in good faith. The Supreme Court of the United States has twice held that a failure of the employer to agree to the terms demanded by the employees or by the union does not render the employer guilty of an unfair labor practice.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Harlan County Coal Operators Association and individual members of that association have negotiated time and again—yes; almost continuously—with representatives of the United Mine Workers; notwithstanding the fact that they have been told that the operators will not sign a closed-shop contract, the operators have, on several occasions, been charged by Turnblazer with refusing to negotiate.

And following that charge, and acting in conjunction, it might be said, with Turnblazer, Phillips, regional director, has on occasion notified the mine operator that he has been charged with an unfair labor practice because he has refused to negotiate, this notwithstanding the fact—known to both Turnblazer and to Phillips and to the members of the Board itself, if it is cognizant of the proceedings of its directors—that such a charge had no foundation; in fact, was false.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD PRACTICES COERCION

Thus you will see how the National Labor Relations Board has lent itself to the organizing activities and to the contract-making efforts of the United Mine Workers. You see how, working hand in glove with the United Mine Workers' officials, it threatens the mine operator with ruinous, expensive legal proceedings in order to bludgeon him into signing a contract which the law itself does not require him to sign.

RACKETEERING CONTRACTS

These contracts, as we have seen, are of no advantage to anyone except to the officials of the United Mine Workers. These contracts result in a lessening of the miners' wages. They result in a loss of profits to the operator. But they enable the union, as an organization, to collect for political and other purposes $1.50 each month from the pay checks of the miners, and to collect such other special assessments as John L. Lewis and his executive board may see fit to levy.

LEWIS' FLYING SQUADRONS

As so often when persuasion and peaceful picketing fail, Lewis called upon his flying squadrons of wreckers, who, answering his call, appeared by the thousand in Harlan County, where, outnumbering the resident miners, they kidnaped the son of a mine owner and operator and held him for hours; threw George Hobbs, when he refused to sign a union application, in the river and then, while he was in the water, threw rocks at him, and as he emerged from the river, again caught him and forced him to sign a union application.

They shot Bob Blevins. They caught a miner named Mills and in the presence of his wife beat him, and, when George Whitfield, Jack Whitfield, and William Whitfield, mine operators, attempted to rescue him from the mob, they beat the three; and the sound truck bravely pealed out to its more than a thousand pickets who were opposed by less than 200 workers, the message, "Get every damned Whitfield off the hill"—this, although the Whitfields owned the mine and the hill.

What investigation, if any, will the Senate Civil Liberties Committee make of this incident? We know the answer. It will follow its former course and pass by all deprivations of civil liberty when instigated and carried out by union men, by strikers, "goon" squads, and flying squadrons.

Lewis got away with his rule of violence, his intimidation and coercion, as administered by his subordinates, Turnblazer from Tennessee, and Titler, both officers of the local, until Governor Chandler called out the troops and this particular period of violence ended.

ADMINISTRATION AND LEWIS UNABLE TO FORCE COMPLIANCE WITH HIS DEMANDS

Notwithstanding the fact that United Mine Workers closed these mines in Harlan County by calling in armed pickets from other States until Governor Chandler, recognizing his duty under the constitution of the State, called out the National Guard to protect the property of the operators and to safeguard the miners in their attempts to work, Lewis was unable to organize the miners of Harlan County, and last week the mines of that district were operating quietly, peacefully, under the protection of the National Guard of Kentucky.

Notwithstanding all of the activities of John L. Lewis, the N. L. R. B., the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, the prosecutions instituted and the trials carried on by the Department of Justice, in June of 1939 the car loadings of coal out of Harlan County exceeded by more than 5,000 cars of 50 tons each the output of June of 1938.

SO LEWIS RESORTS TO FORCE, AND DEATH AND BLOODSHED FOLLOW

The fact that these mines were operating in spite of Lewis' demands; that miners were going to and from their work earning a livelihood for themselves and their families without paying tribute to him was gall and wormwood to John L. Lewis and his subordinates.

On May 15, 1939, at Lenarue, 6 miles south of Harlan, at a union rally, among other things, Turnblazer, who is cognizant of the violence which occurred in April of this year when these mines were closed by pickets, many of whom came armed from other States, said—

No miners will go hungry and, if they are evicted from their homes, the United States Government will give you tents and we will feed you.

G-men are here watching the operators and we have more on them now than ever before.

If they (the operators) want to spend another 6 or 8 weeks at London, that's up to them to decide.

A direct threat by William Turnblazer, head of the local U. M. W. union, to use an agency of the Federal Government—the Department of Justice—in a criminal prosecution if the operators did not yield to his demand for a closed-shop contract.

INTIMIDATION AND COERCION FAIL—THEN CAME VIOLENCE

In spite of all the organizing efforts put forth by the United Mine Workers; in spite of the intimidation practiced by the agents of the National Labor Relations Board; in spite of the threats made by William Turnblazer, head of the local United Mine Workers union, and notwithstanding the bringing into the county of thousands of armed pickets, who by force prevented the residents of Harlan County following their daily tasks, the liberty-loving miners of that county refused to submit to John L. Lewis' demands; refused to join his union; and the operators, although it might have been to their financial advantage—although certainly it would have saved them from prosecution by the National Labor Relations Board and some of them from trial on criminal charges by the Department of Justice, steadfastly refused to sell their men to John L. Lewis—refused to compel them to join a union which they did not want to join.

John L. Lewis was demanding not only that the men join his organization in order to work, but he insisted, and he attempted to make good that demand by force, that the Harlan County Coal Operators' Association and the individuals belonging to it, violate the National Labor Relations Act by compelling their men to join his organization before they could be given work.

Lewis, arbitrary tyrant that he is, causes complaints to be filed against those employers who advise their men that they do not need to join a union; and then, on the other hand, demands that other operators tell their employees they must join his union—a plain violation of the act which in so many instances he has used to enforce his demands.

A GOVERNOR WHO BELIEVES IN CIVIL LIBERTIES

Undoubtedly, John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers would have closed all the mines in Harlan County by force, had it not been for the action of Governor Chandler. Unlike the Senate Civil Liberties Committee and Attorney General Frank Murphy, who talk so much about guaranteeing civil liberties but who by their acts do much to destroy them, Governor Chandler called out the National Guard so that men who wanted to work, who desired to exercise their civil liberties, might do so.

Frank Murphy, when Governor of Michigan, called out that State's National Guard to prevent men from working. Governor Chandler of Kentucky called out the National Guard so that men might work. Governor Murphy violated his oath of office. Governor Chandler kept his oath of office.

LEWIS BRINGS DEATH AND VIOLENCE TO A PEACEFUL COMMUNITY

On Monday and Tuesday last it was my privilege to visit Harlan County and the city of Harlan; to go from mine to mine; to talk with miners and with operators. It was my first visit to Harlan and I found the people there to be the same as in other average American communities.

A beautiful little city and high in the surrounding mountains, the rich coal veins from which the community derives its livelihood. The people mostly of English ancestry, native Americans; few, if any, foreigners; not many colored folks. Homes clean and comfortable, as were the streets and public places of the city. In short, a typical American community, with no evidence of intolerance or violence or disregard for the law in sight; nothing, in fact, which would distinguish it from any one of a thousand cities in our land, except for the fact that around and about some of the mines were National Guardsmen on duty, and up and down the highways were patrolling trucks, in which rode National Guardsmen.

This was on Monday and Tuesday of this week, but on Sunday last, according to the Harlan Daily Enterprise, William Turnblazer, of Jellico, Tenn., president of District No. 19, United Mine Workers, addressing a union mass meeting, called for the re-forming of picket lines to "curtail production" at nonunion mines, and to "get the strikebreakers out." Turnblazer declared that such action should be taken "while the lake trade is going on" and as a move to break the deadlock between the union and the Harlan County Coal Operators Association holding out against signing the union closed-shop contract.

The men working in the Harlan mines are residents of Harlan County, most of whom have always worked in the coal mines. That is their only occupation. Under the Constitution of our Federal Government and the Constitution of their State, they have the right to work and they have the right to work without signing a contract prescribed by William Turnblazer or John L. Lewis.

In utter disregard of the rights of these men; denying to them their civil liberties, Turnblazer, of Tennessee, called upon his listeners to get these free-born American citizens, exercising their constitutional right, out of the mines.

Early Wednesday morning, following his demand and his advice, pickets formed around the mine of the Mahan-Ellison Coal Co. and attempted to prevent Harlan County citizens entering the mine to toil at their daily tasks. Among those pickets was Dock Caldwell, 31-year-old miner, a member of the union, who undoubtedly believed, from what Turnblazer said, that he had the right to prevent other men going into the mine to work.

Dock Caldwell undoubtedly was familiar with the demands of John L. Lewis that all must join his organization before they would be permitted to work. Dock Caldwell undoubtedly had heard that the National Labor Relations Board, the New Deal administration, stood back of John L. Lewis.

And so Dock Caldwell, ill-advised, attempted to folow the directions of William Turnblazer; attempted to pull a fellow worker from a car which was taking him into the mine. Dock Caldwell was shot. Dock Caldwell died, and he died because of the un-American, the unlawful, demands made by John L. Lewis.

The responsibility for his death rests not only upon the shoulders of John L. Lewis, of William Turnblazer, who incited him to take part in these unlawful activities, but upon the shoulders of the members of the National Labor Relations Board, who in Harlan County have given the people to understand that, unless they yield to the demands of the United Mine Workers, the operators are guilty of a violation of the National Labor Relations Art.

Here today we have in Harlan County, Ky., a community attempting to carry on in the soft-coal industry, an industry which has been almost ruined by John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers, by the Guffey Coal Act, by the activities of the National Labor Relations Board.

Here we have a community where the mine owners and operators, under the Wagner Act, the wage-hour law, the social-security law, have suffered almost continuous losses; where the miners, under these laws, have from day to day seen their yearly earnings diminishing; a community where the mine owners and the operators, where the miners themselves, are denied the right to go about their daily tasks.

Here we have a community, the members of which, unwilling to give up the liberties won by their forefathers in bloody battle, are today willing to face and meet not only violence and bloodshed, but death itself, in order to preserve those liberties so dearly won for them.

And here in Washington we have an administration which extends the hand of friendship to John L. Lewis and his communistic allies, who would deny a fundamental constitutional right to American-born men and women.

Here we have an administration lauded, praised by the Communists and the Communist Party, which seek the destruction by force of our form of government, extending aid and comfort to those who are seeking to forge the shackles which deny liberty to the citizens of Harlan.

If we in Congress sit idly by and permit this situation to continue, upon us rests a part of the responsibility if violence, bloodshed, and death follow our failure to extend a helping hand to those patriotic citizens of Harlan who are fighting an uphill battle without Federal aid.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] is entitled to recognition for 15 minutes. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Missouri in the Chamber.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1882. An act for the relief of Otis M. Culver, Samuel E. Abbey, Joseph Reger, and August H. Krueger.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), pursuant to the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Monday, July 17, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

On Saturday, July 15, 1939, Dr. C. E. R. Sherrington, British railroad expert, will testify before the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to the bills H. R. 6369 and S. 1869, to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; to create a railroad reorganization court, and for other purposes. The hearing will be public, and will begin at 10 a. m. in the Judiciary Committee room, 346 House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

On Tuesday, July 18, 1939, at 10 a. m., hearings will be held on H. R. 7090, to amend section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 481), and H. R. 7091, to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, 464).

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on Monday, July 17, 1939, at 10: 30 a. m., on House Joint Resolution 207, to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes.

The Foreign Affairs Committee will start hearings on Tuesday, July 18, 1939, at 10 a. m., on proposed legislation dealing with treaty violations, with special reference to the Orient: H. R. 4232 (Mr. VOORHIS of California), H. R. 5432 (Mr. COFFEE of Washington), H. R. 6837 (Mr. EATON of New Jersey), H. R. 7159 (Mr. IZAC), House Joint Resolution 42 (Mr. CRAWFORD), House Joint Resolution 113 (Mr. FISH), House Joint Resolution 254 (Mr. FISH), House Joint Resolution 318 (Mr. WALLGREN).

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands on Monday, July 17, 1939, at 10 a. m., in room 328, House Office Building, to consider H. R. 6668.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on Wednesday, July 19, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 6443 and H. R. 7066. Public hearing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

999. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a schedule of claims amounting to $123,944.96, allowed by the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement, under appropriations, the balance of which have been carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874 (H. Doc. No. 418); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1000. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1940 amounting to $2,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 419); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1001. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on reexamination of Charlotte Harbor, Fla., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted May 12, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1002. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Allapatchee River (Alligator Creek), Fla., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved June 20, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 17, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, July 10, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God of Peace, who hast taught us that in returning and rest we shall be saved, in quietness and confidence shall be our strength: Come Thou and dwell amongst us as Thou wert in the midst of Thy disciples, and with Thy great might succor us; that, standing in Thy presence and Thou in our midst, our labors may be prospered in all godliness and quietness, righteousness, and peace, so that at the last we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those that love Thee. Through Thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, July 14, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

UNVEILING OF STATUE OF WILL ROGERS—PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 29, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed with illustrations and bound, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress at the unveiling in the rotunda, together with such other matter as the joint committee may deem pertinent thereto, upon the occasion of the acceptance of the statue of Will Rogers, presented by the State of Oklahoma, 5,200 copies; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 2,700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use of and distribution by the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall provide suitable illustrations to be bound with these proceedings.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the House resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED DURING RECESS

Under authority of the order of the 14th instant,

On July 15, 1939, the enrolled bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, was signed by the Vice President.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION OF AQUATIC LIFE—RESIGNATION OF MEMBER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter of resignation, which was ordered to lie on the table:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
July 14, 1939.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of Committee on Conservation and Utilization of Aquatic Life.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS T. MALONEY,
United States Senate.

FINANCIAL AND OTHER DATA PERTAINING TO SUNDRY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES AND CORPORATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 96)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in partial response to Senate Resolution 150 (76th Cong.), copies of the last annual reports of certain agencies, except for the following agencies or corporations: Reconstruction Finance Corporation, RFC Mortgage Co., Disaster Loan Corporation, Federal National Mortgage Association, Public Works Administration, Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., and stating that the financial reports and statements called for by the resolution will require several months to compile, and that they will be transmitted promptly upon completion, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution in the nature of a petition of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying that the various Federal departments, institutions, and agencies which have made loans upon real estate in the State of Wisconsin submit to that State's moratorium and mediation laws relative to foreclosures, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WILEY.)

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Westchester Council of Industrial Unions, of Yonkers, N. Y., favoring the making of sufficient appropriations to maintain prevailing wage standards on all relief work for skilled employees, and the elimination of the policy of lengthening the hours of work under the W. P. A., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the District of Columbia Council, United Federal Workers of America, C. I. O., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2765) to amend the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939 to provide for the reestablishment of the prevailing rates of pay for persons employed upon work projects, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Calif., praying for the repeal of clauses in the recently enacted W. P. A. joint resolution to the effect that W. P. A. workers work 130 hours per month for the same monthly wage they received for 68 hours or less; that all workers employed for 18 months or more take an enforced 30-day vacation; and that the Federal theater be eliminated and Federal sponsorship of the writers, art, music, and historical records projects be withdrawn, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a motion adopted by the City Council of Quincy, Ill., to the effect that the prayer of the Illinois Workers Alliance be granted requesting the city council to go on record as having made protest to Congress against the new law which has been placed in force governing the W. P. A., forcing workers to work 130 hours for the same amount of pay; also, to protest against the ruling of the 30-day lay-off of all W. P. A. workers who have been on the rolls for 18 months or more, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a cablegram from the Puerto Rico General Anti-Tuberculosis Association, San Juan, P. R., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2547) to impose additional duties upon the United States Public Health Service in connection with the investigation, treatment, and control of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Newport News, Va., favoring the prompt enactment without amendment of the bill (S. 591) to amend the United States Housing Act of 1937, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States praying for the prompt enactment of legislation to withdraw the protection of the interstate-commerce laws from liquor advertising crossing State lines with the view that State regulations and laws on the subject may be made adequate and effective, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, praying that the traffic in arms and munitions to Japan for use in operations in China may be stopped, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the National Paperboard Association, Chicago, Ill., protesting against the loan of public funds by the R. F. C. or other agencies to promote the construction of any additional paper mills, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH presented numerous telegrams, resolutions, and letters in the nature of petitions, praying that the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of civil liberties, etc., be continued and that adequate funds be allotted for the work of the subcommittee, which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

WAGES OF W. P. A. RELIEF WORKERS

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Members of the Senate very briefly at this time to what appears to me to be the crystallization of a serious situation. I quote an article by Bruce Catton which appeared in many newspapers of the country on Friday. Under a Washington date line, the article reads:

PAY CUTS PROMISE STILL MORE W. P. A. DISCORD ON SEPTEMBER 1

(By Bruce Catton)

WASHINGTON.—The W. P. A. authorities are saying privately that if you think they are having trouble now with Nation-wide strikes against the abolition of the prevailing-wage rule for relief work, you should just try looking ahead to next September. Then, they say, is when the real trouble is likely to begin.

Under the new W. P. A. bill the differential hitherto paid between North and South is abolished, effective September 1.

Taking the country as a whole, the average monthly wage for W. P. A. work has been $52.50. The new law provides that this shall not substantially be changed, but that no more may be paid for any type of work in one locality than is paid for the same type of work in another locality, except where some change is justified by differences in the cost of living.

This provision, say the W. P. A. authorities, is simply going to mean that relief workers throughout the Northern and Middle Western States are going to get a substantial pay reduction on September 1. At the same time, they say, relief workers in the South will get a pretty substantial increase.

COST OF LIVING JUST CONFUSING

The cost-of-living provision doesn't help much, because so far W. P. A. hasn't found any way of figuring out exactly what the cost of living is. It has some figures compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, but these are kept up to date only on some thirty-odd selected cities in the country, whereas W. P. A. has projects just about everywhere. How the cost is to be worked out for all W. P. A. cities and towns nobody knows; but in any case, it is predicted that the differences between different localities won't amount to enough to avert the sweeping pay reductions.

Right now the relief workers who are on strike are getting as much money as they did before. The only difference is that they have to work longer to get it. The ironic part about it is that whereas the other changes in the W. P. A. bill were made over the administration's objection, this particular change was made with Administrator Harrington's full approval.

The prevailing-wage rule, as Harrington saw it, resulted in inefficiency in W. P. A. building projects; a foreman on a given job might have one crew putting in 60 hours a month, another crew doing 75, another doing 90, and still another doing 110. Under those circumstances, he was likely to have a terrible time getting his job done smoothly.

In addition, Harrington felt that the prevailing-wage rule paved the way for a good deal of chiseling. There were cases in which a relief worker enjoying a high hourly pay rate would finish his weekly W. P. A. stint in 15 hours, and would use his spare time to get a part-time job somewhere else, so that his total earnings came to more than many workers in private industry were getting.

SOUTH'S NONRELIEFERS MAY SQUAWK

At any rate, W. P. A. has its hands full of trouble now and expects that the trouble it will get next fall will make the present difficulties look mild. For, as one official expressed it, if thousands of relief workers angrily strike because they have to work more hours but still get just as much money, what aren't they likely to do when they find that their pay will be cut, too?

A flare-back from the nonrelief people in the South is perfectly possible, too; for W. P. A. figures that in some sections of the South under the new rule relief pay will actually be higher than the pay scale in private industry. If that happens, energetic action by some of the very Congressmen who voted the new rule into effect can be looked for.

Just to make the September horizon look worse, at the same time that the pay cuts go into effect all W. P. A. workers who have been on the rolls for 18 months or more must be laid off for 30 days without pay.

All in all, the W. P. A. high command isn't looking forward to the autumn with any noticeable degree of enthusiasm.

Mr. President, I shall not read longer from this article at this particular time, because the time for debate this afternoon is limited; but I should like to impress upon Senators, if I can, that this threatens to be a very serious situation. If I read aright the articles which seem to come from the head of the W. P. A. and the W. P. A. agencies, it is the intention very seriously and substantially to cut the wages of more than a million relief workers in the North and in the West.

In an endeavor to offset this threatened wage cut, I have communicated with Colonel Harrington. I have been over the law rather carefully, and because I am familiar, I think, with what Congress intended, I have endeavored to show Colonel Harrington that it was not the intention of any Member of the Senate that this wage cut of the relief worker be put into effect.

Anxious to permit the debate on the unfinished business to proceed, but intending to discuss this matter at some length, probably at a little later date, I now ask unanimous consent that there be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a copy of the letter which I have written to Colonel Harrington upon this subject.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 14, 1939.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON,
Administrator, Work Projects Administration,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL HARRINGTON: Because I am so much concerned with the possible reduction of the wages of W. P. A. relief workers in the North, I am taking the liberty of calling your attention to subsection (a) of section 15 of Public Resolution No. 24. The language therein provides that "the Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1 which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration." The section further reads: "After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living."

My hope that the wages of relief workers in the North may be maintained is based upon the word substantially in the quotation above, and further upon the references in the differences in the cost of living. It is my feeling, because the relief workers of the South are comparatively few in number, that the maintenance of the present relief-worker wage in other parts of the country would not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person.

I think that the language of the law might allow you a sufficient leeway and authority to maintain the wage which has been paid in the North. I know that was the intent of the committee and the Senate.

While I feel that in at least a few instances the salaries of nonrelief administrative employees are too high, I do not think that the wages paid to the certified relief workers are in any instance too high. Actually these men receive a subsistence wage, and to cut it down as the result of the amended law would work a terrible hardship on thousands of families.

I shall appreciate such consideration as you may give this suggestion, and I will be additionally grateful if I may have some word from you concerning the matter.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS T. MALONEY,
United States Senate.

DAIRY INDUSTRY OF WISCONSIN

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks, and in connection therewith I offer first to be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a joint resolution of the Assembly and Senate of Wisconsin, part of which I desire to read. The resolution reads in part:

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions and urges the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase dairy and cheese products of Wisconsin for distribution to relief agencies, so that the market and prices for the farmer will be protected and restored and will not be cudgeled by adverse surpluses.

I offer the entire resolution for the RECORD.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 22

Joint resolution memorializing the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase dairy and cheese products of Wisconsin

Whereas the production of milk is the most important part of Wisconsin agriculture, leading all States by supplying 19 percent of the milk used in the manufacture of dairy products in the United States; and

Whereas thousands of Wisconsin farmers and their families labor for their livelihood and depend upon the administration to maintain favorable marketing conditions for their dairy and cheese products; and

Whereas during the last year there has been an unprecedented quantity of cheese and butter held in cold storage which has been wielded by the unscrupulous to beat down the prices of these food products to a level that will not cover the cost of production; and

Whereas these inventories should be reduced and released in order to make available large supplies of food to the undernourished babies and children and stinted and peaked underprivileged men of the country; and

Whereas the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation is authorized and enabled to strike a direct blow at the economic paradox which has choked the farmers of the country with a superabundance of food products while many of the unemployed and persons on relief have gone hungry; and

Whereas these supplies of cheese and butter and milk should be procured and distributed immediately so as to scotch and eliminate these price-depressing surpluses from the usual and ordinary course of business by encouraging and developing the consumption of these dairy products and thereby restore a fair level of return to the dairy farmer: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions and urges the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase dairy and cheese products of Wisconsin for distribution to relief agencies so that the market and prices for the farmer will be protected and restored and will not be cudgeled by adverse surpluses; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, and to each Wisconsin Member of Congress.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I was particularly interested in the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], who referred to the situation of the W. P. A. workers. I wish to say that the wage paid to the W. P. A. workers provided by the act of Congress is a great deal higher than the average farmer in Wisconsin is making from his farm. We must not forget the folks who produce and the folks who are paying the taxes and carrying the load.

FARM MORATORIUMS

Mr. President, at this time I also wish to present for the RECORD and have referred and printed as a part of my remarks a joint resolution of the Assembly and Senate of Wisconsin relating to the matter of farm moratorium.

Away back in March, I introduced into the Senate of the United States a joint resolution in which I asked that the Federal Government treat the farmers of the United States in a decent manner, asking, in other words, that a moratorium statute be put into effect to the end that the mortgages which were held by the Government be not put into a squeeze play, so to speak, thus depriving the farmers of their homes. That resolution has died, apparently. We have asked the committee for action. We have received none. Recently the Senate and Assembly of Wisconsin passed a joint resolution in which they called the attention of the country to this situation.

I offer at this time the resolution in connection with my remarks, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Assembly Joint Resolution 117, A

Joint resolution relating to petitioning Federal departments, institutions, and agencies which have made loans upon real estate in this State to submit to this State's moratorium and mediation laws relative to foreclosures

Whereas chapter 5, laws of the special session of 1937, repealed subsection (1) of section 281.21 of the statutes which subsection had exempted Federal departments, institutions, and agencies from the provisions of the moratorium and mediation laws; and

Whereas on May 9, 1939, the supreme court of our State in the case of Home Owners' Loan Corporation v. R. W. Robinson and wife held that the repeal of said subsection (1) could not be upheld as emergency legislation; that the legislature was without power to pass a law which would retroactively affect loans made by Federal agencies during the time they were not subject to moratorium and mediation laws; and

Whereas such holding will result in the heaping of additional hardships upon home, farm, and other real estate owners of this State where such property has been given as security for loans from Federal departments, institutions, or agencies unless the latter submit to the provisions of this State's moratorium and mediation laws: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature hereby petitions the various Federal departments, institutions, and agencies foreclosing or contemplating the foreclosing of loans held by them and secured by homes, farms, and other real estate in this State, to voluntarily submit to the provisions of the moratorium and mediation laws of this State relating to foreclosures; be it further

Resolved, That duly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof, and to the Federal departments, institutions, and agencies which have lent money upon real estate in this State.

EMIL SCHRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, under the reorganization plan adopted by the Congress the Honorable Jesse Jones, of Texas, has been selected by the President as Administrator of the Federal Loan Agency. I doubt if there is a Member of the Senate who does not applaud that appointment.

However, I rise today to talk about the Honorable Emil Schram, who has been selected as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Mr. Jones.

It has been my good fortune to know Mr. Schram for a number of years. His home is in my congressional district. I know of his success as a farmer and overseer of a large drainage district in the Illinois Valley. Perservance and industry in what at times seemed an almost hopeless task finally conquered the elements, and today he owns some of the finest lands in the Illinois Valley.

The same perserverance, courage, and industry are the characteristics which have made him a success as a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Courteous but firm, sympathetic but careful, he has made an enviable record in the handling of loans and credit for the rehabilitation of drainage districts throughout the Nation. As managing director of the Disaster Loan Corporation he disbursed millions upon millions of dollars in the flooded areas of the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and other parts of the country. In addition to this, he has given his time and energy to his duties as President of the Board of Trustees of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Federal National Mortgage Association, and as a member of the Board of Directors of the Federal Prisons Industries representing agriculture.

I prophesy that as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Mr. Schram will be a worthy successor to Mr. Jones, and will carry out the program laid down by the Congress of the United States in a highly efficient, economical, and businesslike manner.

Mr. President, in this morning's New York Times there appears an article written by Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner entitled "Schram a Link for Businessmen with New Deal as Head of R. F. C." I ask unanimous consent that this article be placed in the RECORD following these remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 17, 1939]

SCHRAM A LINK FOR BUSINESSMEN WITH NEW DEAL AS HEAD OF R. F. C.—URGED BY JESSE JONES AS SUCCESSOR, INDIANAN HAS HAD SUCCESS AS A FARMER AND IN MANAGING FEDERAL LOAN AGENCIES

(By Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner)

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Kipling's line "East is east and west is west, and never the twain shall meet" rather accurately describes the relations between the New Dealers and their rivals, the orthodox Democrats, and old-line Government officials. Casual encounters are rare enough, except when Harry Hopkins plays bridge with Jesse Jones; and it is almost unheard of for any individual to keep a foot in both camps.

However, Emil Schram, slated to be the new chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, manages to combine a good many of the best qualities of each group of his friends. He is probably the only man in the Government whose work is admired equally warmly by Jesse H. Jones and Thomas Corcoran, and he is certainly the only one whose career has been jointly fostered by this ill-assorted pair.

Mr. Schram's elevation to the R. F. C. chairmanship is significant for that very reason. With regard to general policy, he may be expected to follow the liberal principles dear to New Deal hearts. With regard to specific methods he will imitate the businesslike habits of his extremely able and successful predecessor in the chairmanship. Meanwhile, lowering of R. F. C. interest rates, which is likely to be carried through by him, will intimately affect all business and particularly banking.

Mr. Schram is a tall, middle-aged, slightly bald man, with a deep voice, a pleasant manner, and a gift for self-containment. He looks like a businessman from a small city, but the truth is that he first made his mark as a farmer.

TURNED SWAMP INTO FARM

He is the third generation in a family of German immigrants. The grandfather, a skilled wood carver, settled in Peru, Ind., a woodworking center. There Emil Schram was born, got his schooling, and after high school went to work in the office of J. O. Cole, coal and timber operator. Mr. Cole was impressed by the boy. First he made him bookkeeper. When young Schram was 21 Mr. Cole chose him to develop a 5,000-acre tract of semiswampland on the banks of the Illinois River.

The land was exceedingly rich but almost under water. Emil Schram, who knew nothing of farming, had first to get it drained, protected from the river by levees, and prepared for planting. Then he had to make it produce.

In the first year the land yielded 6,000 bushels of corn; in the second, 13,000 bushels; and, in the third, 100,000 bushels. Last year the yield was 140,000 bushels of corn and 35,000 of wheat. Many of its 20 tenant families had celebrated their thirtieth anniversary on the property, and the land was still making a fair return.

The fact that his farm was on swampland was what brought Emil Schram into the New Deal. Drainage and irrigation districts and their problems are an old story in Washington. During the Hoover administation they got into trouble by the score and Mr. Schram, who was chairman of the National Drainage Association, used to struggle to get something done for them. His own levee had been "topped" by the turbulent Illinois, and he desperately needed help himself.

GOT LOAN FOR LAND DRAINAGE

The New Deal, always more susceptible to such pleas, gave in to Mr. Schram. Loans for the drainers and irrigators were arranged at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Jesse Jones asked Mr. Schram to take charge of the program. It was a difficult job, for many of the districts were broke already, but Mr. Schram carried it through with complete success.

Then the Electric Home and Farm Authority, a Tennessee Valley Authority subsidiary financing sales of electrical equipment to home owners, got itself into serious difficulties. It was adopted, as a sort of foster child, by Tommy Corcoran, who still calls it "Little Eva." Brought over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it was put under Mr. Schram, who actually managed to put it on a paying basis. Currently Electric Home and Farm Authority's depleted capital has been restored, electrical appliances are selling like hot cakes, and its $10,000,000 in loans outstanding are in first-class shape.

This second success was quickly noted by Jesse Jones, who had Mr. Schram named to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation board sometime ago. Last year, managing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's Business Loan Department as well as Electric Home and Farm Authority, Mr. Schram doubled the department's previous business.

Thus, when Mr. Jones was promoted to be Federal Loan Administrator, he needed no prompting to tell the President that Emil Schram was "the best man available" to succeed him at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. His Reconstruction Finance Corporation regime will serve as an immensely interesting test of whether strictly businesslike methods and New Deal policies can be effectively combined.

PROHIBITION OF BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING OF MOTION-PICTURE FILMS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire to what bill does the Chair refer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To Senate bill 280, known as the anti-block-booking and blind-selling bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we are not ready for a vote now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah desire the floor on the bill?

Mr. KING. I should like to have the floor, but I promised to yield to the Senator from Louisiana for a conference report.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on House bill 6577, the District of Columbia tax bill, and ask unanimous consent that it be immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"APPLICATION OF TITLE

"SECTION 1. The provisions of this title shall apply to the taxable year 1939 and succeeding taxable years, except that in the case of a taxable year beginning in 1938 and ending in 1939 the income taxable under this title shall be that fraction of the income for the entire fiscal year equal to the number of days remaining in the fiscal year after January 1, 1939, divided by three hundred and sixty-five: Provided, however, That if the taxpayer's records properly reflect the income for that part of the fiscal year falling in the calendar year 1939, then the portion of the fiscal year's income taxable hereunder shall be the portion received or accrued during the calendar year 1939.

"IMPOSITION OF TAX

"SEC. 2. (a) Tax on individuals: There is hereby levied for each taxable year upon the taxable income of every individual domiciled in the District of Columbia on the last day of the taxable year a tax at the following rates:

"One per centum on the first $5,000 of taxable income.

"One and one-half per centum on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Two per centum on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Two and one-half per centum on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Three per centum on the taxable income in excess of $20,000.

"(b) Tax on corporations: There is hereby levied for each taxable year upon the taxable income from District of Columbia sources of every corporation, whether domestic or foreign (except those organizations expressly exempt under paragraph (d) of this section), a tax at the rate of 5 per centum thereof.

"(c) Definition of 'taxable income': As used in this section, the term 'taxable income' means the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 9 of this title.

"(d) Exemptions from tax: There shall be exempt from taxation under this title the following organizations: Corporations, including any community chest, fund, foundation, cemetery, association, teachers' retirement fund association, church, or club, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, educational, or social purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation; and labor organizations, trade associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, citizens' associations or organizations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual; banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and companies, incorporated or otherwise, which guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, all of which pay taxes upon gross premiums or earnings under existing laws of the District of Columbia; voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents, if (1) no part of their net earnings inures (other than such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (2) 85 per centum or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of making such payments and meeting expenses; and corporations organized under Act of Congress, if such corporations are instrumentalities of the United States.

"NET INCOME

"SEC. 3. Definition: The term 'net income' means the gross income of a taxpayer less the deductions allowed by this title.

"GROSS INCOME AND EXCLUSIONS THEREFROM

"SEC. 4. (a) Of individuals: The words "gross income", as used in this title, include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal services of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, including salaries, wages, and compensation paid by the United States to its officers and employees to the extent the same is not immune from taxation under the Constitution, or income derived from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership, or use of, or interest in, such property; also from rent, royalities, interest, dividends, securities, or transactions of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits, and income derived from any source whatever.

"(b) Of corporations: In the case of any corporation, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the District of Columbia. The proper apportionment and allocation of income with respect to sources of income within and without the District may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners.

"(c) Exclusions from gross income: The following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

"(1) Life insurance: Amounts received under a life-insurance contract paid by reason of the death of the insured, whether in a single sum or otherwise (but if such amounts are held by the insurer under an agreement to pay interest thereon, the interest payments shall be included in gross income).

"(2) Annuities, and so forth: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts and other than amounts received as annuities) under a life-insurance or endowment contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income. Amounts received as annuity under an annuity or endowment contract shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 per centum of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such year), until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title in respect to such annuity equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity. In the case of a transfer for a valuable consideration, by assignment or otherwise, of a life-insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, or any interest therein, only the actual value of such consideration and the amount of the premiums and other sums subsequently paid by the transferee shall be exempt from taxation under paragraph (1) or this paragraph.

"(3) Gifts, bequests, and devises: The value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance (but the income from such property shall be included in gross income).

"(4) Tax-free interest: Interest upon (A) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or (B) obligations of a corporation organized under Act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or (C) the obligations of the United States or its possessions

"(5) Compensation for injuries or sickness: Amounts received, through accident or health insurance or under workmen's compensation acts, as compensation for personal injuries or sickness, plus the amount of any damages received, whether by suit or agreement on account of such injuries or sickness.

"(6) Ministers: The rental value of a dwelling house and appurtenances thereof furnished to a minister of the gospel as part of his compensation.

"(7) Income exempt under treaty: Income of any kind to the extent required by any treaty obligation of the United States.

"(8) Dividends from China Trade Act corporations: In the case of a person, amounts distributed as dividends to or for his benefit by a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, if, at the time of such distribution, he is a resident of China, and the equitable right to the income of the shares of stock of the corporation is in good faith vested in him.

"(9) Income of foreign governments.

"DEDUCTIONS FROM GROSS INCOME

"SEC. 5. (a) Items of deduction: In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

"(1) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

"(2) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness.

"(3) Taxes: Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year, except—

"(A) income taxes;

"(B) estate, inheritance, legacy, succession, and gift taxes;

"(C) taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; but this paragraph shall not exclude the allowance as a deduction of so much of such taxes as is properly allocable to maintenance or interest charges; and

"(D) taxes paid to any State or Territory on property, business, or occupation the income from which is not taxable under this title.

"(4) Losses in trade or business: Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in trade or business, the income from which is subject to taxation under this title.

"(5) Losses in transactions for profit: Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in any transaction entered into for profit would be subject to taxation under this title, though not connected with the trade or business.

"(6) Intercompany dividends: In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

"(7) Bad debts: Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year or, in the discretion of the assessor, a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts; and when satisfied that a debt is recoverable only in part, the assessor may allow such debt, in an amount not in excess of the part charged off within the taxable year, as a deduction.

"(8) Insurance premiums: All fire-, tornado-, and casualty-insurance premiums paid during the taxable year in connection with property held for investment or business.

"(9) Depreciation: A reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence; and including in the case of natural resources allowances for depletion as permitted by reasonable rules and regulations which the Commissioners are hereby authorized to promulgate.

"(10) Charitable contributions: Contributions or gifts actually paid within the taxable year to or for the use of any corporation, or trust, or community fund, or foundation, maintaining activities in the District of Columbia and organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, military, or educational purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual: Provided, That such deductions shall be allowed only in an amount which in all of the above cases combined does not exceed 15 per centum of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subparagraph.

"(11) Wagering losses: Losses from wagering transactions shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such transactions.

"(b) Allocation of deductions: In the case of a taxpayer, other than an individual, the deductions allowed in this section shall be allowed only for and to the extent that they are connected with income arising from sources within the District and taxable under this title to a nonresident taxpayer; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources of income within and without the District shall be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners. The so-called charitable contribution deduction allowed by subparagraph (10) of paragraph (a) of this section shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the District.

"(c) Corporations and nonresident individuals to file return of total income: A corporation shall receive the benefits of the deductions allowed to it under this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the assessor a true and accurate return of its total income received from all sources, whether within or without the District.

"GAINS OR LOSSES FROM SALE OF ASSETS

"SEC. 6. (a) Gain or loss in capital assets not recognized: No gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset shall be recognized in the computation of net income under this title. For the purpose of this title, 'capital assets' means property held by the taxpayer for more than two years (whether or not connected with his trade or business) but does not include stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of a taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year, or property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of his trade or business.

"(b) Gain or loss in assets other than capital: Gains or losses from the sale or exchange of property other than a capital asset shall be treated in the same manner as other income or deductible losses, and the basis for computing such gain or loss shall be the cost of such property or, if acquired by some means other than purchase, the fair market value thereof at the date of acquisition.

"EXCHANGES

"SEC. 7. Where property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange for the purpose of determining the gain or loss shall be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value; but when in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation a taxpayer receives, in place of stock or securities owned by him, new stock or securities or the reorganized, merged, or consolidated corporation, no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange until the new stock or securities are sold or realized upon and the gain or loss is definitely ascertained, until which time the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock and securities exchanged; provided such reorganization, merger, or consolidation is a 'reorganization' within the meaning of the term 'reorganization' as defined in section 112 (g) of the Federal Revenue Act of 1936.

"DEDUCTIONS NOT ALLOWED

"SEC. 8. (a) General rule: In computing net income no deductions shall be allowed in any case in respect to—

"(1) personal, living, or family expenses;

"(2) any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate;

"(3) any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made; and

"(4) premiums paid on any life-insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy.

"(b) Holders of life or terminable interest: Amounts paid under the laws of any State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country as income to the holder of a life or terminable interest acquired by gift, bequest, or inheritance shall not be reduced or diminished by any deduction for shrinkage (by whatever name called) in the value of such interest due to the lapse of time, nor by any deduction allowed by this Act (except the deductions provided for in subsections (1) and (m) of section 23 of the Federal Revenue Act of 1926 as amended) for the purpose of computing the net income of an estate or trust but not allowed under the laws of such State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country for the purpose of computing the income to which such holder is entitled.

"PERSONAL EXEMPTIONS AND CREDIT FOR DEPENDENTS

"SEC. 9. (a) Credits: There shall be allowed to individuals the following credits against net income:

"(1) Personal exemption: In the case of a single person or married person not living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $1,000; in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $2,500; a husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption, the amount of such personal exemption shall be $2,500. If such husband and wife make separate returns the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them.

"(2) Credit for dependents: $400 for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer if such dependent person is under 18 years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

"(b) Change of status: If the status of the taxpayer, insofar as it affects personal exemption or credit for dependents, changes during the taxable year, the personal exemption and credit shall be apportioned under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, in accordance with the number of months before and after such change. For the purpose of such apportionment a fractional portion of a month shall be disregarded unless it amounts to more than half a month in which case it shall be considered as a month.

"(c) In return for fractional part of year: In the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year, the personal exemption and credit for dependents shall be reduced respectively to amounts which bear the same ratio to the full credits provided as the number of months in the period for which the return is made bears to 12 months.

"ACCOUNTING PERIODS

"SEC. 10. The net income shall be computed upon the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period (fiscal year or calendar year, as the case may be) in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if the method employed does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made in accordance with such method as in the opinion of the assessor does clearly reflect the income. If the taxpayer's annual accounting period is other than a fiscal year as defined in section 43 or if the taxpayer has no annual accounting period or does not keep books, the net income shall be computed on the basis of the calendar year. If the taxpayer makes a Federal income-tax return, his income shall be computed, for the purposes of this title, on the basis of the same calendar or fiscal year as in such Federal income-tax return.

"PERIOD IN WHICH ITEMS OF GROSS INCOME INCLUDED

"SEC. 11. The amount of all items of gross income shall be included in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer unless, under methods of accounting permitted under section 10, any such amounts are to be properly accounted for as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be included, in computing net income for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly includible in respect to such period or a prior period.

"PERIOD FOR WHICH DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS TAKEN

"SEC. 12. The deductions and credits provided for in this title shall be taken for the taxable year in which 'paid or accrued' or 'paid or incurred', dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed unless, in order to clearly reflect the income, the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be allowed as deductions and credits for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly allowable in respect to such period or a prior period.

"INSTALLMENT BASIS

"SEC. 13. (a) Dealers in personal property: Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, a person who regularly sells or otherwise disposes of personal property on the installment plan may return as income therefrom in any taxable year that proportion of the installment payments actually received in that year which the gross profit realized or to be realized when payment is completed bears to the total contract price.

"(b) Sales of realty and casual sales of personalty: In the case of (1) a casual sale or other casual disposition of personal property (other than property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year) for a price exceeding $1,000, or (2) of a sale or other disposition of real property, if in either case the initial payments do not exceed 30 per centum of the selling price, the income may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, be returned on the basis and in the manner above prescribed in this section. As used in this section the term 'initial payments' means the payments received in cash or property other than evidences of indebtedness of the purchaser during the taxable period in which the sale or other disposition is made.

"(c) Change from accrual to installment basis: If a taxpayer entitled to the benefits of subsection (a) elects for any taxable year to report his net income on the installment basis, then in computing his income for the year of change or any subsequent year, amounts actually received during any such year on account of sales or other disposition of property made in any prior year shall not be excluded.

"(d) Gain or loss upon disposition of installment obligations: If an installmnt obligation is satisfied at other than its face value or distributed, transmitted, sold, or otherwise disposed of, gain or loss shall result in the extent of the difference between the basis of the obligation and (1) in the case of satisfaction of other than face value or a sale or exchange—the amount realized, or (2) in case of a distribution, transmission, or disposition otherwise than by sale or exchange—the fair market value of the obligation at the time of such distribution, transmission, or disposition. Any gain or loss so resulting shall be considered as resulting from the sale or exchange of the property in respect to which the installment obligation was received. The basis of the obligation shall be the excess of the face value of the obligation over an amount equal to the income which would be returnable were the obligation satisfied in full. This paragraph shall not apply to the transmission at death of installment obligations if there is filed with the assessor, at such time as he may by regulation prescribe, a bond in such amount and with such sureties as he may deem necessary, conditioned upon the return as income, by the person receiving any payment in such obligations, of the same proportion of such payment as would be returnable as income by the decedent if he had lived and had received such payment.

"INVENTORIES

"SEC. 14. Whenever in the opinion of the assessor the use of inventories is necessary in order clearly to determine the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the assessor may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and as most clearly reflecting the income.

"INDIVIDUAL RETURNS

"SEC. 15. (a) Requirement: The following individuals shall each make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe:

"(1) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife;

"(2) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife; and

"(3) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income.

"(b) Husband and wife: If a husband and wife living together have an aggregate net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, or an aggregate gross income for such year of $5,000 or over—

"(1) Each shall make a return, or

"(2) The income of each shall be included in a single joint return, in which case the tax shall be computed on the aggregate income.

"(c) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own return, the return shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

"(d) Fiduciaries: For returns to be made by fiduciaries, see section 23.

"CORPORATION RETURNS

"SEC. 16. Every corporation not expressly exempt from the tax imposed by this title shall make a return and pay a filing fee of $25 which shall be credited against the tax. Such returns shall state specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title, and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer, and by the treasurer, assistant treasurer, or chief accounting officer. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

"TAXPAYER TO MAKE RETURN WHETHER RETURN FORM IS SENT OR NOT

"SEC. 17. Blank forms of returns for income shall be supplied by the assessor. It shall be the duty of the assessor to obtain an income-tax return from every taxpayer who is liable under the law to file such return; but this duty shall in no manner diminish the obligation of the taxpayer to file a return without being called upon to do so.

"TIME AND PLACE FOR FILING RETURNS

"SEC. 18. All returns of income for the preceding taxable year shall be made to the assessor on or before the 15th day of March in each year, except that such returns, if made on the basis of a fiscal year, shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of such fiscal year, unless such fiscal year has expired in the calendar year 1939 prior to the approval of this Act, in which event returns shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the approval of this Act.

"EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING RETURNS

"SEC. 19. The assessor may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing income returns whenever in his judgment good cause exists and shall keep a record of every such extension. Except in case of a taxpayer who is abroad, no such extension shall be granted for more than six months, and in no case for more than one year. In the event time for filing a return is deferred, the taxpayer is hereby required to pay, as a part of the tax, an amount equal to 6 per centum per annum on the tax ultimately assessed from the time the return was due until it is actually filed in the office of the assessor.

"ALLOCATION OF INCOME AND DEDUCTIONS

"SEC. 20. In any of two or more organizations, trades, or businesses (whether or not incorporated, whether or not organized in the District of Columbia, and whether or not affiliated) owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, the assessor is authorized to distribute, apportion, or allocate gross income or deductions between or among such organizations, trades, or businesses, if he determines that such distribution, apportionment, or allocation is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of any of such organizations, trades, or businesses. The provisions of this section shall apply, but shall not be limited in application to any case of a common carrier by railroad subject to the Interstate Commerce Act and jointly owned or controlled directly or indirectly by two or more common carriers by railroad subject to said Act.

"PUBLICITY OF RETURNS

"SEC. 21. (a) Secrecy of returns: Except to any official of the District, having a right thereto in his official capacity, it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the District to divulge or make known in any manner the amount of income or any particulars set forth or disclosed in any report or return under this title.

"(b) When copies may be furnished: Neither the original nor a copy of the return desired for use in litigations in court shall be furnished where the District of Columbia is not interested in the result whether or not the request is contained in an order of the court: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the furnishing to a taxpayer of a copy of his return upon the payment of a fee of $1.

"(c) Reciprocal exchange of information with States: Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the assessor may permit the proper officer of any State imposing an income tax or his authorized representative to inspect income-tax returns, filed with the assessor or may furnish to such officer or representative a copy of any income-tax return provided such State grants substantially similar privileges to the assessor or his representative or to the proper officer of the District charged with the administration of this title.

"(d) Publication of statistics: Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular reports and the items thereof, or of the publication of delinquent lists showing the names of taxpayers who have failed to pay their taxes at the time and in the manner provided by law, together with any relevant information which in the opinion of the assessor may assist in the collection of such delinquent taxes.

"(e) Penalties for violation of this section: Any offense against the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"RETURNS TO BE PRESERVED

"SEC. 22. Reports and returns received by the assessor under the provisions of this title shall be preserved for six years and thereafter until the assessor orders them to be destroyed.

"FIDUCIARY RETURNS

"SEC. 23. (a) Requirement of return: Every fiduciary (except a receiver appointed by authority of law in possession of part only of the property of an individual) shall make under oath a return for any of the following individuals, estates, or trusts for which he acts, stating specifically the items of gross income thereof and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe:

"(1) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband and wife;

"(2) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife;

"(3) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income;

"(4) Every estate or trust the net income of which for the taxable year is $1,000 or over;

"(5) Every estate or trust the gross income of which for the taxable year is $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of the net income.

"(b) Joint fiduciaries: Under such regulations as the Commissioners may prescribe, a return by one of two or more joint fiduciaries and filed in the office of the assessor shall be sufficient compliance with the above requirement. Such fiduciary shall make oath (1) that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of the individual, estate, or trust for which the return is made, to enable him to make the return, and (2) that the return is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct.

"(c) Law applicable to fiduciaries: Any fiduciary required to make a return under this title shall be subject to all the provisions of law which apply to individuals.

"ESTATES AND TRUSTS

"SEC. 24. (a) Application of tax: The taxes imposed by this title upon individual shall apply to the income of estates or of any kind of property held in trust, including—

"(1) income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained person or persons with contingent interests, and income accumulated or held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust;

"(2) income which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct;

"(3) income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate; and

"(4) income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiaries or accumulated.

"(b) Computation of tax: The tax shall be computed upon the net income of the estate or trust, and shall be paid by the fiduciary, except as provided in paragraph (e) of this section (relating to revocable trusts) and paragraph (f) of this section (relating to income for benefit of the grantor).

"(c) Net income: The net income of the estate or trust shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as in the case of an individual, except that—

"(1) there shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and the amount of the income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the beneficiaries whether distributed to them or not. Any amount allowed as a deduction under this paragraph shall not be allowed as a deduction under subsection (2) of this section in the same or any succeeding taxable year;

"(2) in the case of income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate, and in the case of income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiary or accumulated, there shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year, which is properly paid or credited during such year to any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the legatee, heir, or beneficiary;

"(3) there shall be allowed as a deduction (in lieu of the deductions for charitable contributions authorized by section 5 (a) (10)) any part of the gross income, without limitation, which pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating a trust, is during the taxable year paid or permanently set aside for the purposes and in the manner provided in section 5 (a) (10) or is to be used exclusively for the purposes enumerated in section 5 (a) (10).

"(d) Different taxable year: If the taxable year of a beneficiary is different from that of the estate or trust, the amount which he is required, under subparagraph (1) of paragraph (c) of this section, to include in computing his net income, shall be based upon the income of the estate or trust for any taxable year of the estate or trust ending within or with his taxable year.

"(e) Revocable trusts: Where at any time the power to revest in the grantor title to any part of the corpus of the trust is vested—

"(1) in the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom; or

"(2) in any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom, then the income of such part of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

"(f) Income for benefit of grantor: Where any part of the income of a trust—

"(1) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be, held or accumulated for future distribution to the grantor; or

"(2) may, in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income, be distributed to the grantor; or

"(3) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be applied to the payment of premiums upon policies of insurance on the life of the grantor (except policies of insurance irrevocably payable for the purposes and in the manner specified in section 5 (a) (10), relating to the so-called 'charitable contribution' deduction);

"then such part of the income of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

"(g) Definition of 'in discretion of grantor': As used in this section, the term 'in the discretion of the grantor' means 'in the discretion of the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of the part of the income in question.'

"(h) Income from intangible personal property held by trust: Income from intangible personal property held by any trust company or by any national bank situated in the District (with or without an individual trustee, resident or nonresident) in trust to pay the income for the time being to, or to accumulate or apply such income for the benefit of any nonresident of the District, shall not be taxable hereunder if—

"(1) such beneficial owner or cestui que trust was at the time of the creation of the trust a nonresident of the District; and

"(2) the testator, settlor, or grantor was also at the time of the creation of the trust a nonresident of the District.

"PARTNERSHIPS

"SEC. 25. (a) Partners only taxable: Individuals carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and no income tax shall be assessable hereunder upon the net income of any partnership. All such income shall be assessable to the individual partners; it shall be reported by such partners as individuals upon their respective individual income returns; and it shall be taxed to them as individuals along with their other income at the rate and in the manner herein provided for the taxation of income received by individuals. There shall be included in computing the net income of each partner his distributive share, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the partnership for the taxable year; or if his net income for such taxable year is computed upon the basis of a period different from that upon the basis of which the net income of the partnership is computed, then his distributive share of the net income of the partnership for any accounting period of the partnership ending within the taxable year upon the basis of which the partner's net income is computed.

"(b) Partnership return: Every partnership shall make a return for each taxable year stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and shall include in the return the names and the addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed, and the amount of the distributive share of each individual. The return shall be sworn to by any one of the partners.

"PAYMENT OF TAX

"SEC. 26. (a) Time of payment: The total amount of tax imposed by this title shall be paid on the 15th day of March following the close of the calendar year, or, if the return shall be made on the basis of a fiscal year, then on the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year, except a fiscal year which expired in the calendar year 1939 prior to the approval of this act, in which event the tax shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month following the approval of this act.

"(b) Extension of time for payments: At the request of the taxpayer the assessor may extend the time for payment by the taxpayer of the amount determined as the tax, for a period not to exceed six months from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax or an installment thereof. In such case the amount in respect to which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension.

"(c) Voluntary advance payment: A tax imposed by this title, or any installment thereof, may be paid, at the election of the taxpayer, prior to the date prescribed for its payment.

"(d) Fractional part of cent: In the payment of any tax under this title a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

"(e) Payment to collector and receipts: The tax provided under this title shall be collected by the collector and the revenues derived therefrom shall be turned over to the Treasury of the United States for the credit of the District in the same manner as other revenues are turned over to the United States Treasury for the credit to the District. The collector shall, upon written request, give to the person making payment of any income tax a full written or printed receipt therefor.

"TAX A PERSONAL DEBT

"SEC. 27. Every tax imposed by this title, and all increases, interest, and penalties thereof, shall become, from the time it is due and payable, a personal debt, from the person or persons liable to pay the same to the District, and shall be entitled to the same priority as other District taxes; and the taxes levied hereunder and the interest and penalties thereon shall be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

"INFORMATION FROM THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

"SEC. 28. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed by this title.

"ASSESSOR TO ADMINISTER

"SEC. 29. (a) Duties of assessor: The assessor is hereby required to administer the provisions of this title. The assessor shall prescribe forms identical with those utilized by the Federal Government, except to the extent required by differences between this title and its application and the Federal Act and its application. He shall apply as far as practicable the administrative and judicial interpretations of the Federal income-tax law so that computations of income for purposes of this title shall be, as nearly as practicable, identical with the calculations required for Federal income-tax purposes. As soon as practicable after the return is filed the assessor shall examine it and shall determine the correct amount of the tax.

"(b) Statements and special returns: Every taxpayer liable to any tax imposed by this title shall keep such records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations as the Commissioners from time to time may prescribe. Whenever the assessor judges it necessary he may require any taxpayer, by notice served upon him, to make a return, render under oath such statements, or keep such records as he deems sufficient to show whether or not such taxpayer is liable to tax under this title and the extent of such liability.

"(c) Examination of books and witnesses: The assessor, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making an estimate of the taxable income of any taxpayer, is authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda of any person bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the assessor shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any members of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the assessor may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court. Any person in custody or control of any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in such returns, who shall refuse to permit the examination by the assessor or any person designated by him of any such books, papers, records, or memoranda, or who shall obstruct or hinder the assessor or any person designated by him in the examination of any books, papers, records, or memoranda, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $300. All prosecutions under this section shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia.

"(d) Return by assessor: If any person fails to make and file a return at the time prescribed by law or by regulations made under authority of law, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return, the assessor shall make the return from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise. Any return so made and subscribed by the assessor shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

"ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF DEFICIENCIES

"SEC. 30. Definition of 'deficiency': As used in this title in respect of a tax imposed by this title 'deficiency' means—

"(1) the amount by which the tax imposed by this title exceeds the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return; but the amount so shown on the return shall first be increased by the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency, and decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax; or

"(2) if no amount is shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return, or if no return is made by the taxpayer, then the amount by which the tax exceeds the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency; but such amounts previously assessed, or collected without assessment, shall first be decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax.

"DETERMINATION AND ASSESSMENT OF DEFICIENCY

"SEC. 31. If a deficiency in tax is determined by the assessor, the taxpayer shall be notified thereof and given a period of not less than thirty days, after such notice is sent by registered mail, in which to file a protest and show cause or reason why the deficiency should not be paid. Opportunity for hearing shall be granted by the assessor, and a final decision thereon shall be made as quickly as practicable. Any deficiency in tax then determined to be due shall be assessed and paid, together with any addition to the tax applicable thereto, within ten days after notice and demand by the collector. The taxpayer may appeal from such assessment to the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of title VI of an Act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes, approved May 16, 1938.

"JEOPARDY ASSESSMENT

"SEC. 32. (a) Authority for making: If the assessor believes that the collection of any tax imposed by this title will be jeopardized by delay, he shall, whether or not the time otherwise prescribed by law for making return and paying such tax has expired, immediately assess such tax (together with all interest and penalties, the assessment of which is provided for by law). Such tax, penalties, and interest shall thereupon become immediately due and payable, and immediate notice and demand shall be made by the collector for the payment thereof. Upon failure or refusal to pay such tax, penalty, and interest, collection thereof by distraint shall be lawful.

"(b) Bond to stay collection: The collection of the whole or any part of the amount of such assessment may be stayed by filing with the collector a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount as to which the stay is desired, and with such sureties as the collector deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the amount, the collection of which is stayed, at the time at which, but for this section, such amount would be due.

"PERIOD OF LIMITATION UPON ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION

"SEC. 33. (a) General rule: Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section—

"(1) The amount of income taxes imposed by this title shall be assessed within two years after the return is filed, and no proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such taxes shall be begun after the expiration of such period.

"(2) In the case of income received during the lifetime of a decedent, or by his estate during the period of administration, or by a corporation, the tax shall be assessed, and any proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such tax shall be begun, within twelve months after written request therefor (filed after the return is made) by the executor, administrator, or other fiduciary representing the estate of such decedent, or by the corporation, but not after the expiration of two years after the return is filed. This subparagraph shall not apply in the case of a corporation unless—

"(A) such written request notifies the assessor that the corporation contemplates dissolution at or before the expiration of such twelve-month period; and

"(B) the dissolution is in good faith begun before the expiration of such twelve-month period; and

"(C) the dissolution is completed.

"(3) If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein which is in excess of 25 per centum of the amount of gross income stated in the return, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within five years after the return was filed.

"(4) For the purposes of subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3), a return filed before the last day prescribed by law for the filing thereof shall be considered as filed on such last day.

"(b) False return: In the case of a false or fraudulent return with intent to evade tax or of a failure to file a return the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time.

"(c) Waiver: Where before the expiration of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) for the assessment of the tax, both the assessor and the taxpayer have consented in writing to its assessment after such time, the tax may be assessed at any time prior to the expiration of the period agreed upon. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

"(d) Collection after assessment: Where the assessment of any income tax imposed by this title has been made within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto, such tax may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court, but only if begun (A) within three years after the assessment of the tax or (B) prior to the expiration of any period for collection agreed upon in writing by the assessor and the taxpayer before the expiration of such three-year period. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

"REFUNDS

"SEC. 34. Except as otherwise provided in section 31 of this title, where there has been an overpayment of any tax imposed by this title, the amount of such overpayment shall be refunded to the taxpayer. No such refund shall be allowed after two years from the time the tax is paid unless before the expiration of such period a claim therefor is filed by the taxpayer. The amount of the refund shall not exceed the portion of the tax paid during the two years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or, if no claim was filed, then during the two years immediately preceding the allowance of the refund. Every claim for refund must be in writing, under oath; must state the specific grounds upon which the claim is founded, and must be filed with the assessor. If the assessor disallows any part of a claim for refund, he shall send to the taxpayer by registered mail a notice of the part of the claim so disallowed. Within ninety days after the mailing of such notice, the taxpayer may file an appeal with the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of title IX of an Act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes, approved May 16, 1938. The remedy provided to the taxpayer under this section shall not be deemed to take away from the taxpayer any remedy which he might have under any other provision of law; but no suit by the taxpayer for the recovery of any part of such tax shall be instituted in any court if the taxpayer has elected to file an appeal in accordance with this section.

"CLOSING AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 35. The assessor is authorized to enter into an agreement with any person relating to the liability of such person (or of the person or estate for whom he acts) in respect of any income tax for any period ending prior to the date of the agreement. If such agreement is approved by the Commissioners within such time as may be stated in such agreement, or later agreed to, such agreement shall be final and conclusive and except upon a showing of fraud or malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact—the case shall not be reopened as to the matters agreed upon or the agreement modified; and in any suit or proceeding relating to the tax liability of the taxpayer such agreement shall not be annulled, modified, set aside, or disregarded.

"COMPROMISES

"SEC. 36. (a) Authority to make: Whenever in the opinion of the Commissioners there shall arise with respect of any tax imposed under this title any doubt as to the liability of the taxpayer or the collectibility of the tax for any reason whatsoever the Commissioners may compromise such tax.

"(b) Concealment of assets: Any person who, in connection with any compromise under this section or offer of such compromise or in connection with any closing agreement under this title or offer to enter into any such agreement, willfully (1) conceals from any officer or employee of the District of Columbia any property belonging to the estate of the taxpayer or other person liable with respect of the tax, or (2) receives, destroys, mutilates, or falsifies any book, document, or record or makes under oath any false statement relating to the estate or the financial condition of the taxpayer or to the person liable in respect of the tax, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(c) Of penalties: The Commissioners shall have the power for cause shown to compromise any penalty arising under this title.

"FAILURE TO FILE RETURN

"SEC. 37. In case of any failure to make and file a return required by this title, within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioners in pursuance of law, 25 per centum of the tax shall be added to the tax, except that when a return is filed after such time and it is shown that the failure to file it was due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect, no such addition shall be made to the tax. The amount so added to any tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as a part of the tax unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax.

"INTEREST ON DEFICIENCIES

"SEC. 38. Interest upon the amount determined as a deficiency shall be assessed at the same time as the deficiency, shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector, and shall be collected as a part of the tax, at the rate of 1 per centum per month from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax (or, if the tax is paid in installments, from the date prescribed for the payment of the first installment) to the date the deficiency is assessed.

"ADDITIONS TO THE TAX IN CASE OF DEFICIENCY

"SEC. 39. (a) Negligence: If any part of any deficiency is due to negligence, or intentional disregard of rules and regulations but without intent to defraud, 5 per centum of the total amount of the deficiency (in addition to such deficiency) shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as if it were a deficiency.

"(b) Fraud: If any part of any deficiency is due to fraud with intent to evade tax, then 50 per centum of the total amount of the deficiency (in addition to such deficiency) shall be so assessed, collected, and paid.

"ADDITIONS TO THE TAX IN CASE OF NONPAYMENT

"SEC. 40. (a) Tax shown on return:

"(1) General rule: Where the amount determined by the taxpayer as the tax imposed by this title, or any installment thereof, or any part of such amount or installment, is not paid on or before the date prescribed for its payment, there shall be collected as a part of the tax, interest upon such unpaid amount at the rate of 1 per centum a month from the date prescribed for its payment until it is paid.

"(2) If extension granted: Where an extension of time for payment of the amount so determined as the tax by the taxpayer, or any installment thereof, has been granted, and the amount the time for payment of which has been extended, and the interest thereon determined under section 41 is not paid in full prior to the expiration of the period of the extension, then, in lieu of the interest provided for in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph, interest at the rate of 1 per centum a month shall be collected on such unpaid amount from the date of the expiration of the period of the extension until it is paid.

"(b) Deficiency: Where a deficiency, or any interest or additional amounts assessed in connection therewith under section 38, or under section 39, or any addition to the tax in case of delinquency provided for in section 37 is not paid in full within ten days from the date of notice and demand from the collector, there shall be collected, as part of the tax, interest upon the unpaid amount at the rate of 1 per centum a month from the date of such notice and demand until it is paid.

"(c) Fiduciaries: For any period an estate is held by a fiduciary appointed by order of any court of competent jurisdiction or by will, there shall be collected interest at the rate of 1 per centum per month in lieu of the interest provided in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of this section.

"TIME EXTENDED FOR PAYMENT OF TAX SHOWN ON RETURN

"SEC. 41. If the time for payment of the amount determined as the tax by the taxpayer, or any installment thereof, is extended under the authority of section 26 (c), there shall be collected, as a part of such amount, interest thereon at the rate of 1 per centum per month from the date when such payment should have been made if no extension had been granted, until the expiration of the period of the extension.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 42. (a) Negligence: Any person required under this title to pay or collect any tax, or required by law or regulations made under authority thereof to make a return, keep any records, or supply information, who fails to pay or collect such tax, to make such return, to keep such records, or supply such information, at the time or times required by law or regulations shall, upon conviction thereof (in addition to other penalties provided by law), be fined not more than $300 for each and every such failure, and each and every day that such failure continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. All prosecutions under this paragraph shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel or his assistants in the name of the District of Columbia.

"(b) Willful violation: Any person required under this title to pay or collect any tax, or required by law or regulations made under authority thereof to make a return, keep any records, or supply any information, for the purposes of this title, who willfully refuses to pay or collect such tax, to make such returns, to keep such records, or to supply such information, or who willfully attempts in any manner to defeat or evade the tax imposed by this title, shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with costs of prosecution.

"(c) Definition of 'person': The term 'person' as used in this section includes an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under duty to perform the act in respect to which the violation occurs.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 43. For the purpose of this title and unless otherwise required by the context—

"(1) The word 'person' means an individual, a trust or estate, a partnership, or a corporation.

"(20) the word 'assessor' means the assessor of the District of Columbia.

"(21) The word 'collector' means the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

"TITLE III—FEES AND FINES

"On and after July 1, 1939, there shall be credited to the District of Columbia that proportion of the fees and fines collected by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, including fees and fines collected by the offices of the clerk of that court and of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia, as the amount paid by the District of Columbia toward salaries and expenses of such court and of the offices of the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia and of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia bears to the total amount of such salaries and expenses; and such proportion of the fees and fines, if any, collected by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, including fees and fines, if any, collected by the office of the clerk of that court, as the amount paid by the District of Columbia toward the salaries and expenses of such court bears to the total amount of such salaries and expenses.

"TITLE IV—AMENDMENTS TO AND REPEAL OF PRIOR ACTS

"INTANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY

"SEC. 1. The tax on intangible personal property imposed by any law relating to the District shall not apply with respect to any year subsequent to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

"TAX ON CERTAIN UTILITIES

"SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph 5 of section 6 of the Act entitled 'An Act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and three, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'PAR. 5. Each national bank as the trustee for its stockholders, through its president or cashier, and all other incorporated banks and trust companies in the District of Columbia, through their presidents or cashiers, and all gas, electric lighting, and telephone companies, through their proper officers, shall make affidavit to the board of personal-tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August each year as to the amount of its or their gross earnings or gross receipts, as the case may be, for the preceding year ending the 30th day of June, and each national bank and all other incorporated banks and trust companies respectively shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum 6 per centum on such gross earnings and each gas company, electric lighting company, and telephone company shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum 4 per centum on such gross receipts, from the sale of public utility commodities and services within the District of Columbia. And in addition thereto the real estate owned by each national or other incorporated bank, and each trust, gas, electric-lighting, and telephone company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate in said District: Provided, That street-railroad companies shall pay 3 per centum per annum on their gross receipts and other taxes as provided by existing law, and insurance companies shall continue to pay the 2 per centum on premium receipts as provided by existing law. Each gas, electric-lighting, telephone and street railroad company shall pay, in addition to the tax herein mentioned, the corporate income tax imposed by title II of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, and the personal property tax on merchandise stock in trade. So much of the Act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An Act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia" as is inconsistent with the provisions of this section is hereby repealed.'

"(b) This section shall not apply to gross earnings or gross receipts for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June prior to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. Taxes shall be levied and collected for the fiscal years preceding the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, under said paragraph 5 of section 6 of said Act of July 1, 1902, as if this title had not been enacted.

"(c) Section 6 of the Act of July 1, 1902, (c. 1352, 32 Stat. 619), is amended by striking out paragraph 8, so that the corporate excess tax therein provided shall become inoperative.

"TAX ON REAL PROPERTY

"SEC. 3. Title VII of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the rate of taxation imposed on real and tangible personal property in the District of Columbia shall be 1.75 per centum of the assessed value of such property.'

"TAXABLE STATUS OF MOTOR VEHICLES AS TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY

"SEC. 4. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the tangible personal-property tax on motor vehicles, except when consisting of stock in trade of merchants, shall be prorated according to the number of months such property has a situs within the District; and all such motor vehicles shall be assessed at their value as of April 1 each year: Provided, however, That where a motor vehicle shall be registered in the District of Columbia for the first time on a date between April 1 of one year and April 1 of the succeeding year, such motor vehicle shall be assessed, for taxation for the period ending with the succeeding April 1, at its value as of date of application for such first registration.

"TAX APPEALS

"SEC. 5. (a) The first sentence of the second paragraph of section 2 of title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by the Act approved May 16, 1938, is amended to read as follows: 'The salary of such person so appointed shall be $8,000 per annum.' This amendment shall be effective on and after July 1, 1939.

"(b) Section 3 of title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, is amended as follows:

"'SEC. 3. Any person aggrieved by any assessment by the District against him of any personal-property, inheritance, estate, business-privilege, gross-receipts, gross-earnings, insurance-premiums, or motor-vehicle-fuel tax or taxes, or penalties thereon, may, within ninety days after notice of such assessment, appeal from such assessment to the Board, provided such person shall first pay such tax, together with penalties and interest due thereon, to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia under protest in writing. The mailing to the taxpayer of a statement of taxes due shall be considered notice of assessment with respect of such taxes. The Board shall hear and determine all questions arising on said appeal and shall make separate findings of fact and conclusions of law, and shall render its decision thereon in writing. The Board may affirm, cancel, reduce, or increase such assessment.'

"(b) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 5 of title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"'(a) The assessor and deputy assessor of the District and the board of all of the assistant assessors, with the assessor as chairman, shall compose a Board of Equalization and Review, and as such Board of Equalization and Review they shall convene in a room to be provided for them by the Commissioners, on the first Monday of January of each year, and shall remain in session until the first Monday in April of each year, after which date no complaint as to valuation as herein provided shall be received or considered by such Board of Equalization and Review. Public notice of the time and place of such session shall be given by publication for two successive days in two daily newspapers in the District not more than two weeks or less than ten days before the beginning of said session. It shall be the duty of said Board of Equalization and Review to fairly and impartially equalize the value of real property made by the board of assistant assessors as the basis for assessment. Any five of said Board of Equalization and Review shall constitute a quorum for business, and, in the absence of the Assessor, a temporary chairman may be selected. They shall immediately proceed to equalize the valuations made by the board of assistant assessors so that each lot and tract and improvements thereon shall be entered upon the tax list at their value in money; and for this purpose they shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments, and in determining them they may raise the valuation of such tracts or lots as in their opinion may have been returned below their value and reduce the valuation of such as they may believe to have been returned above their value to such sum as in their opinion may be the value thereof. The valuation of the real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall be completed not later than the first Monday of May annually. The valuation of said real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall be approved by the Commissioners not later than July 1 annually, and when approved by the Commissioners shall constitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding year and until another valuation is made according to law, except as hereinafter provided. Any person aggrieved by any assessment, equalization, or valuation made, may, within ninety days after October 1 of the year in which such assessment, equalization, or valuation is made, appeal from such assessment, equalization, or valuation in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided.

"'(b) Annually, on or prior to July 1 of each year, the board of assistant assessors shall make a list of all real estate which shall have become subject to taxation and which is not then on the tax list, and affix a value thereon, according to the rules prescribed by law for assessing real estate; shall make return of all new structures erected or roofed, and additions to or improvements of old structures which shall not have been theretofore assessed, specifying the tract or lot of land on which each of such structures has been erected, and the value of such structure, and they shall add such valuation to the assessment made on such tract or lot. When the improvements on any lot or tract of land shall become damaged or be destroyed from any cause, the said board of assistant assessors shall reduce the assessment on said property to the extent of such damage: Provided, That the Board of Equalization and Review shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments between September 1 and September 30 and determine the same not later than October 15 of the same year. Any person aggrieved by any assessment or valuation made in pursuance of this paragraph may, within ninety days after October 15 of the year in which said valuation or assessment is made, appeal from such assessment or valuation in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided.

"'(c) In addition to the annual assessment of all real estate made on or prior to July 1 of each year there shall be added a list of all new buildings erected or under roof prior to January 1 of each year, in the same manner as provided by law for all annual additions; and the amounts thereof shall be added as assessment for the second half of the then current year payable in the month of March. When the improvements on any lot or tract of land shall become damaged or be destroyed from any cause prior to January 1 of each year the said board of assistant assessors shall reduce the assessment on said property to the extent of said damage for the second half of the then current year payable in the month of March. The Board of Equalization and Review shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments for the second half of said year between March 1 and March 31 and determine said complaints not later than April 15 of the same year. Any person aggrieved by any assessment made in pursuance of this paragraph may, within ninety days after April 15 of the year in which such assessment is made, appeal from such assessment in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided.'

"(c) Title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by adding thereto a new section reading as follows:

"'SEC. 13. In any matter affecting taxation, the determination of which is by law left to the discretion of the Commissioners, the Commissioners may, if they so elect, refer such matter to the Board to make findings of fact and submit recommendations, such findings of fact and recommendations, if any, to be advisory only and not binding on the Commissioners, and shall be without prejudice to the Commissioners to make such further and other inquiry and investigation concerning such matter as they in their discretion shall consider necessary or advisable.'

"TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY STORED IN TRANSIT

"SEC. 6. Nothing in this Act contained, nor shall any prior Act of Congress relating to the District of Columbia be deemed to impose upon any person, firm, association, company, or corporation a tax based upon tangible personal property owned and stored by such person in a public warehouse in the District of Columbia for a period of time no longer than is necessary for the convenience or exigencies of reshipment and transportation to its destination without the District of Columbia.

"TITLE V—INHERITANCE AND ESTATE TAXES

"Title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by an Act entitled 'An Act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes,' approved May 16, 1938, is amended to read as follows:

"'Taxes shall be imposed in relation to estates of decedents, the shares of beneficiaries of such estates, and gifts as hereinafter provided:

"'ARTICLE I—INHERITANCE TAX

"'SEC. 1. (a) All real property and tangible and intangible personal property, or any interest therein, having its taxable situs in the District of Columbia, transferred from any person who may die seized or possessed thereof, either by will or by law, or by right of survivorship, and all such property, or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, gift, or sale (except in cases of a bona fide purchase for full consideration in money or money's worth), made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the decedent, or made in contemplation of death, to or for the use of, in trust or otherwise (including property of which the decedent has retained for his life or for any period not ascertainable without reference to his death or for any period which does not in fact end before his death (1) the possession or enjoyment of, or the right to the income from such property or (2) the right, either alone or in conjunction with any person, to designate the persons who shall possess or enjoy the property or the income therefrom), to the father, mother, husband, wife, children by blood or legally adopted children, or any other lineal descendants or lineal ancestors of the decedent, shall be subject to a tax as follows: 1 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 2 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000; 3 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 4 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000; 5 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $1,000,000.

"'(b) So much of said property so transferred to each of the brothers and sisters of the whole or half blood of the decedent shall be subject to a tax as follows: 3 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $25,000; 4 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $25,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 6 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000;

8 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 10 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000.

"'(c) So much of said property so transferred to any person other than those included in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section and all firms, institutions, associations, and corporations shall be subject to a tax as follows: 5 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $1,000 and not in excess of $25,000; 7 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $25,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 9 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000; 12 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 15 per centum of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000.

"'(d) Executors, administrators, trustees, and other persons making distribution shall only be discharged from liability for the amount of such tax, with the payment of which they are charged, by paying the same as hereinafter described.

"'(e) Property transferred exclusively for public or municipal purposes, to the United States or the District of Columbia, or exclusively for charitable, educational, or religious purposes within the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxation under the provisions of this section.

"'(f) Where any beneficiary has died or may hereafter die within six months after the death of the decedent and before coming into the possession and enjoyment of any property passing to him, and before selling, assigning, transferring, or in any manner contracting with respect to his interest in such property, such property shall be taxed only once, and if the tax on the property so passing to said beneficiary has not been paid, then the tax shall be assessed on the property received from such share by each beneficiary thereof, finally entitled to the possession and enjoyment thereof, as if he had been the original beneficiary, and the exemptions and rates of taxation shall be governed by the respective relationship of each of the ultimate beneficiaries to the first decedent.

"'(g) The provisions of article I of this title shall apply to property in the estate of every person who shall die after this title becomes effective.

"'(h) The transfer of any property, or interest therein, within 2 years prior to death, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death.

"'(i) All property and interest therein which shall pass from a decedent to the same beneficiary by one or more of the methods specified in this section, and all beneficial interests which shall accrue in the manner herein provided to such beneficiary on account of the death of such decedent, shall be united and treated as a single interest for the purpose of determining the tax hereunder.

"'(j) Whenever any person shall exercise a general power of appointment derived from any disposition of property, made either before or after the passage of this title, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable, under the provisions of this title, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power; and whenever any person possessing such power of appointment so derived shall omit or fail to exercise the same, within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a transfer taxable under the provisions of this title shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omissions or failure in the same manner as though the person or persons thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by the will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure.

"'(k) The doctrine of equitable conversion shall not be invoked in the assessment of taxes under this article.

"'SEC. 2. The tax provided in section 1 shall be paid on the market value of the property or interest therein at the time of the death of the decedent as appraised by the assessor, or, in the discretion of the assessor, upon the value as appraised by the probate court of the District. The taxable portion of real or personal property held jointly or by the entireties shall be determined by dividing the value of the entire property by the number of persons in whose joint names it was held.

"'SEC. 3. The appraisal thus made shall be deemed and taken to be the true value of the said property or interest therein upon which the said tax shall be paid, and the amount of said tax and the tax imposed by article II of this title shall be a lien on said property or interest therein for the period of ten years from the date of death of the decedent: Provided, however, That such lien shall not attach to any personal property sold or disposed of for value by an administrator, executor, or collector, of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or by a trustee appointed under a will filed with the register of wills for the District or by order of said court, or his successor approved by said court, but a lien for said taxes shall attach on all property acquired in substitution therefor for a period of ten years after the acquisition of such substituted property: And provided further, That such lien upon such substituted property shall, upon sale by such personal representatives, be extinguished and shall reattach in the manner as provided with respect of such original property.

"'SEC. 4. The personal representative of every decedent, the gross value of whose estate is in excess of $1,000, shall, within fifteen months after the death of the decedent, report under oath to the assessor, on forms provided for that purpose an itemized schedule of all the property (real, personal, and mixed) of the decedent, the market value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent, the name or names of the persons to receive the same and the actual value of the property that each will receive, the relationship of such persons to the decedent, and the age of any persons who receive a life interest in the property, and any other information which the assessor may require. Said personal representative shall, within eighteen months of the date of the death of the decedent and before distribution of the estate, pay to the collector of taxes the taxes imposed by section 1 upon the distributive shares and legacies in his hands and the tax imposed by section 1 hereof against each distributive share or legacy shall be charged against such distributive share or legacy unless the will shall otherwise direct.

"'SEC. 5. The personal representative of the decedent shall collect from each beneficiary entitled to a distributive share or legacy the tax imposed upon such distributive share or legacy in section 1 hereof, and if the said beneficiary shall neglect or fail to pay the same within fifteen months after the date of the death of the decedent such personal representative shall, upon the order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, sell for cash so much of said distributive share or legacy as may be necessary to pay said tax and all the expenses of said sale.

"'SEC. 6. Every person entitled to receive property taxable under section 1 hereof, which property is not under the control of a personal representative, and is over $1,000 in value, shall, within six months after the death of the decedent, report under oath to the assessor, on forms provided for that purpose, an itemized schedule of all property (real, personal, and mixed) received or to be received by such person; the market value of the same at the time of the death of the decedent and the relationship of such person to the decedent; and any other information which the assessor may require. The tax on the transfer of any such property shall be paid by such person to the collector of taxes within nine months after the date of the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That with respect to real estate passing by will or inheritance such report shall be made within fifteen months after the death of the decedent, and the tax on the transfer thereof shall be paid within eighteen months after the date of the death of the decedent.

"'SEC. 7. In the case of any grant, deed, devise, descent, or bequest of a life interest or term of years, the donee for life or years shall pay a tax only on the value of his interest, determined in a manner as the Commissioners by regulation may prescribe, and the donee of the future interest shall pay a tax only on his interest as based upon the value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent creating such interest. The value of any future interest shall be determined by deducting from the market value of such property at the time of the death of such decedent the value of the precedent life interest or term of years. Where the future interest is vested the donee thereof shall pay the tax within the time in which the tax upon the precedent life interest or term of years is required to be paid under the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of this article, as the case may be. Where the future interest is contingent the personal representative of such decedent or the persons interested in such contingent future estate shall have the option of (1) paying, within the time herein provided for the payment of taxes due upon vested future interests, a tax equal to the mean between the highest possible tax and the lowest possible tax which could be imposed under any contingency or condition whereby such contingent future interest might be wholly or in part created, defeated, extended, or abridged; or (2) paying the tax upon such transfer at the time when such future interest shall become vested at rates and with exemptions in force at the time of the death of the decedent: Provided, That the personal representative or trustee of the estate of the decedent or the persons interested in the future contingent interest shall deposit with the assessor a bond in the penal sum of an amount equal to twice the tax payable under option (1) hereof. Such bonds shall be payable to the District and shall be conditioned for the payment of such tax when and as the same shall become due and payable. The tax upon the transfer of future interests or remainders shall be a lien upon the property or interest transferred from the date of the death of the decedent creating the interests and shall remain in force and effect until ten years after the date when such remainder or future interest shall become vested in the donee thereof. If the tax upon the transfer of a contingent future interest is paid before the same shall become vested, such tax shall be paid by the personal representative out of the corpus of the estate of the decedent, otherwise by the person or persons entitled to receive the same.

"'ARTICLE II—ESTATE TAXES

"'SEC. 1. In addition to the taxes imposed by article I, there is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the estate of every decedent who, after this title becomes effective, shall die a resident of the District, a tax equal to 80 per centum of the Federal estate tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted.

"'SEC. 2. There shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession tax lawfully imposed by any State or Territory of the United States, in respect of any property included in the gross estate for Federal estate-tax purposes as prescribed in title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted: Provided, how- ever, That only such taxes as are actually paid and credit therefor claimed and allowed against the Federal estate tax may be applied as a credit against and in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1.

" 'SEC. 3. In no event shall the tax imposed by section 1 of this article exceed the difference between the maximum credit which might be allowed against the Federal estate tax imposed by title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, and the aggregate amount of the taxes described in section 2 of this article (but not including the tax imposed by section 1) allowable as a credit against the Federal estate tax.

" 'SEC. 4. The purpose of section 1 of this article is to secure for the District the benefit of the credit allowed under the provisions of section 301 (c) of title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, to the extent that the District may be entitled by the provisions of said Revenue Act, by imposing additional taxes, and the same shall be liberally construed to effect such purpose: Provided, That the amount of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article shall not be decreased by any failure to secure the allowance of credit against the Federal estate tax.

" 'SEC. 5. A tax is hereby imposed upon the transfer of real property or tangible personal property in the District of every person who at the time of death was a resident of the United States but not a resident of the District, and upon the transfer of all property, both real and personal, within the District of every person who at the time of death was not a resident of the United States, the amount of which shall be a sum equal to such proportion of the amount by which the credit allowable under the applicable Federal revenue Act for estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes actually paid to the several States exceeds the amount actually so paid for such taxes, exclusive of estate taxes based upon the difference between such credit and other estate taxes and inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes, as the value of the property in the District bears to the value of the entire estate, subject to estate tax under the applicable Federal revenue Act.

" 'SEC. 6. Every executor or administrator of the estate of a decedent dying a resident of the District or of a nonresident decedent owning real estate or tangible personal property situated in the District, or of an alien decedent owning any real estate, tangible or intangible personal property situated in the District, or, if there is no executor or administrator appointed, qualified, and acting, then any person in actual or constructive possession of any property forming a part of an estate subject to estate tax under this title shall, within sixteen months after the death of the decedent file with the assessor a copy of the return required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926, verified by the affidavit of the person filing said return with the assessor, and shall, within thirty days after the date of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, confirming, increasing, or diminishing the tax shown to be due, file a copy of such communication with the assessor. With the copy of the Federal estate-tax return there shall be filed an affidavit as to the several amounts paid or expected to be paid as taxes within the purview of section 2 of this article: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the filing of such return as required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926 is extended without penalty by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the copy thereof verified as aforesaid may be filed with the assessor within thirty days after the expiration of said extended period.

" 'SEC. 7. The assessor shall, upon receipt of the return and accompanying affidavit, assess such amount as he may determine, from the basis of the return, to be due the District. Upon receipt of a copy of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, herein required to be filed, the assessor shall make such additional assessment or shall make such abatement of the assessment as may appear proper.

" 'SEC. 8. The estate taxes imposed by this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within seventeen months after the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the payment of taxes imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, is extended by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the tax imposed by this article shall be paid within sixty days after the expiration of such extended period, together with interest as provided in section 4 of article IV of this title: Provided further, That any additional assessment found to be due under section 7 of this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within thirty days after the determination of such additional assessment by the assessor.

" 'ARTICLE III—GENERAL

" 'SEC. 1. The bond of the personal representative of the decedent shall be liable for all taxes and penalties assessed under this title, except inheritance taxes and penalties imposed in relation to the transfer of property not under the control of such personal representative: Provided, That in no case shall the bond of the personal representative be liable for a greater sum than is actually received by him.

" 'SEC. 2. The register of wills of the District shall report to the assessor on forms provided for the purpose every qualification in the District upon the estate of a decedent. Such report shall be filed with the assessor at least once every month, and shall contain the name of the decedent, the date of his death, the name and address of the personal representative, and the value of the estate, as shown by the petition for administration or probate.

" 'SEC. 3. The Commissioners shall have supervision of the enforcement of this title and shall have the power to make such rules and regulations, consistent with its provisions, as may be necessary for its enforcement and efficient administration and to provide for the granting of extension of time within which to perform the duties imposed by this title. The assessor shall determine all taxes assessable under this title and immediately upon the determination of same, shall forward a statement of the taxes determined to the person or persons chargeable with the payment thereof and shall give advice thereof to the collector of taxes. The assessor is hereby authorized and empowered to summon any person before him to give testimony on oath or affirmation or to produce all books, records, papers, documents, or other legal evidence as to any matter relating to this title, and the assessor is authorized to administer oaths and to take testimony for the purposes of the administration of this title. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then and in that event the assessor may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to said summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

" 'SEC. 4. If the taxes imposed by this title are not paid when due, 1 per centum interest for each month or portion of a month from the date when the same were due until paid shall be added to the amount of said taxes and collected as a part of the same, and said taxes shall be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection: Provided, however, That where the time for payment of the tax imposed by this title is extended by the assessor or where the payment of the tax is lawfully suspended under the regulations for the administration of this title, interest shall be paid at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the date on which the tax would otherwise be payable.

" 'SEC. 5. If any person shall fail to perform any duty imposed upon him by the provisions of this title or the regulations made hereunder the Commissioners may proceed by petition for mandamus to compel performance and upon the granting of such writ the court shall adjudge all costs of such proceeding against the delinquent.

" 'SEC. 6. Any person required by this title to file a return who fails to file such return within the time prescribed by this title, or within such additional time as may be granted under regulations promulgated by the Commissioners, shall become liable in his own person and estate to the District in an amount equal to 10 per centum of the tax found to be due. In case any person required by this title to file a return knowingly files a false or fraudulent return, he shall become liable in his own person and estate to the said District in an amount equal to 50 per centum of the tax found to be due. Such amounts shall be collected in the same manner as is herein provided for the collection of the taxes levied under this title.

" 'SEC. 7. Any person required by this title to pay a tax or required by law or regulation made under authority thereof to make a return or keep any records or supply any information for the purposes of computation, assessment, or collection of any tax imposed by this title, who willfully fails to pay such tax, make any such return, or supply any such information at the time or times required by law or regulation shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

" 'SEC. 8. When the assessor is satisfied that the tax liability imposed by this title has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, issue his certificate, releasing any or all property from the lien herein imposed.

" 'SEC. 9. No person holding, within the District, tangible or intangible assets of any resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, shall deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, unless notice of the date and place of such intended transfer be served upon the assessor of the District of Columbia at least ten days prior to such delivery or transfer, nor shall any person holding, within the District of Columbia, any assets of a resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by said District Court without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any tax which may be assessed on account of the transfer of such assets under the provisions of articles I and II without an order from the assessor of the District of Columbia authorizing such transfer. It shall be lawful for the assessor of the District, personally, or by his representatives, to examine said assets at any time before such delivery or transfer. Failure to serve such notice or to allow such examination or to retain as herein required a sufficient portion or amount to pay the taxes imposed by this title shall render such person liable to the payment of such taxes. The assessor of the District may issue a certificate authorizing the transfer of any such assets whenever it appears to the satisfaction of said assessor that no tax is due thereon: Provided, however, That any corporation, foreign or domestic to the District having outstanding stock or other securities registered in the sole name of a decedent whose estate or any part thereof is taxable under this title, may transfer the same, without notice to the assessor and without liability for any tax imposed thereon under this title, upon the order of an administrator, executor, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or by a trustee appointed under a will filed with the register of wills of the District, or appointed by said court, or his successor approved by said court: Provided further, That the lessor of a safe-deposit box standing in the joint names of a decedent and a survivor or survivors may deliver the entire contents of such safe-deposit box to the survivor or survivors, after examination of such contents by the assessor or his representative, without any liability on the part of the said lessor for the payment of such tax.

"'SEC. 10. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title or relative to any person whose estate is subject to the provisions of this title.

"'SEC. 11. If any return required by this title is not filed with the assessor when due, the assessor shall have the right to determine and assess the tax or taxes from such information as he may possess or obtain.

"'SEC. 12. The assessor is authorized to enter into an agreement with any person liable for a tax on a transfer under article I of this title, in which remainders or expectant estates are of such nature or so disposed and circumstanced that the value of the interest is not ascertainable under the provisions of this title, and to compound and settle such tax upon such terms as the assessor may deem equitable and expedient.

"'SEC. 13. In the interpretation of this title unless the context indicates a different meaning the term "tax" means the tax or taxes mentioned in this title.

"'(a) The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

"'(b) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(c) The term "assessor" means the assessor of the District of Columbia or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(d) The term "collector of taxes" means the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(e) The term "Metropolitan Police Department" means the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia.

"'(f) The term "include" when used in a definition contained in this title, shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

"'(g) The term "resident" means domiciled and the term "residence" means domicile.

"'SEC. 14. The provisions of this title shall become effective at 12:01 antemeridian, the day immediately following its approval.'"

"TITLE VI—ADVANCEMENT OF MONEY BY TREASURY

"Until and including June 30, 1940, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia."

"TITLE VII—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAX PROVISIONS

"The laws authorizing the imposition by the District of Columbia of intangible personal property taxes and business privilege taxes are hereby extended from and after June 30, 1939, for the following purposes in connection with the taxes accrued or due under such laws prior to July 1, 1939—

"(1) For the imposition of assessments and penalties, civil and criminal, for the violation of or failure to comply with such laws and the regulations issued thereunder;

"(2) For requiring the making, filing, and submission of returns and reports required by such laws;

"(3) For the examination of all books, records, and other documents, and witnesses; and

"(4) For the assessment and collection of such taxes, and the filing of liens therefor.

"TITLE VIII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

"SEC. 1. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 2. The Commissioners shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulaions for the enforcement of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation with reference to the conference report. The conference report is the same as the report submitted the other day to the Senate with the following changes:

The Federal payment to the expenses of the District of Columbia is fixed in the sum of $6,000,000 annually, instead of $6,500,000, as was provided in the original conference report.

The provisions with reference to the appointment of a joint committee for a further study of the tax structure and tax problems of the District of Columbia have, by agreement between the conferees, been eliminated.

There is a provision authorizing the collection of taxes and penalties which have accrued with respect to the tax on intangible personal property and with respect to the business-privilege tax, both of which taxes have been eliminated in the bill as agreed to between the conferees.

The total revenue which it is estimated will be raised by the bill is for the fiscal year 1940 the sum of $41,770,000. That is the total amount which will be raised for general-fund appropriations. The general-fund appropriations for the District of Columbia as provided for in the Appropriation Act of 1940 are $41,859,978. There will, therefore, be a deficit of $89,978. This deficit, however, is practically overcome by a general-fund surplus carried over from the fiscal year 1939.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a memorandum relating to the general fund of the District of Columbia for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940, and a memorandum of the general-fund appropriations of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940, which have been prepared by the Auditor of the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memoranda are as follows:

Memorandum relating to the general fund of the District of Columbia for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940—Revenue collections for 1939 and estimated revenue collections for 1940, the latter based upon the District tax bill as agreed to July 7, 1939, by the Senate and House conferees

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been asked by a number of Senators about the call of the calendar, and I wish to state for the information of all Senators that following the disposition of the pending bill the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] desires to have the Senate take up the amendments to the Walsh-Healy Act, which will require only an hour or so, and following that I hope that we may have a call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On June 30, 1939:

S. 2618. An act to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes; and

S. 1805. An act to establish a lien for moneys due hospitals for services rendered in cases caused by negligence or fault of others and providing for the recording and enforcing of such liens.

On July 13, 1939:

S. 1018. An act to authorize the procurement, without advertising, of certain aircraft parts and instruments or aeronautical accessories, and for other purposes.

On July 14, 1939:

S. 216. An act for the relief of A. C. Williams, administrator of the estate of his wife, Julia F. Williams;

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

The message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 26) to empower the President of the United States to create new national-forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1939, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6746. An act to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7052. An act to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 5748. An act to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended; and

H. J. Res. 329. Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

H. R. 6747. An act relating to the retirement of employees to whom the provisions of section 6 of the act approved June 20, 1918 (40 Stat. 608; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 763), as amended, apply; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 7052. An act to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy; to the calendar.

PROHIBITION OF BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING OF MOTION-PICTURE FILMS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, in taking the floor today in support of the bill to prohibit and prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce, I wish to say at the outset that I do not pretend to have any profound or intimate knowledge of the details of the motion-picture industry.

So far as the pending legislation is concerned, the separate reports filed by the majority and minority of the Committee on Interstate Commerce indicate divergent views on certain technical questions relative to the production and distribution of films. I do not feel qualified to discuss these questions.

As I see the matter, however, the solution of these technical problems is not the major question raised in this legislation. My support of the bill is based on broader, and to my mind more compelling, reasons.

In the first place, I do not believe it is sound policy that any distributor of motion pictures—or of other commodities, for that matter—should say to the prospective buyers:

"You must take things I have for sale that you do not want in order to get the things you do want."

That seems to me to be in restraint of trade, and an unfair practice. It restrains the freedom of the buyer, whether he be an exhibitor or one who buys for resale, to select the products best calculated to please his customers. It also restrains the prospective buyer from dealing with other distributors, whose products are crowded out of the buyer's theater or store to the extent that such distributor's products are forced on the theater or store management.

If this manner of handling films were practiced by only one or two distributors, comprising a small part of the industry, it might not be necessary to enact Federal legislation to correct the evil; but to me it seems contrary to the public interest when it is the practice of a group of distributors who, together, handle such a large part of the products the buyer must have.

My information is that some eight corporations handle about 80 percent of the quality films of the country, and that these corporations combine to force block booking and blind selling upon the operators of film theaters.

Obviously, exhibitors must depend upon these corporations for pictures. To the extent that those corporations use this full line, forcing the films upon exhibitors "sight unseen," they practice a form of coercion that has no place in American industry.

I gather from the hearings, Mr. President, that there is little dispute that block booking is imposed upon exhibitors. If it were not, there would not be the Nation-wide demand for remedial legislation that there undoubtedly is; nor would there be such determined opposition to this legislation from those interests accused of the practice.

I believe this phase of the matter was well covered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] in a colloquy on the Senate floor preceding the passage of the bill last year. I quote:

Mr. BORAH. We all have had letters from independent exhibitors all over the country complaining about that, and even if the practice is not so great as has been stated, yet it certainly is a great evil. I cannot see any harm, and I can see much good, in prohibiting it, even if it is not so great an evil.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if compulsory block booking does not exist, can any Senator suggest how anyone in the motion-picture business could be injured by our making it unlawful?

However, my interest in this bill is not primarily an interest in the business of the exhibitors. It goes farther than that. It goes to the public interest involved. My interest is the interest of the many religious, educational, welfare, and farm bodies which are actively supporting the measure.

These groups maintain, and I think with good reason, that local exhibitors should not have to run all pictures released them by the distributors, but should have some freedom of selection.

It seems to me the exhibitors should be allowed some freedom in selecting the films they believe to be best suited for the communities in which they operate. When the local exhibitors have no choice, there is nothing they can do when objectionable or poor films are sent to them except to run them. Nor can they go elsewhere and get outstanding films when their operating time is filled with pictures which they consider it inadvisable to run.

Mr. President, I am particularly impressed by the deep interest taken in this measure by such organizations as the National Congress of Parent-Teachers' Associations, the American Home Economics Association, the American Association of University Women, the Catholic Daughters of America, the National Grange, and many others. Their position and the extent of their interest are shown in the transcript of the hearings and in the committee report on the bill.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the statement of Fred Brenckman, legislative representative of the National Grange, whom I have known for many years and for whose opinions I have great respect. Mr. Brenckman said, in part:

The National Grange has long been in favor of legislation which will abolish the practice of compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion pictures. In our opinion, this practice is far more destructive of the American principle of freedom of choice in the field of entertainment in rural communities than in our cities and towns.

In our urban centers there usually is more than one theater, so that if the seeker for relaxation or entertainment is unable to find that for which he is looking in one theater, he may at least have a second or third choice.

In villages or small towns where the rural folks seek entertainment, there is not usually more than one motion-picture theater, and that is operated by an independent exhibitor. If complaints are made to him regarding the type of picture shown, his answer invariably is that in order to furnish any program he must lease his pictures in large blocks long prior to the date when they are shown and usually before they are produced. This practice makes it impossible for him to meet the demands of the local patrons.

Believing as we do that this domination of the purchaser or the exhibitor by the producer is wholly contrary to the American principle of fair play and a square deal, besides being frequently destructive of the character of plastic youth, the Grange strongly favors the passage of legislation to abolish block booking and blind selling of motion pictures.

Mr. President, it certainly seems to me that these small-town exhibitors ought not to have to play whatever pictures the producers and distributors send them, but that they should be in a position to cooperate with their local patrons in selecting good pictures if that is the kind they and their patrons desire.

It seems to me it is essential that the exhibitors should have a right of selection, and also the proper information on which to exercise that right intelligently. I am all the more convinced that this is true when I reflect upon the tremendous influence which the "movies" have on children, as shown in the statements summarized on pages 4 to 6 of the committee report. I desire to read a brief passage from a letter published in the hearings—page 69—written by Dean Claude A. Shull, of the San Francisco Motion Picture Council, under date of March 13, 1939:

I have been an educator for 26 years, and am at present teaching in one of the State colleges of California. We have invested in this country over $10,000,000,000 in school buildings and equipment, which we are operating at a cost of about $3,000,000,000 a year. To some considerable degree this educational system is meeting competition in the motion-picture theater. In an article released to the newspapers of this State on July 29, 1934, State Superintendent Vierling Kersey wrote: "Eventually it is to be hoped that the motion-picture theater will become the ally rather than the rival of the schoolroom in the education of youth." A letter from Superintendent Harold G. Campbell, of New York City, contained the following: "There is no doubt in my mind that much of the good the schools are doing, especially in the field of character training and in the development of the right social attitudes, is being thwarted and undermined by substandard motion pictures." Prof. Ben Wood, of Columbia University, has pointed out that when a questionnaire was sent by Roger W. Babson to the school principals asking which had the greatest influence in molding the character of our young children—the school, the church, or the home—70 percent of the principals scratched out all three and wrote in "the movies."

The Tenth Yearbook of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association contains a report of a commission on character education, as follows:

"Here (speaking of motion pictures) is obviously an agency of moral education of tremendous power. That it is living up to its possibilities as a cultural institution, however, few would maintain. * * * In fact, at present, the thesis might well be defended that it is more of a liability than an asset."

Mr. President, as I view this bill, its purposes are twofold and its provisions seem to give them effect.

First. The bill is designed to prohibit the compulsory block booking of motion-picture films. The language of the bill leaves no doubt as to its purpose in this respect. The bill recognizes that this prohibition may be evaded by charging prohibitive prices for films sold individually or in groups less than blocks as compared with the prices for films sold in blocks; so it undertakes to prevent differentials between block prices and less than block prices which would be so disproportionate as to compel the exhibitors to forego their rights under the legislation and continue to submit to the practices which the bill condemns.

Another declared purpose is to prevent blind selling. This is sought to be accomplished by requiring the distributors, when offering pictures to the exhibitors, to supply synopses showing the contents of the pictures. The reason for this requirement is that an exhibitor will be unable to exercise his rights under the provisions against compulsory block booking unless he is supplied with sufficient information concerning the pictures to be released on which to base his selections.

These declared purposes, and the provisions calculated to effectuate these purposes, are the important things in the measure. The rest is detail. If opponents of the measure can suggest changes in wording which will not affect the efficacy of the measure in attaining these two main objectives, by all means they should do so. If the bill is enacted, and is found to work undue hardships in actual practice, it can be modified. For my part, I have noticed that as a rule the dire predictions which are always made when remedial legislation is being considered rarely are borne out in actual experience. Once desirable remedial legislation is enacted, the industries affected conform thereto, and in time all recognize that an advance has been made in human progress.

It is my belief that this will happen when this measure is enacted. In the interest of fair play in the motion-picture industry and in the higher interest of the welfare of children, and particularly of the small towns and rural communities, I hope the Senate will pass the bill promptly, that it will also be passed by the House, and that it will become the law of the land.

Mr. President, I ask that a telegram I have received from the American Association of University Women and 12 other national women's organizations, in support of the pending bill, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1939.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Undersigned committee, representing 29 national organizations, keenly interested in passage by Senate of Neely motion-picture bill, S. 280. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Represenatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

PROHIBITION OF BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING OF MOTION-PICTURE FILMS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill under consideration was introduced by the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and he has with great zeal and earnestness sought to secure its enactment into law. It contains substantially the same provisions as are found in a number of bills which have been introduced in the Senate during the past few years. Former Senator Brookhart, as I recall, offered a measure containing substantially the same provisions. In the Seventy-fifth Congress, my recollection is that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] introduced a bill, the terms of which were almost identical with the pending measure.

Last Friday the Senator from West Virginia delivered, in support of the bill, an able address and the same day the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] presented a strong argument against the bill. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was compelled to leave the Senate without having full opportunity to present his views. He did submit, however, a short address which was eloquent and persuasive. I was denied the opportunity of hearing the addresses of the three Senators owing to the demands made upon my time by committees of which I am a member. However, I have read, rather hastily may I say, the several hundred pages of testimony taken at the hearings upon the bill and also the addresses referred to. At the conclusion of the hearings a majority report was submitted by the Senator from West Virginia and a minority report by the Senators from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The reports which I have examined present the conflicting views of the proponents and opponents of the bill. After examining the testimony and the reports I reached the conclusion that the bill before us ought not to be enacted into law. In my opinion it contains provisions in contravention of principles and policies upon which rest our industrial and economic system, and also provisions which I believe to be unconstitutional.

It seeks to interfere with legitimate private enterprise and to control and regiment an important industry of our country.

May I say in passing that in view of the importance of the measure it is regrettable that so few Senators had the opportunity of hearing the able addresses made by the Senators referred to. Unfortunately, numerous committees of the Senate are engaged in hearings during the meetings of the Senate, and thus they are prevented from obtaining such information, if not enlightenment, as would result from hearing discussions of the measures receiving the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, while realizing the importance of free enterprise and the dangers resulting from bureaucratic control and the exercise of paternalistic authority, I have upon various occasions expressed opposition to all forms of monopoly, and a few years ago introduced bills for the purpose of strengthening the antitrust laws. I have for years entertained the view that competition in our economic and industrial life was essential to the preservation of what we call our capitalistic system, and I have insisted that antitrust laws should be enforced.

I approached the consideration of the bill before us with strong feelings against all forms of monopoly, and in the examination of the record I have sought to ascertain whether there were facts developed indicative of monopolistic practices or conduct violative of antitrust laws in the business activities of the so-called motion-picture industry. After such examination, as I have indicated, I have reached the conclusion that no facts were presented which justified the enactment of the bill now before the Senate.

I invite attention to some of the outstanding provisions of the bill. Section I declares that block booking and blind selling are contrary to public policy in that they:

(1) Interfere with the free and informed selection of films by exhibitors and local communities; and,

(2) Tend to create a monopoly and burden commerce.

Therefore, the bill proposes to make it unlawful to lease pictures in a group of two or more, requiring the exhibitor to take the whole group or none; or to offer films individually at such prices, in ratio to the price for a group, that the effect will be to require the exhibitor to lease the entire group or to restrict his freedom in selecting such films as he may desire. It is also made unlawful to transport or cause to be transported in interstate commerce, with knowledge, films that have been leased in violation of this provision.

The bill further makes it illegal to lease or offer to lease a film unless at or before the time of entering into the lease, the distributor supplies the exhibitor with a synopsis of such film, including a general outline of the story and principal characters, and of the manner of treatment of scenes depicting vice, crime, or suggestive of sexual passion.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], before adjournment last Friday, offered several amendments to the bill. I have hastily examined them; but in my opinion they do not modify the bill in any material respect. They do not remove any of the injustices of the bill or relieve it of its oppressive and, as I believe, unconstitutional features.

The purposes of this proposed legislation, according to the Senate report, are two. The alleged primary purpose of the bill is to establish "community freedom in the selection of motion-picture films." A secondary purpose, as claimed, is to relieve independent interests in the motion-picture industry—producers, distributors, and exhibitors—of monopolistic and burdensome trade practices.

I should like to dispose of this second purpose at the beginning—the argument that block booking and blind selling should be made unlawful because they tend toward a monopoly. There is no denying the fact that the bill, if enacted, will seriously interfere with the freedom of distributors in marketing their films; and, while there is no immunity from legitimate congressional interference, our economy is based upon freedom of competitive enterprise.

May I add that though we are in the grip of powerful bureaucratic forces which impinge upon individual rights and restrict rights of sovereign States, we are not like peoples in some other lands subject to a dictator. I am free to confess, however, that there is a powerful centralizing movement which seeks to reduce the States to shadowy forms, and to concentrate in the Federal Government and its bureaucratic organizations, not only political authority, but the economic control of the Nation. There are Federal agencies which seek to restrain legitimate competition and interfere with the immutable rights which belong to citizens under a democratic form of government.

Unfortunately there are Communists and followers of the philosophy of nazi-ism, who seek to insinuate their views and policies into the political, industrial, and economic life of our country.

We daily witness the extension of Federal authority into private fields of endeavor, and into legitimate industries which are promotive of the welfare of the people. As indicated, socialistic policies are being advocated with no little vigor, not only by individuals and groups, but by agencies and organizations of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the record, as I have indicated, does not disclose that the practices of the industry which the bill seeks to condemn are monopolistic or tend towards monopoly. If this were so, the persons to be most injured thereby would be the independent producers.

It is conceded that Congress has the power to regulate commerce among the several States, but that is not a grant of power to interfere with legitimate business, to take over and control the lives of the American people, or control and dictate their business activities. There are those who under this clause of the Constitution would superimpose upon business of every form the heavy hand of the Federal Government and inaugurate policies destructive of individual initiative and private enterprise, and which would culminate in national socialism.

The contest here and elsewhere is to preserve free enterprise and individual rights and freedom in all that that word implies. As indicated, strong forces here and elsewhere are opponents of this philosophy. In my opinion the rights of individuals under our form of government are not to be subjected to autocratic or bureaucratic control, and the freedom of individuals is to be curtailed only when it is manifest that the public interest demands, and then, only to the extent necessary to protect the public interest. There is no proof whatever that the policies and practices of those engaged in the motion-picture industry, and which the bill seeks to condemn, tend toward monopoly. If this were so, the so-called independent producers of motion pictures would be most injured thereby.

There are, as I recall, more than 100 such independent producers, and if there were a monopoly by the large producers the independent producers would encounter difficulty in marketing their films. Perhaps I should state that there are the so-called eight large producers against whom apparently this measure is aimed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. It is true, as the Senator has just stated, that there are a number of independent producers; but let me invite the able and eloquent Senator's attention to the fact that Mr. Pettijohn, the spokesman for the so-called motion-picture trust, and general counsel for the Hays organization, as shown at page 27 of the RECORD, testified that the Big Eight distribute at least 85 percent of all the pictures produced in this country. In other words, the trust enjoys a monopoly in the distribution of American made films—no matter what companies produce them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not assent to the interpretation which my friend places upon the testimony adduced at the hearings. In my opinion the record does not disclose the existence of a trust, but on the contrary it indicates that there is active rivalry and keen competition among the producers and also upon the part of the distributors. Certainly if 100 or more of the so-called independents do not constitute a trust (and I infer from the Senator's statements that he does not claim that they are a trust) then there is no foundation for the claim that the eight so-called big producers constitute a trust.

As I read the record, these 100 or more so-called independents produce approximately 25 percent of the pictures which are sold, distributed, and exhibited. These producers dispose of their pictures in the same territory and field in which the pictures of the large producers are sold and exhibited. There is no understanding or agreement among the independent producers, so-called, to limit production or to restrict the fields within which they will operate. The so-called "big producers" are competitors in the motion-picture industry. The large producers, so often called by the Senator a "trust," do not, in my opinion, have any of the characteristics of a trust. They are competing with each other and with the independents. Their products are for sale as are the products of the so-called "independent" 100 producers to any person, group, or association desiring to purchase the same. As I read the record, there is great rivalry between the large producers in every branch or department of the industry. There is rivalry and keen competition in the matter of production, leasing, selling, distributing, and exhibiting. Certainly the record does not show any conspiracy in restraint of trade or agreement to monopolize the industry or any branch of the industry. Mere bigness does not constitute a monopoly. The number of automobile manufacturers is limited, and the overwhelming production of automobiles and, for that matter, steel, and many products of industry, is in the hands of a limited number of corporations and individuals. It is true, as indicated by the Senator, that the eight largest producers in the motion-picture industry produce 75 and possibly 80 percent of the films which are released and exhibited by more than 17,000 exhibitors in every part of the United States. I repeat when I state that there is no evidence whatever to indicate that there is any agreement or combination among the eight producers or by any of the producers of the so-called independents, which in any manner affects production, distribution, or exhibition. If the large producers did have monopolistic control of the motion-picture industry, then the so-called independent producers would have experienced the monopolistic power and control of the large producers.

However, if the so-called practice of block booking is to be condemned solely upon the ground that it constitutes a monopoly, then there is no need for the pending measure. If the independents as well as the large producers lease and handle to a large degree their output, and if their practices constitute a monopoly, then they come within the terms of the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act. If the selling of motion pictures in groups or singly, is unlawful, and constitutes a tying restriction within the meaning of section 3 of the Clayton Act, such practice may be forbidden under existing laws.

In the hearings and in the address of the Senator from West Virginia, the word "compulsory" is often used in connection with the words "block booking." As I interpret the record there is nothing to indicate compulsion. Lessors and exhibitors are at liberty to exercise their own free will. If they lease pictures singly or in groups, there is no evidence of compulsion. It seems to me that the proponents of the measure have employed the word compulsory for the purpose of arousing prejudice against the producers, and to attach to any process in connection with the leasing of pictures an opprobrious connotation. It is known that a suit has been brought by representatives of the Department of Justice against some of the producers in which it is charged that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws. May I repeat that if any of the practices of the producers, distributors, or exhibitors are in violation of any Federal antitrust law, then the broad terms of the Federal statutes are sufficient to punish any monopolistic organization. I venture to suggest that pending the outcome of the suit instituted by the Government against any of the producers because of practices alleged to be violative of the antitrust laws, Congress should not enact laws which deal with the same alleged monopolistic practices. It seems to me that by the bill before us we are attempting to indicate to the courts what their course shall be and to shape their decisions to meet certain views, and to give to the Sherman Act a meaning of which it is not susceptible.

An important factor in this connection, is section 3 of the bill which seeks to make it unlawful to sell or lease films by the method called block booking, and which is an elaboration of the words found in the complaint of the Federal Trade Commission against the Paramount Co.—a member of this alleged trust. In that case (brought by the Federal Trade Commission) block booking, so-called, was attacked as a violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as being an unfair method of competition, and also as being an illegal tying clause under section 3 of the Clayton Act. It was contended that block booking created a monopoly. The courts found otherwise. In the pending bill it is again charged that block booking is a monopolistic practice, notwithstanding the Federal courts, under, as I understand, substantially the same character of evidence as produced before the committee reporting this bill, found otherwise. I repeat when I say that the record in my opinion clearly shows that the practices of the large or small producers are not illegal or monopolistic. The case which was brought by the Federal Trade Commission reached the Federal courts and the facts there disclosed were practically a duplicate, with some elaboration, of the hearings upon the bill under consideration.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to my dear friend.

Mr. NEELY. Does the able Senator contend that if there is block booking and it results in monopoly, it can be prohibited by existing law?

Mr. KING. My position, in brief, is that the antitrust laws are so broad, and the courts have so interpreted them, that if there be a monopoly or a combination or agreement or conspiracy in restraint of trade, or if there be practices which tend to monopoly or restraint of trade, then if block booking is monopolistic or will result in monopoly, the antitrust laws may effectively deal with the same.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I invite the Senator's attention to a memorandum concerning this matter which was prepared by Judge Stephens in behalf of the Department of Justice.

Mr. KING. I have read the memorandum.

Mr. NEELY. Let me entreat the Senator to permit me to read it for the benefit of other Members who may not be familiar with it.

Mr. KING. I can only say that after it has been read I shall contend that it is not relevant, and further, that I am not in agreement with the conclusion reached by Judge Stephens if that conclusion is that the record before us (and it was not before him) shows that the antitrust laws have been violated by the motion-picture producers.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the memorandum contains the following:

It has been held by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit that where one distributor refused to lease films other than in groups or blocks, there was no violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, since the distributor of motion-picture films may select its own customers and sell such quantities at given prices or refuse to sell to any particular person for personal reasons without being subject to charges of unfair competition (Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, et al., 57 Fed. (2d) 152). In view of this decision, in order to successfully attack such practices under the antitrust laws, it would be incumbent upon the plaintiff to demonstrate concerted action among two or more of the producer-distributors, and because of the type of practices involved, it is difficult to obtain legally sufficient evidence of a combination among the motion-picture companies to impose such terms on exhibitors. Nevertheless, the practices of block booking, blind selling, and blind booking appear to have curbed independence of action by exhibitors.

This statement by Judge Stephens in which the proponents concur, clearly indicates the necessity for legislation to prohibit block booking and blind selling.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reference has been made to Judge Stephens. Parenthetically, may I say that I had the honor to support him for judge in my own State and to endorse him for a position in the Department of Justice.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, of all the good things the Senator from Utah has ever done, his presentation of this great liberal and humanitarian judge to the American people is the best.

Mr. KING. I will say "amen" to any eulogy which my friend may pronounce upon Judge Stephens. However, sometimes Homer nods, and no judge or lawyer is always right. Many of the ex-parte opinions submitted by lawyers in various Government departments are not entitled to the claim that they are sound and invulnerable. As I interpret the statement read by the Senator, it is not relevant to the issue presented by the bill before us. But if it is claimed that it is relevant, and that it holds in effect that the facts disclosed by the record before us prove monopolistic practices and violations of the antitrust laws, then I feel constrained to dissent from my able and distinguished friend, Judge Stephens.

The weakness of the argument of the proponents becomes apparent in the statement upon which they rely. The contention is that the Congress should declare that block booking and blind selling are monopolistic practices because it is impossible to prove that they are monopolistic. I confess my inability to see the validity of such a contention. In my opinion, if the practice of block booking is monopolistic, it falls within the condemnation of the present laws; if it does not, it is not a monopolistic practice, and I am unwilling to accept the type of proof offered at the hearing as a basis for declaring that the practice is what a competent court found it not to be.

As I gathered from the statement read by the Senator, the view was entertained that the Government had failed to prove its case; i. e., that a conspiracy in restraint of trade had been alleged but that proof was insufficient to sustain the averments. It would appear that the Government contended that the conduct of the defendant company in its so-called block-booking and blind-selling practices constituted a violation of the antitrust laws. The memorandum seems to indicate that the facts did not sustain the charge, that block booking or blind selling, so called, or both, tended to constitute a monopoly.

When indictments are brought against defendants by the Government, the burden of proof rests upon the Government to prove the allegations of the indictment. If the Government institutes a suit against individuals or corporations alleging conspiracy in restraint of trade or monopolistic practices, the burden of proof rests upon the Government to establish the proof of the charges made.

As I have stated, the memorandum read seems to be the contention that the Government failed to prove that there had been an infraction of any antitrust law. Certainly, if the organizations against which the bill before us is leveled are guilty of monopolistic practices and violations of the antitrust laws, then they would be subject to such punishment as is provided in such laws.

As I have stated, the Government has already launched an attack upon the so-called large producers, charging, as I understand, that they have violated the antitrust laws. Apparently the Government believes these acts sufficiently broad and comprehensive to justify the initiation of the proceedings under which they are to be hailed into court. The charges, as I understand, are that the defendants—that is, the so-called Big Eight producers—have engaged in practices monopolistic in character and violative of the Sherman Act.

In the case to which I have referred and which was brought against the Paramount Co., it appears that an investigation was made of the motion-picture industry; and upon such investigation, the Federal Trade Commission instituted proceedings such as they believed were authorized by law. From its findings the case went to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, and that court found that the charges preferred were without foundation.

Mr. President, permit me to quote a few passages from the court's opinion in the case to which my friend has referred. The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is found in volume 57F, second edition, page 152, decided in 1932:

There is no finding by the Commission that the method of negotiation in block booking, which it condemns, was generally successful in the distribution of their pictures to the detriment of respondent's competitors; nor is there a finding in respect to the existence or absence of free and active competition in the industry generally. The record discloses that the respondent's releases in 1923 were but 12 percent of the total releases, and this shows a decline in percentage since 1919. The small producer or distributor, as distinguished from the larger companies, has not been shown to have been affected by any combination between the large companies.

I repeat what I suggested a few moments ago, that there are at least 100 independent producers, and complaints have not been made by them that they have suffered from monopolistic practices on the part of the eight large producers or that they believe that there is monopolistic control of the moving-picture industry.

Returning to the Court's opinion:

The respondent's sales methods have not been shown to have any effect upon its competitors.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. In response to the able Senator's statement that there has been no complaint by the independent producers against the monopolistic practices of the Big Eight, may I not invite his attention to page 9117 of the RECORD for July 14 at which the following appears:

Phil Goldstone, an independent producer of motion pictures and president of the Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association, telegraphed:

"Block booking has gradually killed off and almost eliminated independent production. If independent producers had a fair opportunity to market their product it would cause a complete revival of their industry and the employment of additional hundreds."

I. E. Chadwick, a distiguished producer, who expects the enactment of the bill to enable him to resume activity, says:

"Abolition of block booking will emancipate the independent producer, distributor, and exhibitor, encourage competition and new capital, and reemploy hundreds now inactive and unemployed."

E. B. Derr, an independent producer, says:

"I believe the elimination of block booking is a good thing for the industry in general, and it should surely improve the quality of independent production, as it should open the screens not now available to us for our product."

There are in my possession many telegrams and letters from independents, in protest against block booking and blind selling.

Mr. KING. An examination of the record may disclose that there have been a very few complaints by independent producers; but I insist that there is no substantial evidence to justify the conclusion that block booking has interfered with the independent producers or that any of the practices of the large producers have been other than beneficial to exhibitors, distributors, and indeed to the so-called independents. There are now, as I remember the record, more independent producers than there were 10 or 15 years ago. There has been no reduction in their number, nor has there been any decrease in the output of their production. Indeed, I judge from the record that they have increased their output and have extended their clientele. Certainly, the hearings indicate that some of the persons who, a number of years ago, were trying to obtain the passage of the bill containing substantially the same terms as the bill before us, are still in business and apparently are conducting prosperous operations.

I should add that the so-called independent producers have participated in the same plan of distribution which is followed by the large producers. In other words, they have joined with the large producers in the method of distributing the films which are manufactured. As to the telegram which my friend read, I venture to say that if an examination were made of the facts, they would indicate that the sender of the telegram has been producing pictures for a number of years and has found no obstacles to the sale of the commodities which he has placed upon the market.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Senator will forgive another interruption, Mr. Chadwick's business has apparently been destroyed by the practices of block booking and blind selling.

Mr. KING. It may be that his productions were so unworthy of exhibition that people would not patronize them. The evidence is clear that complaints against some of the productions because they were alleged to be indecent were lodged against films produced by some of the hundred independent producers. So there is nothing to indicate that they have suffered. They are still producing, and are finding no obstacles to the sale or leasing of their pictures. So far as I can understand or interpret the record, there is no justification for their complaints.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, there is nothing in the record to indicate that pictures made by Mr. Chadwick were objectionable or inferior in any particular. My information on the point is to the effect that his productions were exceptionally good.

Mr. KING. Perhaps Mr. Chadwick is to be complimented, in view of the statement as to the merit of his productions. However, we are furnished with no facts which would explain the reason for his lack of success.

I repeat what I said a moment ago, however, that the record indicates that the complaints against certain pictures—and I shall not name them, though reference is made to them in the record—were against the so-called independent producers who are found within the list of 100 referred to.

After these digressions, I return to the opinion of the circuit court for the purpose of reading into the record a few additional paragraphs.

> The respondent's sales methods have not been shown to have any effect upon its competitors—the small producers—when the whole field is surveyed, and it is impossible to say on the evidence that the effects of block booking, as practiced by the respondent, or its cumulative effect, as practiced independently by the respondent and others, has unfairly affected competition. On the other hand, it may fairly be said that all persons engaged in the production of pictures have been able successfully to distribute their product. This has permitted fair competition in the industry.

The court further stated:

> A distributor of films by lease or sale has the right to select his own customers and to sell such quantities at given prices or to refuse to sell them at all to any particular person for reasons of his own. * * *
> The commission may not interfere with the respondents' attempt to effectively dispose of their products as a whole before entering upon negotiations for the disposition of less than all. Nor is this method of negotiation and sales creative of a dangerous tendency to unduly hinder competition or to create a monopoly. We see nothing in the method of salesmanship involved in the respondents' business which has or can have any dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create a monopoly.

Later on in its opinion, the Court said:

> The evidence in the record discloses that the effect of this method of negotiation has not been to unduly restrain the exhibitor's freedom of choice. It is only a small percentage of contracts made which are for blocks offered. The greater number are shown to be for a few pictures only.

In expressing this opinion, the court was considering the very language that is incorporated in section 3 of the bill under consideration. It must be conceded that a court of justice is the body best suited to determine whether the practices complained of lead to monopoly. There is at present a suit under the Sherman Act, filed by the Department of Justice, against the major companies in the motion-picture industry. This complaint alleges that block booking is a violation of the antitrust laws. In my opinion, Congress should not legislate upon this question during the pendency of that suit. Why should the proponents of this measure be so anxious to declare that block booking is unlawful when the court, through regular judicial procedure, is determining that very issue?

It would seem that the desire is to secure a legislative declaration, which would, in effect, attempt to overrule the Circuit Court of Appeals. The court in that case determined the issue adversely to the position taken by the proponents of the bill. Is it, perhaps, because of a fear that the practice of block booking will be found by the court not to be a monopolistic practice—a finding after a review of the complete evidence connected with the controversy? If there is such a fear, should Congress, without the evidence which a court of law can have presented to it as to whether this practice leads to monopoly, declare that the practice does this, and thus remove the issue from judicial tribunals, or, at any rate, impose its views upon the court so that the court might be constrained, if not coerced, to adopt the legislative declaration with respect to certain practices? Manifestly, that should not be done.

The Department of Justice alleges that the practice of block booking suppresses competition. That is the suit to which I have just referred. The industry denies it. The court will not be content with mere allegations—allegations which are now put forward as a basis for the action of Congress on Senate bill 280. The court will ascertain the facts as to just exactly what effect block booking does have. There is no sufficient evidence upon which Congress can base a just and intelligent decision regarding this question, or make a finding that block booking contravenes the antitrust laws. In the absence of sufficient proof on one side or the other—and by "proof" I mean something more definite than the statements of conclusions by the proponents of the bill, or any of the witnesses appearing in behalf of the bill—I am not willing to pass judgment upon a matter that is now pending determination before the courts of the country.

Mr. President, the minority report on this question at page 3 is as follows; and I think this statement, coming from the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] of the minority upon the committee, deserves consideration. They state:

> Moreover, the charges of monopolistic and burdensome trade practices are subject to proof in the courts, which have adequate facilities for weighing evidence and testimony of this nature and the power to correct any abuses found, and such charges and complaints are being tried in court actions constantly. It is not contended that the present laws are defective to prohibit monopolies.

Those connected with the producing and distributing of motion pictures deny any monopolistic practices, and they allege that the enactment of this bill will not abolish monopolistic practices, if there are such; but will, upon the contrary, tend to monopoly. I shall refer presently to the adverse effect upon the small exhibitors of motion pictures which the record shows will follow the enactment of the bill. The Department of Justice in its suit is attacking the practice of producing companies' owning or operating their own theaters. It is the view of many persons that the enactment of the pending bill will increase the percentage of theaters that are owned and controlled by producing and distributing companies. There is reason to believe that this result will follow the penalties that are imposed upon distributors by the terms of the bill.

I shall say more in a moment as to the uncertainty that this bill will place upon the distributor of motion pictures—uncertainty as to whether, in offering to lease a film at a certain price, he will be haled into court as a criminal. Due to the vague standard as to whether he is violating the law, he will be taking a chance every time he offers to lease a picture singly at a price higher than that picture would cost in a group. There can be no minimizing the chance that he will take, nor the fact that he will not know in any instance whether he has violated the law.

What will the result of this uncertainty be? If the producer-distributor owns the theater, he does not lease to himself, and so he does not take this chance. In other words, the chance of being a criminal is not present if he merely supplies his own theaters with films. It seems, therefore, that the direct result of the enactment of this bill will be to increase the percentage of theaters that are owned or controlled by the distributors and producers. In other words, the alleged evil that is receiving attention at the hands of the Department of Justice will be aggravated.

It is difficult to understand how the charge of monopoly can be sustained.

So far as the record shows, there is absolutely no combination or conspiracy between the large producers, or, for that matter, between the hundred small producers. Each is independently engaged; and there is, as I have indicated, intensive competition between the big producers and the little producers, between the little producers as against themselves and against the big producers, and between the big producers as against each other. There is no claim that the so-called Big Eight have entered into any combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. The theater-owning exhibitors are in keen competition one with another. Surely no monopoly exists there. There is no evidence that the independent producers have any difficulty in marketing their films; and it is important to remember that the system of marketing or distribution is what is under attack in the pending bill. If the method of distribution does not adversely affect the independent producers in distributing their products, it seems strange that that method should be characterized as monopolistic and burdensome. If there is a monopoly, or if monopolistic and burdensome practices are being used, existing laws are surely adequate to cope with the situation. Indeed, they are being exerted at the present moment. And if practices not now deemed to be monopolistic are to be made unlawful by legislative declaration, in my opinion that declaration should be supported by conclusive evidence that the practices are contrary to some definite public interest. That evidence, from all that I can learn from the record, is lacking in this instance.

THE UNCERTAINTY OF THE MEASURE

The provision in the bill under discussion which is most objectionable is found in section 3. After providing that it shall be unlawful to require an exhibitor to lease a group of pictures, it is provided that the distributor cannot offer the films individually at such prices, in relation to the lump-sum price for the group, "as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of the exhibitor to select and lease" only such films as he may desire, or as tends to require him to take the group instead of individual pictures.

This provision is utterly indefensible. It requires a distributor to project himself into the mental operations of the exhibitor, to endeavor to ascertain whether a certain price quotation will operate upon such a mind as to restrict its freedom of choice. It calls for metaphysical research, for a psychological investigation. We are to project ourselves into the mind of the person making the lease and the person obtaining the lease to determine whether certain influences exist or do not exist, and the weight those influences may have upon the determination of the choice.

There can be no disputing the fact that there is economy in mass selling. That is recognized in all lines of business. Surely a distributor can offer pictures at a cheaper price if he sells 40 in one contract than if he must negotiate separate contracts for each picture. Keeping in mind the fact that there are 17,000 or more houses in which pictures are shown, to sell singly, or to attempt retail dissemination of the product, would compel such enormous expense as to result in bankruptcy of some of the producers. It now costs 26 percent of the gross receipts for the machinery and the execution of the same involved in the distribution of the films which are produced.

The sponsors of the bill acknowledge that some price differential between group and single leasing is justifiable. Just when does that price difference become such as to restrain the exhibitor in his freedom of selection? What test is to be used? The bill sets no standard. And it must be remembered that a distributor who is found to have unreasonably "restrained" the exhibitor's freedom in this respect is a criminal and is subject to a $5,000 fine, or a year in prison, or both. How can an honest, conscientious, businessman conduct his affairs under such a threat for violating such an indefinite standard? How is a distributor to know whether his price quotation will "tend to require the exhibitor" to take the entire group? Is not the very essence of mass selling the fact that savings are offered to the buyer if he will buy more at a lower price than he would otherwise have bought at individual prices? Is not every wholesale price offered as an inducement to buy more and avoid the higher retail price? Under the pending bill, just when does this inducement become criminal?

If that policy and principle were applied in the business activities of life between wholesalers and retailers in the sale of the commodities of our great manufacturing plants, there would be chaos and destruction in our industrial life.

I digress for a moment to submit an illustration of the effects if the policy referred to were applied to other activities. I recall as a boy the method employed in disposing of animals for slaughter. Several hundred would be gathered and driven from the ranges to eastern markets.

I recall upon one occasion when we were driving a herd of animals to market, a number of purchasers were encountered. Some of them desired to make selections of the best and most suitable animals for immediate slaughter, and offered much better prices for each of the selected ones. We declined to sell under a selective process, because we believed it would not be advantageous, and that after the best animals were selected from the group, the residue would bring a very much smaller price per animal. Accordingly, we disposed of the herd en bloc, receiving an average price for each animal that was less than we would have obtained for the selected animals, but the same price for the entire herd.

Returning to the minority report, it proceeds as follows:

> It would appear to be an obvious fact that motion pictures which are licensed in groups may be more economically licensed at lower prices than those which are licensed singly. It would also appear to be obvious that there is a variation in the position in which various exhibitors are placed in determining whether in their business judgment they can afford to pay more for certain motion pictures separately than when purchased in combination with other motion pictures, and that how much more they could afford to pay would vary with each exhibitor and with each picture. Some exhibitors might believe they could afford to pay 150 percent in excess of the wholesale price for selection of a choice picture. Others might believe that they could not afford to pay more than 25 percent or even 10 percent. It is obvious, too, that the increase which a distributor may in the first instance ask for, and more or less insist upon as to separate pictures taken out of a group, would depend upon the ability of the distributor's salesman readily to sell the pictures not taken by other theaters in the same area and would depend also upon the varying numbers which the exhibitor offers to take or accepts. A quotation on separate individual pictures is indicative that the salesman is attempting to conclude a transaction.
> How then could a salesman ever know that the price at which he at first offers or later insists upon as a condition of agreement for an individual picture in relation to the prices for the picture offered in a group, is such a price as makes his conduct a crime?
>
> No matter how honestly or carefully a salesman would weigh these very circumstances in each individual case, he could never know that he had not violated the law as long as he offered a motion picture separately at a price higher than such motion picture in a group.
> Can any salesman ever be sure that the prices he quoted were such that the exhibitor felt himself free from restraint to select only such films as he may desire and prefer? Does the exhibitor himself know definitely and surely that fact? Can the salesman get into the exhibitor's mental operations to know which he desires and prefers? What makes the exhibitor desire and prefer motion pictures to be exhibited to the public as entertainment for profit, if not mainly the profit that the exhibitor believes may be derived from such exhibition, a factor which is dependent in good measure upon the price at which he is able to conclude a deal for a picture? Moreover, even if the distributor's salesman should feel finally that he has offered a price which gives the exhibitor absolute freedom to take those which he desires and prefers, can the salesman ever be sure that the price he has quoted did not tend to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in production, distribution, and exhibition of motion-picture films? This would be a rule of law which no salesman could safely know is not being infringed by the prices he quoted at the time he was trading with an exhibitor for a deal as to number and prices of motion pictures to be mutually agreed upon between them.

Let us look at this situation in other industries. A man enters a grocery store, intending to buy three grapefruit. He is quoted a price—three for a quarter; but the proprietor announces that if he buys a case of grapefruit, he will be buying them at a rate of about five for a quarter. The purchaser regards this as a good bargain, and leaves the store with a case of grapefruit. Was it wrong for the vendor to offer to sell him a larger quantity at a lower price than for the quantity he had originally intended to purchase?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator's illustration is impressive, but I hope that he will pardon me for observing that it is not applicable; additional factors should be included in the hypothesis. For example, the principle of block booking in the grocery business would operate in this manner. When the Senator's hypothetical customer asked the grocer for grapefruit the latter would have replied, in the language of the moving-picture producers, I have grapefruit, but in order to obtain it you must buy a quantity of everything else in my store—regardless of its quality, utility, or price. In such case, the grocer would be treating the customer as the Big Eight treats the motion-picture exhibitors.

In the circumstances, is it surprising that the independent exhibitors and their patrons demand legislative relief from compulsory block booking?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not concede the parallel invoked by the Senator from West Virginia. A distributor of motion pictures sells only one product; namely, films. To be sure, there are good and indifferent individual pictures, but they all constitute one type of product. A grocer, in selling a crate of grapefruit, may not offer grapefruit of the same quality; some may be good, others inferior. But, the purchaser, in buying the crate, takes the inferior with the choice, and in so doing avails himself of the lower price. The analogy is apparent. An exhibitor is not required to take a different type of goods in order to get pictures. He wants films, and films are all he is required to take.

In answer to the statement of the Senator from West Virginia that the independent exhibitors demand legislative relief from block booking, may I say that in a moment I shall refer to the fact that at least one association of motion-picture exhibitors, numbering some 5,000, testified at the hearings as being opposed to the pending measure.

The conduct of the grocer should not be regarded as criminal. And that is just what is proposed by the bill under consideration, in the motion-picture industry. If inducing a prospective purchaser to buy more at a lower price than he otherwise would buy is to be regarded as restricting the purchaser's freedom of selection and is to be made criminal, then, indeed, every seller of merchandise restricts the buyer's freedom of selection and would be liable to criminal sanctions if the policy embodied in this bill should be extended to trade in general.

THE CIVIC ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE BILL

Much is said by the proponents of the bill concerning the great number of civic organizations which urge its enactment. The report, in listing these organizations, states that "Rarely, if ever, before has purely remedial legislation received such widespread public support." Surely there can be no quarrel with the ideals of these groups. Their sincerity is not questioned.

In my opinion, however, their approval of this bill is based upon an approval of its stated purposes and upon a belief that the bill will bring about the production of better pictures, rather than upon a study of the manner in which the bill, if enacted, will operate.

It is claimed, among other things, that there is no community freedom in the selection of motion-picture films, and that compulsion and coercive tactics are employed to secure markets for the products of the industry. It would seem that there has been an attempt to color, and indeed distort, the situation, and to mislead as to the true situation and the achievements of those who have led the way in the establishment of one of the great industries of our country—an industry which has met the demands of more than 80 millions of people each week. I submit that the facts do not justify the claim that the purpose of the bill is to establish community freedom in the selection of motion-picture films. Such freedom now exists, and no industry exemplifies more of the spirit of democracy and home rule and freedom of competition than the motion-picture industry.

I might add that the term "Community freedom," used by some of the witnesses, seems to have been a sort of a slogan, and to have been a basis for the views which they expressed, or at least it influenced them in the conclusions they reached.

My impression from reading the statements of these groups is that they are influenced by such remarks as "The bill is founded upon the American principle of home rule," quoting from the majority report. Most of these organizations, if not all, have actively aided in the elimination of what they regarded as improper pictures. Their work has been of benefit to the industry. They claim that the bill now being considered will further their endeavors and raise the tone of motion pictures still higher.

I cannot believe, however, that they have considered the effect of the bill in practical operation. They admit that there is nothing in the bill which requires the production of better films. "Better pictures will naturally follow freedom of selection," is their argument. But they do not consider the position of the distributor if this bill becomes law, trying to arrive at a price at which to offer his product which will not place him in jail, his only guide being whether his prices will so affect an exhibitor that he will feel bound to buy a group of pictures rather than only a few.

These groups seem to minimize the fact that many of the highly objectionable pictures from their point of view are not distributed by the eight leading companies, and are not leased as part of a block. It was pointed out during the hearings that the most objectionable type of sex and vice pictures that have been produced have been sold one at a time and not in blocks. There was no contradiction of the statement that this type of picture is not produced or distributed by the eight big companies. They are produced by small, independent producers who cater to a taste that, unfortunately, exists to some extent, and which is very objectionable to the civic and educational organizations supporting the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the able Senator know that the pictures in which a certain woman starred are said to have been responsible for the formation of a League of Decency to protect theatergoers against the obscenities of the screen and that these pictures were made not by an independent producer but by one of the Big Eight?

Mr. KING. Apparently the Senator from West Virginia desires to condemn the large producers because the pictures of a certain person proved attractive. We must recognize that the tastes of all persons are not alike. There are many exhibitions of prize fights, brutal wrestling matches, and pictures of a rather low order, which attract a large number of our citizens. Undoubtedly, there have been pictures exhibited that were offensive to people of refinement and good taste. As stated, there are more than 17,000 exhibitors, and I think that the record will show that the pictures most offensive and characterized as being most obscene are produced by some of the 100 so-called independent producers. At any rate, much as we might desire that all pictures possess the highest artistic and moral quality, our experience demonstrates that that desirable standard has not been reached. The record shows that some pictures of the highest quality are canceled by exhibitors in order to exhibit pictures of a lower standard.

I recall that some of the testimony indicated that a gangster picture was received with wider acclaim than pictures which met the highest standards of excellence both in theme, production, and in the moral and spiritual lessons which they taught. It has taken years to build the motion picture industry, and as one of the witnesses, Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn, stated, in substance, there have been important improvements in the industry; pictures have been taken from what he called the "peep show" business shown in shops and restaurants, and developed into an industry which provides enjoyment and entertainment for millions of Americans.

As I recall his testimony, it was to the effect that notwithstanding the tremendous expenditures in the production of the highest grade of pictures, under the present system and within 30 to 60 days after the first exhibition, they are available for exhibition to the smallest theaters and in the most remote parts of our country at a rental of from $5 to $10.

There are organizations in various parts of the United States in which men and women of character and standing in their respective communities are cooperating with the motion-picture industry for the purpose of improving the public taste and eliminating the exhibition of improper or undesirable pictures. These organizations, I believe, realize that the enactment of the measure under consideration will not prevent the making and showing of some types of pictures that do not meet standards which should be maintained. I think the record proves that the most offensive pictures exhibited are produced by the independent producers, and are sold or leased to whom they please, in blocks or singly as they desire. The demand for these films will perhaps exist so long as does the taste for them. And just so long will the demand be satisfied even if this bill were enacted into law. The Senators, in their minority report, stated:

> It appears from the testimony that many of the organized public groups who have been persuaded to endorse the bill relied entirely upon this statement of purpose without attempting to analyze or understand the enforceable sections of the bill upon which the carrying out of these purposes depend. It is not surprising that these earnest people should be in favor of the stated purposes of the bill, set forth in the first section. It is our responsibility in voting upon the bill to examine the more important sections, however, that will be applied to this industry under the penalties of the bill.

Some groups are supporting this bill upon the theory that it will bring about what they call "community freedom", in the selection of films. They object to so-called block booking because when they go to a local exhibitor to complain about a certain picture that is being shown, the exhibitor in some cases says, "I can do nothing about it. I am forced to take all these pictures; and having taken them, I must play them or lose money." It was repeatedly brought out at the hearings that this answer is merely an alibi—the easiest way to answer a group of public-minded citizens. The facts, as presented at the hearing, show that the exhibitor is not forced to present objectionable pictures.

In the first place, the exhibitors have between a 10- and 20-percent cancelation privilege, depending upon the prices they pay for their pictures. That is, the exhibitor will contract for the entire block of pictures which one company will produce during the following year. When they are actually delivered, he may exercise the right of rejecting 10 or 20 percent of such films for any reason he desires. And he is not required to pay for films rejected.

As an added element of freedom in selection, a new trade-practice code, which is being promulgated by the producers-distributors at the present time contains another cancelation privilege. It is provided:

> An exhibitor shall have the right to exclude from any license agreement any feature which may be locally offensive on moral, religious, or racial grounds.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator has been very indulgent, and I thank him sincerely for his generosity in yielding. May I call his attention to certain language that appears in the record on the subject of the so-called cancelation privilege. I read, with the eminent Senator's permission, from an article by E. E. Witte, which was carried in the Catholic Digest for September 1938, as follows:

> It has always been believed that if a theater owner did not like his block of pictures he could cancel 10 percent of them. Let it be stated, however, that the 10-percent cancelation privilege is a fiction. According to the motion-picture code, exhibitors are allowed to cancel 1 picture in each group of 10. The code, however, does not allow the exhibitor the right to reject 4 or 5 pictures in one group of 10 and leave the remaining groups of 10 to be played in order. Thus the privilege may be defeated by the simple device of putting all the poor pictures in a particular group of 10.
> That is one way of circumventing the cancelation clause. Another way is to make the cheap, quick pictures first. On these the producer knows quite certainly that cancelation will be used. When the movie houses have exhausted their right of cancelation only then will the other pictures be released, some of which may be in class B or C. But at this point your theater can do nothing about it as its right of cancelation has been used up.
>
> It seems that the little-theater owner has certain grounds for complaint against the big producer.

The excerpt just read may be found at page 165 of the Senate hearings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the matter stated in what has just been read by the Senator from West Virginia, but my information from Mr. Kent and those who testified is in harmony with what I have stated, that the new code will permit cancelation of from 10 to 20 percent, and in addition, where pictures are immoral or are regarded as obnoxious, cancelation would be permitted in addition to the 10 to 20 percent of cancelation.

The new code of trade practices appears in the hearings. On page 218 this provision of the code is found:

> Exclusions shall be made proportionately among the several price brackets provided for in the license agreement; but any number of exclusions to which an exhibitor is entitled may be made from the lowest price bracket.

On the same page is an example which indicates the interpretation placed upon the provision and in my opinion supports the views which I have just expressed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator know that the independent moving-picture exhibitors of the country met in convention at Minneapolis 4 weeks ago, carefully considered this so-called code, and by resolution rejected its proposals in their entirety; and that a reason for the rejection was that it appeared that the producers intended to exact higher rentals from the exhibitors in return for the limited additional cancelation privileges proposed?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the resolutions referred to, but if I correctly interpret the statement of the Senator, the action of those present was based primarily, if not solely, upon the ground that it was understood that the producers intended to increase the rental prices for pictures leased to exhibitors. It would seem, therefore, that those present regarded it as a fact that the cancelation privilege of from 10 to 20 percent had been accorded to exhibitors, and that there was no sufficient justification for whatever action they took.

This right is in addition to his cancelation privilege of 10 or 20 percent for any reason. Under this exclusion clause, what greater freedom on the part of the local communities could be desired? Any exhibitor may reject any picture upon moral grounds. Does not this squarely meet the objections raised by the various civic and educational organizations to the so-called block-booking practice? My understanding is that these groups object to pictures which may have a deleterious effect upon their children—pictures dealing with sex, vice, and crime. It seems obvious that any picture which offended the taste of these organizations upon such grounds could very well be excluded upon the ground that it was contrary to local morals. The provision allowing cancelation on moral grounds would seem to answer the objections of these groups and destroy the alibi which has been attempted by certain exhibitors.

Motion pictures, like all entertainment, by their very nature invite criticism. With the continuous stream of films that pours out of the studios all year, it is not surprising that anyone can easily find items that he or she may dislike, the number and proportion of such items depending upon personal taste and critical attitude as much as upon the quality, artistic standards, or popular appeal of the motion pictures. Despite the criticism of individual pictures, there was agreement by all who testified at the hearings that there has been remarkable improvement in the moral, educational, and artistic qualities of motion pictures during the past 8 or 9 years.

During the past quarter of a century there have been remarkable developments in all industries. This age by some has been called the Machine Age. That term is too restrictive; this has been an age of scientific development and of great intellectual and artistic development. The arts have made their contributions to the moral and intellectual and spiritual awakening of the people. There has been a remarkable flowering in literature, in music, poetry, painting, and in those movements which have given to this period a proud preeminence.

The motion-picture industry has made its contribution to the intellectual, educational, and cultural development of the past and present generations. With all of its imperfections, it has furnished wholesome entertainment to millions; it has stimulated thought and inquiry; it has associated itself intimately with what might be called the fine arts and the artistic spirit of the world. It has brought to the people the great dramas of life and the most important historical events and many of the greatest figures in history. It has brought to us not only visions, but also the equivalent of realities. It has brought to us not only pictures, but reproductions of the lives, habits, and customs of the peoples of the world. It has indeed been a democratic force which has contributed to the leveling of international barriers and the removal of unfounded racial prejudices and the development of a broader and more catholic spirit promotive of world fellowship.

And in a material way it has added to the wealth and prosperity of our country. Not only hundreds of millions, but billions of dollars have been expended in this great development. It now brings to the people approximately a billion dollars a year, of which between six and seven hundred million dollars are expended in local communities throughout the United States. The record shows that this is the fourth or fifth greatest industry in our country, employing approximately 300,000 persons.

The record shows that various organizations, including guilds and the American Federation of Labor, are beneficiaries of this industry, and are in opposition to the bill under consideration. There are many statements in the record from men and women of character, and from various walks of life, expressing their appreciation of the accomplishments of this great industry and registering opposition to this measure which, they contend, would prove disastrous to an industry of such magnitude and such widespread benefits.

Referring again to the development of the industry, it may be said, I think, that its growth and improvement have been, in part, due to the active work of public organizations, among them the so-called Legion of Decency. The majority report (p. 15) lightly puts aside the results of these labors with these words:

> Experience as recounted at the hearing teaches that, as a rule, such reforms are sporadic, are always forced by outbursts of public indignation, and are usually of short duration.

In this manner, coupled with the voluntary cooperation of the industry itself, as appears from the testimony at the hearing, and as illustrated in the trade-practice code, it is evident that the American people will, or at least should be, protected against the exhibition of improper pictures.

It is rather singular that the proponents of the bill, basing so much of their argument upon the support of such bodies, regard their work so lightly and seem to think that their good will be of short duration. In my opinion these groups, supported by public opinion in America, will uphold the standards of the motion pictures and will carry them to still higher levels.

Mr. President, a distinguished member of this body—the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY]—appeared before the committee reporting this bill and made a statement which, because of its comprehensiveness and sanity, I feel, should be brought to the attention of the Senate. I shall take the liberty of reading his testimony.

> I want to say that as to certain issues presented by this bill I speak with a great deal of reservation, because I know, Senator NEELY, that you have very patiently and exhaustively listened to testimony here covering every phase of this bill and you know a great deal more about it than I can hope to know at this time.
> There are certain phases of this discussion, however, in relation to which I have very definite feelings, and if you will pardon me, I will make a few remarks so that you may understand why it is that I do believe I speak with some authority. I am fortunate enough to be the father of five children.
>
> My oldest son is now practicing law, and my youngest daughter is 12 years of age. We have been rather enthusiastic movie fans, and with my wife and five children, I suppose we have probably attended almost as many movies as any other family in the United States, because we have enjoyed the shows that have appeared.
> We have used a certain amount of discrimination, it is true, in taking our children to the movies, but I am positive in my own statement that in spite of the fact that my children have seen a great many movies, they have grown up just as normally and just as well and just as highly moral as they would have grown and matured if they had not seen any movies.
>
> Ten or fifteen or twenty years ago we did see a good many movies, either with or without the children, that were offensive. Occasionally we now see certain movies that I would rather not see produced, but, Senator NEELY, I am very, very positive in this statement: That in the last 5 years there has been a tremendous turn of the films away from indecency and suggestive features that we should not see.
> I am not urging here that the movies are perfect. Far from it. Man is not perfect. I would say, however, that compared with the radio and compared with the comics which appear in the papers, the movie is in the lead.
>
> I notice that when it is desired to suggest in the movies some situation concerning sexual relationship, or something of that kind, it is suggested in a subtle way so that the young person does not perhaps understand its implication, so that it has only a meaning for the adult. But I cannot recall that in the last 2 or 3 years I have accompanied my children to a single picture that I would regret their having seen.
> When I was present here the first day of the hearings I heard Mrs. Bannerman, who is very ably leading this fight, read from some critic in New York who stated that out of the first 50 films issued this year only 10 were first class and only 5 were memorable. I suppose, Senator NEELY, that out of 50 books or magazine articles or speeches or even sermons it would be difficult to find 10 first-class ones and 5 memorable ones.

I agree with that statement. I wonder if some of the moralists desire the motion pictures to be more perfect than our preachers, our writers, or the radio, and to set an example in moral and spiritual development which would be imitated by all.

Nearly all the pictures exhibited by the so-called Big Eight motion-picture organizations are reproductions of books which are either best sellers or have won their way in critical circles and among those who have high moral and spiritual concepts. As we all know, there will soon be produced a motion picture based upon a great book written by a southern woman. Undoubtedly, there will be some criticism of it for various reasons; but it will give to the American people a picture of the South during a tragic and dramatic era, which picture will be indelibly impressed upon their minds.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in response to the distinguished Senator's statement relative to the high quality of the moving pictures which he has seen, let me invite his attention to page 9119 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for July 14, on which appears the following quotation from the May 13, 1939, issue of Harrison's Reports—a moving-picture trade paper:

> Let us glance at the crime pictures that have been reviewed in Harrison's Reports since the first week in January: In the 19 weeks since the first week in January, 142 pictures have been reviewed. Of these 82 * * * have been founded on some kind of crime theme—either murder or stealing. Of course, not all of them are demoralizing—perhaps one-third of this number is harmless; but when one takes into consideration the extraordinary high percentage of vicious crime pictures, one wonders whether the Hollywood producers realize what the outcome may be.

Mr. KING. I would prefer to have the Senator's statement appear at the conclusion of the statement made by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY]. Undoubtedly, pictures have been exhibited which depicted crime. For that matter, the daily press of the country contains descriptions of crimes, as well as pictures of various criminal acts, from simple assaults to homicides.

The record discloses that there have been exhibited pictures of crimes by those in the motion-picture industry, but as I have stated, and the record clearly supports this view, there has been great improvement in the industry, and the number of pictures which are obscene and of a low order has greatly decreased.

I have commented upon the fact that there have been pictures of crimes which have been exhibited even in the very best parts of the United States in preference to pictures of a high moral and artistic value. It is said that human beings are imperfect, and they may not rise to great ethical, moral, and spiritual heights as rapidly as might be desired. Reformations do not come overnight. They belong to the evolutionary processes of life. The churches themselves have discovered the weakness of the flesh, the infirmity of the people, and the lack of understanding of many of the great moral, ethical, and spiritual things of life. We read that churches in various parts of the United States are losing their supporters, and some are being abandoned. Notwithstanding the constant efforts of the churches and of our religious leaders to lead the people from materialism to higher forms of spiritual life, it is discovered that their efforts do not always meet with success. It is the work, not of years, but perhaps of centuries, to emancipate man from the drab materialism in which he lives. It is a long struggle to reach the heights of spiritual power and the realization of the benefits and results of true religion.

I return to the statement made by Senator DOWNEY, which is more interesting than anything I might say.

He states:

I am, myself, amazed at the number of good pictures. I know that I would feel a marked sense of inadequacy if I had to produce a good film. I think it requires tremendous talent, genius, and ability to produce a great film. It is not amazing to me that perhaps only 1 out of 10 becomes a memorable film. It is amazing to me that within 30 years, a totally new industry has come to be one of our greatest industries.

It is, I may add parenthetically, the fifth greatest in the United States, furnishing employment to nearly 300,000 people and distributing, directly and indirectly, more than a billion dollars among the people of the United States.

In the history of the world we have not had a similar development in any art.

I recently saw the picture Alexander Graham Bell, a truly great film which in a great way portrays the life of Mr. Bell and his struggle to bring the telephone patent into existence.

Senator NEELY, let me suggest this. If, as I think would be conceded by almost any parent with whom I have talked, the movies at the present time are improving their output from the standpoint of standards of morality, should not serious consideration be given to leaving it in their hands? Is it tremendously difficult for any government to impose a censorship upon art and to secure a better or a more moral output through that sort of censorship.

The work which Mrs. Bannerman and her groups have done has undoubtedly been a strongly motivating influence in helping to produce cleaner and better films; but when it is hoped that by changing a business arrangement between producers and exhibitors you will increase the value and the morality and the art of the film, I do not believe that is possible.

I cannot conceive how our films are going to be made any greater films or any better films because we compel the movie producers to desist from certain business practices that their opponents call monopolistic. As far as I can see, the exhibitor is going to continue to give the people what they want; and the people are going to continue to want the same class of films that they have right now. It is my opinion that in many cases the movies do not produce a certain class of films that they should not produce, and yet those films would undoubtedly appeal to large segments of the theatergoing public.

I think when it is suggested that this change of business practice would produce a more moral and a more intellectual film, it is non sequitur. I think the people who are championing and aiding this movement are being led astray by their own idealism and their own concentration upon this problem, and I would venture this prediction, Senator NEELY, that if this bill should become a law, looking ahead 5 years you would not find the films any better than they are right now or than they would be by the natural evolution of time.

I have no doubt that these hearings probably have had a very fine influence, regardless of what the ultimate outcome of the bill may be; but in California, at least, we are convinced that the leaders in the movement are now doing everything humanly and practically possible to produce films that can be financially produced and be acceptable to the public with the very highest standard and quality.

As I understood from the testimony offered here, perhaps the chief argument offered for this bill was that by freeing the exhibitor from the compulsion of taking certain films he would choose a better class of films, and that would compel the producers to produce better films. I just cannot agree to that. I do not believe that is human nature. I can do nothing more than to express my opinion upon that one phase.

But let me repeat that I cannot conceive that this Neely bill would result in exhibitors demanding of the producers and the producers giving any higher class or more morally acceptable films than they now give.

I have been a practicing lawyer for 30 years. During that period of time I represented many families whose children were in trouble. I suppose that possibly 50 or a hundred children, in families which I represented, had committed some overt act of a criminal nature. I do not remember any one of those cases in which it was ever even thought or suggested by the parents that any bad influence came from the moving pictures and demoralized the child. I know that there must have been weak and defective and diseased juvenile minds going into a movie theater who did receive, and perhaps act upon, improper suggestions. But let me point this out to you: A child of that kind would receive some suggestion that would drive him astray anyway. Among all of the children in the families that I have known I have yet to find one parent who has ever suggested to me that his child had been morally hurt or his life deleteriously affected by anything that he has seen in the movies.

My children, at least, when they attend the movies, do it more as an escape from reality.

Senator NEELY, I watched my boy the other night while he listened to the March of Time, describing the threat of dictators over in Europe. I saw him sit there with a grave and a concerned face, because that was reality to him. He was listening to the accounts of battles and of dictators, something that might plunge the world into war and him along with it. I never see that effect in the movies. In 15 or 20 or 30 minutes after my children have left the movies, any transient influence that the movies might have had upon them has passed away. And I think that in speaking of my chilrden I am speaking of generalities. I know that you can pick an exceptional case. I know that you can describe that case in a certain way so that the impression is left that the movies do have, upon certain of the weaker minds, a tremendously unhappy influence. My experience, however, which has been rather wide, does not prove that or find that to be true.

Speaking upon the other phase of it, I would rather say this. I do not know very much about the exhibitors' complaint, how righteous it is. My principal information comes from Robert Montgomery who talked to me about an hour the other day. He did make out a very strong case for the producers and he did convince me that this bill would tend to disrupt and interfere with production and might result very unhappily for many of the producing companies.

Senator NEELY. Senator DOWNEY, he testified before this subcommittee at length and doubtless told us all that he told you. Do you think that his remarks should be repeated?

Senator DOWNEY. I am not going to repeat that, because you have heard all the testimony. But we in California have watched the movie industry develop over 30 years. We have heard a great deal of gossip and maligning of producers and actors. My personal observation is that they are a very fine crowd of people. I have watched the movie actors out on the sets. They have a tremendously hard job. Do not let anyone tell you that those men who have won stardom and fame, and the producers and writers, also, are not tremendously hard workers. They are. I think they have done a tremendously great work in producing art and recreation for the American people. More than that, I think that the effect of our California movies and the other movies in the United States upon foreign lands is a tremendously helpful one for the American people. Thirty years have gone into the building of a great industry out there on the Pacific coast; and it is my opinion, based, as I say, largely upon what Mr. Montgomery and other people have said to me recently, that this new proposed Neely bill, in breaking down existing standards and substituting nothing in their place, may very seriously and deleteriously affect the movie production.

If this matter goes onto the floor of the Senate I will then have opportunity to advise myself of all the testimony that has been given, so that I can more freely express an exhaustive opinion. But that is all I desire to offer at this time. I just wished to state my position.

Mr. NEELY rose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to hasten along and continue, if I may.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the fact that he had no complaint from parents, I believe.

Mr. KING. No; doubtless the Senator has in mind the testimony of the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] before the committee of the Senator from West Virginia. I have been reading it, and he mentioned the fact that he had received no complaints from parents.

Mr. NEELY. I beg the Senator's pardon. But in reply to the statement, regardless of its author, will the Senator not permit me, with his habitual courtesy, to read a paragraph from another Member of the Senate?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. NEELY. While the Senate was considering a bill similar to the one now before us a year ago, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] participated in the debate, and said:

> I should like to say to the Senator from West Virginia that I heartily agree with what he says. Before I came to the Senate I was common-pleas judge in Atlantic City for 11 years. I presided over the juvenile court, and I found week after week that children on their way home from a movie, where they had seen a gangster picture, broke into some fruit store or committed some act which was a violation of the criminal law, which brought them into the juvenile court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter, and can only repeat by saying that undoubtedly, particularly in the early stages of the motion-picture development, pictures were exhibited which were objectionable, and some of them obnoxious. It should be said, however, that if there are pictures exhibited which are obscene and violative of statutes, the criminal laws may be invoked to protect society against their exhibition.

As I have indicated, criminal statutes are violated, but it is manifestly unfair to attribute to the motion-picture industry the cause of the violation of our penal statutes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not emphasize the number of crime or gangster pictures which are made by the independents. The number of pictures of any kind made by the independents is negligible compared with the number made or marketed by the Big Eight, which control the distribution of at least 85 percent of the entire American production.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with my friend. As has been indicated, there is substantial agreement that American motion pictures have had steady and continuing improvement in their quality—morally, artistically, and educationally. When a measure similar to Senate bill 280 was reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in 1936 (Senate bill 3012, reported in June 1936), in the report of the committee there was reference to the improvement in the quality of motion pictures in the 2 years prior to the report. The report was dubious whether such improvement could be expected to be continued or maintained. Three additional years have elapsed, and in all fairness it must be stated that improvement has been maintained and has progressively continued. It is true that the American public is entitled to choose even as between good pictures; but it cannot be said, upon the record made at the hearings, that a legislative finding would be warranted to the effect that the American people are anywhere prevented from choosing from among good pictures, or from making their choice effective by pressure upon the exhibitors of motion pictures.

WHAT ARE BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING

It would be well at this point to look into the facts in order to determine just what block booking and blind selling are, and their effect upon those engaged in the motion-picture industry.

Block booking is defined in the report submitted by the majority as a practice—

> Whereby each of the eight major producer-distributors leases to the exhibitors during each recurrent selling season its production of pictures for the ensuing year in large blocks—often the entire output—thus affording the exhibitors no choice but to take all of the pictures so offered, or none.

This definition makes it plain that the bill is aimed against the so-called Big Eight in the distribution of motion pictures. In order to keep the record straight, however, it should be stated again that the more than 100 independent producers of films lease their product through block-booking agreements.

The bill proceeds upon the theory that an exhibitor must show all the pictures produced by a certain company if he wants to show any. Assuming that each of the Big Eight produces 50 feature pictures, more or less, each year, an exhibitor needing 200 pictures for 1 year would be limited to the output of 4 companies. If he is required to take all their output, he does not have enough playing time to play the good pictures produced by the other 4 leading companies. Thus, the charge is made that the exhibitor is deprived of the good pictures produced by several of the companies, and is required to show pictures that he does not want to show and that his patrons do not want to see.

Even if block booking were forced upon the exhibitors to such an extent, I am of the opinion that the pending measure will not bring about the results intended, for reasons that I shall discuss in a moment.

However, the evidence as presented at the hearings seems clear that there is no such thing as "compulsory" block booking, as it is termed in the bill. The facts clearly indicate that exhibitors are not required to take "all or none."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, does the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. If there is no such thing as compulsory block booking, will the Senator inform us how it could injure anyone in the motion-picture industry to outlaw this practice?

Mr. KING. I will leave that to the Senator to determine. However, the Circuit Court of Appeals, as I have shown, has held in effect that if there is block booking, it is not a violation of any antitrust laws. If there is no block booking, then of course the bill before us is absurd. The purpose of the bill before us, however, is to bring within the letter of criminal statutes acts which are not criminal. In other words, to make acts crimes which are not crimes, to subject an important industry to governmental control, directly or indirectly.

I return to the point I was discussing when the Senator interrupted me. If exhibitors were required to take all pictures or none, it is logical that each picture would be shown exactly the same number of times in as many theaters as had contracted to take the entire output of a certain producer. Thus, if Paramount should produce 50 pictures in a given year, and enter into 10,000 contracts with theaters to take their entire output, it is inescapable that each of those 50 pictures would be exhibited in each of those 10,000 theaters, if block booking were what the proponents of this measure contend it is. Each picture would have 10,000 bookings.

The facts, however, indicate that this is not the situation; and that fact was clearly illustrated by my friend the Senator from Maine (Mr. WHITE) in his admirable address the other day. For the variations in the number of bookings which each picture has, one need only look at the tables presented at pages 268–271 of the hearings. The figures are for the playing season 1937–38. They indicate that certain pictures—pictures that are box-office attractions—have a very high number of bookings, whereas the poor pictures have very low numbers of bookings; and the pictures range systematically between the two extremes. The figures for six of the eight leading distributors were:

Twentieth Century-Fox: One picture had 12,214 bookings (that is, played in 12,214 different theaters), while the picture with the smallest circulation had only 3,581 bookings. The rest of the output of this company ranged between these two limits.

R. K. O. Radio Pictures: One had 9,567 contracts, while the lowest had only 845 bookings. The 46 pictures produced by this company during that year had bookings ranging between one thousand and nine thousand.

Universal Pictures: Between 10,567 and 2,315 bookings.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer: From 10,298 bookings to 5,455.

Columbia Pictures: From 10,298 to 2,006 bookings.

Paramount: From 13,200 to 3,947 bookings.

These figures—and they were not denied by the proponents of the pending bill—seem to show conclusively that the theaters actually have a wide selection of the pictures released and sold by the eight leading distributing companies.

The variations may be explained upon several bases. For instance, the exhibitor enjoys the 10- and 20-percent cancelation privilege, to which reference has already been made. Also, many exhibitors receive films under what are termed "selective" contracts in the industry. Under such a lease, the exhibitor has the right to select a certain number out of the total that he will take. Thus, he may contract to accept 20 or 25 out of the total output of a certain company. This type of selective contract exists in the industry, although it is not clear just what percentage of the contracts are of this type. Then, there is the fact that approximately 70 percent of the theaters in this county are today showing pictures under censorship. Mr. C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, stated on March 26, 1936, during the hearings upon a bill similar to Senate bill 280, before a subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

I now submit for the record specific proof that 70.62 percent of the territory in the United States is under censorship. There are 31 recognized distributing centers in the United States. In 17 of these centers they cut their pictures to conform with the action taken by local, State, or city censorship boards. This 70.62 percent of the territory of the United States from a revenue standpoint would, in my opinion, cover and serve about 80 percent to 85 percent of our population.

Following is a list of the distribution centers where all positive prints of pictures are cut to conform with regulations of either State, city, or local censorship groups. It also notes the percent of each territory and the total percent of the territory in the United States under censorship:

	Percent
Albany	2.00
Atlanta	2.60
Boston	6.25
Buffalo	3.00
Chicago	6.85
Cincinnati	3.50
Cleveland	4.35
Detroit	4.00
Kansas City	2.50
Los Angeles	3.35
Milwaukee	2.15
New Orleans	1.45
New York	13.50
Philadelphia	6.00
Pittsburgh	4.50
Portland	1.21
Washington	3.41
Total	70.62

Public opinion in the United States will not support obscene and vicious pictures. Indeed, existing law prevents such pictures being made public. Section 396 of Title 18 of the United States Code provides:

Whoever shall * * * deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier, for carriage from one State * * * to any other State * * * any obscene, lewd, or lascivious, or any filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, * * * designed for any indecent or immoral use * * * shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Further, the Federal Trade Commission has been established to prevent unfair trade practices, and the practices condemned in this bill have been found not to be violative of the law. The Sherman Antitrust Act outlaws contracts in restraint of trade. In addition, 70 percent of the country exercises the right of censorship, which destroys the argument that the present practices destroy freedom of selection among the communities of our country.

INJURY TO SMALL EXHIBITORS IF BILL IS PASSED

In my opinion the passage of Senate bill 280 would adversely affect the small independent exhibitors to the point of eliminating many of them from their chosen business.

The present system of distribution of motion pictures has resulted in a fine achievement in that a person can go to his neighborhood theater and see the finest motion picture that can be produced. For a very nominal sum—as low as 25 cents—almost anyone can view a picture that cost 2 million dollars and took 2 years to produce. It is a real accomplishment that the more than 17,000 theaters throughout the country receive films enough to keep their doors open day after day, and that the small theaters in small towns play the very best pictures shortly after they have been exhibited in the biggest theaters. A system of distribution is to be commended whereby large theaters pay thousands of dollars for the same film that small theaters will pay only a few dollars for a few weeks later. I feel that a system of distribution whereby little theaters get the best pictures along with the big theaters should not be destroyed.

It seems that the individual who would be most injured by block booking is the exhibitor. As an abstract proposition, a theater owner in a small town would be well off if he could show only the best pictures that were produced by each of the eight leading companies. His revenue is undoubtedly cut down when he is required to take the entire output of four companies. The result is that he does not have enough playing time to buy the good pictures produced by the other four companies, even if they would sell him only the good ones.

Looking at it from this point of view, block booking would appear to be an oppressive practice; and it would seem to be better to allow him to select his pictures singly, the natural assumption being that he would choose the good pictures of all producing companies. This appears to be the philosophy of the bill under consideration, together with the assumption that the exhibitor's patrons will dictate to him what they consider to be the "good" pictures.

The bill, if enacted, however, will injure these very exhibitors. There are thousands of exhibitors who oppose the present bill; and I am unable to understand how any exhibitor could oppose the measure if the benefits to them which the proponents contend would follow its enactment will materialize.

There has been testimony during the hearings that it is difficult to secure enough first-run good pictures. The enactment of this measure will not make all pictures box-office hits. Where will the small-town exhibitors be in attempting to compete with the Music Hall of Radio City, for instance, which can pay $10,000 for the right to show a single picture? It must not be forgotten that the smallest theater, under block booking, has the same right as the biggest to obtain the good pictures and at a reasonable time after their release.

This bill will bring about destructive competition for the right to exhibit the good films—destructive from the viewpoint of the small exhibitor with limited capital. Under the present method of distribution they are able to receive the good pictures together with the mediocre. If this measure is enacted, the smallest theaters will be left with the poorest pictures, and will be able to secure the box-office hits only after they have lost a good deal of their value through lapse of time.

With a shortage of really good pictures, it is logical to assume that the largest theater could and would buy the best pictures. The next largest theaters would buy the next best films, and so forth, until the smallest theaters would be left with pictures of least worth. I cannot help but believe that the small independent theater owners, for whose benefit it is alleged the bill is primarily designed, will be legislated out of business if the bill becomes law.

As has been stated, the enactment of this bill will, it is believed, result in the absorption by the producing-distributing companies of many of the small theaters; this, for the reason that, rather than incur the risk that will attend the leasing of pictures singly at higher prices than they would bring in groups, the distributors will buy the theaters and thus be spared the necessity of leasing their films under the penalties provided in the bill. This view is strengthened by the fact that the small town theaters will be willing to sell to the producers, simply because they will be unable to compete with large theaters throughout the country for the good films.

I have referred to the fact that many exhibitors oppose the bill; this indicates that they would not oppose it if the benefits would result that are promised by the sponsors of this legislation. The Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, representing an active membership of over 5,000 of the leading theaters of this country, are opposed to the enactment of this bill. This organization, through its representative, Mr. Kuykendall, their president, stated (pp. 350–352, hearings):

Strangely enough, the exhibitors whom I represent, who oppose the Neely bill, are utterly opposed to compulsory block booking and blind selling. We are not at all unsympathetic with the ostensible purpose of this legislation; but we are convinced that the provisions of the Neely bill applied to our business—under criminal penalties—will do nothing but damage. Frankly, I don't believe it is possible to draft a statute that would be practical and effective. * * *

We are opposed to compulsory block booking, if it means that we have to take and pay for unwanted pictures in order to get the ones we want. We want a reasonable selection of the pictures we book; but we must have an assurance of an uninterrupted flow of pictures delivered to our theaters as we need them, and we must buy them at wholesale prices if we are successfully to continue in operation. We are convinced that the way to get the desired selection without wrecking the business is by an option to cancel in every contract, which the exhibitors can exercise at the time the picture is ready for actual booking, not at the time it is licensed.

The small-town exhibitors enjoy a great deal of security under the present system of distribution. They possess the assurance that they will receive all the pictures they need; and this, with a minimum of expense and trouble on their part. In my opinion, the evidence of an alleged need for reform in the industry is not sufficient to warrant the destruction of this exhibitor security. It seems inevitable that the exhibitor, whose freedom of selection is sought to be secured by the enactment of this bill, will be adversely affected by its enactment to the point of being legislated out of business.

Another practical objection to the bill is the great increase in the cost of distribution of films under the requirements of the bill, which must of necessity be passed on to the public. Mr. Pettijohn, before the House committee in 1936, stated:

Distribution cost in the motion picture industry is about 26 percent, and it is estimated by the best brains in the business that it will rise to 40 percent to 45 percent if this bill is passed, thus increasing the cost of the public, of course (p. 433, hearings).

It is only natural that the cost will increase if each film must be handled individually, individual contracts drawn up, synopsis given on each picture, and salesmen by the thousands going around contacting individual theater owners in regard to each individual picture. Added to this will be the tremendous cost of defending litigation that will be imposed upon the distributors of films by the terms of this bill. Under the present system, all this unnecessary waste is avoided.

UNCONSTITUTIONALITY

Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations for the purpose of showing the unconstitutionality of the measure under consideration.

We have before us a criminal statute that is lacking in the definiteness that is required by the due process of law clause of the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

It is fundamental in our law that a statute prescribing criminal penalties for its violation must inform the public as to what conduct is made unlawful, and must establish a standard by which a person, exercising due diligence, may determine whether his actions will subject him to the penalties. The measure under consideration, failing in this respect, is unconstitutional.

Section 3 of the bill provides that it shall be unlawful to lease or offer to lease motion-picture films in a group of two or more and to require the exhibitor to take the entire group or permit him to take none. There is nothing indefinite in that provision, and a distributor would clearly know whether his offer or lease would come within its proscriptions.

However, the section proceeds to make other actions illegal, and subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 are the ones lacking in due process. It is made unlawful to lease or offer to lease films in a group of two or more at a lump-sum price and individual pictures at individual prices, when the relationship between the lump-sum price and the individual prices will:

(a) operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select only such pictures as he may desire; or

(b) tend to require him to lease the entire group or forego the leasing of any number or numbers thereof.

Surely there is no test of criminality here. Mr. Justice Holmes, in the case of United States v. Alford, 274 U. S. 264, laid down what seems to be the test in determining whether criminal statutes are sufficiently definite. The question is, Does the act lay down a plain enough rule of conduct for anyone who seeks to obey the law?

Applied to the language of the bill before us, a person seeking to obey the law could not know whether his price quotations will be such as to unreasonably restrict a particular exhibitor in his freedom of selecting motion pictures; and this, for the simple reason that a man cannot project himself into another's mental operations.

The United States Supreme Court, in the well-known case of Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U. S. 385, stated at page 391:

That the terms of a penal statute creating a new offense must be sufficiently explicit to inform those who are subject to it what conduct on their part will render them liable to its penalties, is a well-recognized requirement, consonant alike with ordinary notions of fair play and the settled rules of law. And a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, violates the first essential of due process of law.

The Court proceeds to say that the question of legislative certainty had been the subject of a great deal of litigation. The precise point of differentiating between statutes lacking in certainty and those held to possess sufficient certainty is not easy of statement. Then the Court stated:

But it will be sufficient for present purposes to say generally that the decisions of the court upholding statutes as sufficiently certain, rested upon the conclusion that they employed words or phrases having a technical or other special meaning, well enough known to enable those within their reach to correctly apply them; or a well-settled common law meaning, notwithstanding an element of degree in the definition as to which estimates might differ, or that, for reasons found to result either from the text of the statutes involved or the subjects with which they dealt, a standard of some sort was afforded.

Let us apply these rules in an effort to ascertain whether subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 of the pending bill satisfy the requirement of certainty. In the first place, statutes have been upheld if they employed words or phrases with a technical meaning, enabling correct application of the words by those who will come within their provisions.

The words used here have no technical or special meaning. The language is plain; but whether a distributor's conduct is such as to bring him within the penalties prescribed is a question that could be answered only by a jury in each instance. It is made illegal to quote prices, as between pictures singly and in a group, that will unreasonably restrict the exhibitors' freedom to select pictures individually, or require him to take a group or forego taking any. This language has no technical meaning which would permit those engaged in the motion picture industry to apply the law correctly. Surely, "unreasonable restriction upon the freedom of selection" has no peculiar significance to distributors from which they can determine whether they are violating the law.

The second type of case upholding language as being definite enough is where there has been a well-settled common law meaning. Thus, the Sherman Act, declaring every contract in restraint of trade to be illegal, was upheld because the phrase "restraint of trade" had a very definite meaning at common law prior to 1890. The question of definiteness was squarely presented to the Supreme Court in the case of Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, and the language was upheld in view of the long history of restraint of trade and attempts to monopolize at common law, it being regarded that the long line of decisions sufficiently defined the words used in the act so that persons could charter their courses intelligently with respect to them. The Supreme Court has subsequently declared of that case:

In the Nash case we held that the common law precedents as to what constituted an undue restraint of trade were quite specific enough to advise one engaged in interstate trade and commerce what he could and could not do under the statute. In commenting on and affirming the Nash case, this Court said in International Harvester Company v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 216, 223:

"The conditions are as permanent as anything human, and a great body of precedents on the civil side coupled with familiar practice make it comparatively easy * * * to keep to what is safe" (Cline v. Frink Dairy Company, 274 U. S. 445, at 460).

As was said in the famous case of United States v. Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, 221 U. S. 1:

There can be no doubt that the sole subject with which the first section deals is restraint of trade as therein contemplated, and that the attempt to monopolize and monopolization is the subject with which the second section is concerned. It is certain that those terms, at least in their rudimentary meaning, took their origin in the common law, and were also familiar in the law of this country prior to and at the time of the adoption of the act in question.

Similarly, the phrase "reasonable rates" in the field of public utility regulation has been held sufficiently certain in view of its use for many years at common law, prior to its usage in regulatory statutes. The same may be said of such a well-known standard as "due care."

But there is no common-law meaning of the words "unreasonable restraint of the freedom of selection." There are no cases to which a distributor may turn to ascertain what is regarded as "freedom of selection," or what has been held to be a restraint of such freedom. The indefinite language of this bill cannot be upheld upon the ground that the words used have a common law meaning.

Nor is there "a standard of some sort" afforded. The standard is simply what goes on in the mind of any exhibitor. It is a standard of whether the relationship between two prices restricts his freedom of selection and requires him to take a group of films or to forego buying any. It is a standard that will vary with every exhibitor, and with the same exhibitor in connection with each picture.

Criminal penalties, it is submitted, cannot be predicated upon a test so dubious and uncertain.

The United States Supreme Court quoted with approval the following words from the decision of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in the case of United States v. Capital Traction Company, 34 App. D. C. 592:

> The dividing line between what is lawful and unlawful cannot be left to conjecture. The citizen cannot be held to answer charges based upon penal statutes whose mandates are so uncertain that they will reasonably admit of different constructions. A criminal statute cannot rest upon an uncertain foundation. The crime, and the elements constituting it, must be so clearly expressed that the ordinary person can intelligently choose, in advance, what course it is lawful for him to pursue. Penal statutes prohibiting the doing of certain things, and providing a punishment for their violation, should not admit of such a double meaning that the citizen may act upon the one conception of its requirements and the courts upon another.

(Quoted by the Supreme Court in the case of Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U. S. 385, at 393.)

In that case, a statute making it illegal for a street railway company to run an insufficient number of cars to accommodate passengers "without crowding" was held void for uncertainty. The Court said:

> What shall be the guide to the court or jury in ascertaining what constitutes a crowded car? What may be regarded as a crowded car by one jury may not be so considered by another. What shall constitute a sufficient number of cars in the opinion of one judge may be regarded as insufficient by another * * *. There is a total absence of any definition of what shall constitute a crowded car. This important element cannot be left to conjecture, or be supplied by either the court or the jury. It is of the very essence of the law itself, and without it the statute is too indefinite and uncertain to support an information or indictment.

The case of Connally v. General Construction Co. (269 U. S. 385), above cited, held that an Oklahoma statute was void under the fourteenth amendment as being too indefinite to constitute due process of law. The statute required those who contracted with the State to pay their employees "the current rate of wages in the locality." Both the phrases "current rate of wages" and "locality" were deemed to be lacking in certainty, the Court concluding:

> The result is that the application of the law depends not upon a word of fixed meaning in itself, or one made definite by statutory or judicial definition, or by the context or other legitimate aid to its construction, but upon the probably varying impressions of juries as to whether given areas are or are not to be included within particular localities. The constitutional guaranty of due process cannot be allowed to rest upon a support so equivocal.

Another case in point, decided by the Supreme Court, is that of Champlin Refining Co. v. Commission (286 U. S. 210), involving a statute which made it unlawful to produce crude oil in such manner as to constitute waste, which shall include "economic waste, underground waste, surface waste, and waste incident to the production of crude oil in excess of transportation or marketing facilities or reasonable market demands."

In invalidating this statute, as repugnant to the fourteenth amendment, the Court said, at pages 242–243:

> The general expressions employed here are not known to the common law or shown to have any meaning in the oil industry sufficiently definite to enable those familiar with the operation of oil wells to apply them with any reasonable degree of certainty. The meaning of the word "waste" necessarily depends upon many factors subject to frequent changes. No act or definite course of conduct is specified as controlling and, upon the trial of one charged with committing waste in violation of the act, the court could not foresee or prescribe the scope of the inquiry that reasonably might have a bearing or be necessary in determining whether in fact there had been waste * * * In the light of our decisions, it appears upon a mere inspection that these general words and phrases are so vague and indefinite that any penalty prescribed for their violation constitutes a denial of due process of law. It is not the penalty itself that is invalid but the exaction of obedience to a rule or standard that is so vague and indefinite as to be really no rule or standard at all.

An act of Congress made it a crime to build a fire "in or near any forest, timber, or other inflammable material upon the public domain," and to leave it burning. Against the charge that the language was too indefinite, the Supreme Court said:

> The word "near" is not too indefinite. Taken in connection with the danger to be prevented it lays down a plain enough rule of conduct for anyone who seeks to obey the law (United States v. Alford, 274 U. S. 264).

As has been stated, however, the language of the pending measure lays down no rule of conduct by which a person seeking to obey it could conduct himself. Whether the difference between wholesale and retail prices will tend to require a prospective customer to take the wholesale lot or forego buying at all is a matter of individual concern. It is no rule of conduct, no standard.

The claim may be made that since the words "unreasonable restraint" are employed in the bill, the statute is enough like the Sherman Act as to be sufficiently definite. Such a claim, however, is untenable. The Colorado Anti-Trust Act, declaring unlawful contracts and combinations in restraint of trade, was held to be void as too uncertain, because it contained a proviso that such contracts were not unlawful when necessary to enable the participants to obtain a reasonable profit. The United States Supreme Court, in the course of its decision nullifying that statute, stated at page 457 (Cline v. Frink Dairy Company, 274 U. S. 445):

> Such an exception in the statute leaves the whole statute without a fixed standard of guilt in an adjudication affecting the liberty of the one accused. An attempt to enforce the section will be to penalize and punish all combinations in restraint of trade in a commodity when in the judgment of the court and jury they are not necessary to enable those engaged in it to make it reasonably profitable, but not otherwise. Such a basis for judgment of a crime would be more impracticable and complicated than the much simpler question in the Cohen Grocery case, whether a price charged was unreasonable or excessive. The real issue which the proviso would submit to the jury would be legislative, not judicial. To compel defendants to guess on the peril of an indictment whether one or more of the restrictions of the statute will destroy all profit or reduce it below what would be reasonable, would tax the human ingenuity in much the same way as that which this court refused to allow as a proper standard of criminality in International Harvester Company v. Kentucky (234 U. S. 216, 232, 233).

The Court concluded (p. 465):

> But it will not do to hold an average man to the peril of an indictment for the unwise exercise of his economic or business knowledge involving so many factors of varying effect that neither the person to decide in advance nor the jury to try him after the fact can safely and certainly judge the result. When to a decision whether a certain amount of profit in a complicated business is reasonable is added that of determining whether detailed restriction of particular antitrust legislation will prevent a reasonable profit in the case of a given commodity, we have an utterly impracticable standard for a jury's decision. A legislature must fix the standard more simply and more definitely before a person must conform or a jury can act.

In the course of that opinion, the Court refers to and quotes from its opinion in the well-known case of United States v. Cohen Grocery Company (255 U. S. 81), which held unconstitutional the so-called Lever Act. The Court said in that case:

The sole remaining inquiry, therefore, is the certainty or uncertainty of the text in question, that is, whether the words "That it is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully * * * to make any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessaries" constituted a fixing by Congress of an ascertainable standard of guilt and are adequate to inform persons accused of violation thereof of the nature and cause of the accusation against them. That they are not, we are of opinion, so clearly results from their mere statement as to render elaboration on the subject wholly unnecessary. Observe that the section forbids no specific or definite act. It confines the subject matter of the investigation which it authorizes to no element essentially inhering in the transaction as to which it provides. It leaves open, therefore, the widest conceivable inquiry, the scope of which no one can foresee and the result of which no one can foreshadow or adequately guard against. In fact, we see no reason to doubt the soundness of the observation of the court below, in its opinion, to the effect that, to attempt to enforce the section would be the exact equivalent of an effort to carry out a statute which in terms merely penalized and punished all acts detrimental to the public interest when unjust and unreasonable in the estimation of the court and jury.

Cases on this point might be multiplied indefinitely, but perhaps the most famous is that of International Harvester Company v. Kentucky, decided in 1913 and reported in 234 U. S. 216, Mr. Justice Holmes rendering the opinion of the Court. That case dealt with the Kentucky antitrust law, which was to the effect that "any combination for the purpose of controlling prices was lawful unless for the purpose or with the effect of fixing a price that was greater or less than the real value of the article." The Court very clearly indicated the distinction between what is permissible and what is unconstitutional along the line of uncertainty. It stated:

In our opinion it (the law) cannot stand. We regard this decision as consistent with Nash v. United States (229 U. S. 373, 377), in which it was held that a criminal law is not unconstitutional merely because it throws upon men the risk of rightly estimating a matter of degree—what is an undue restraint of trade. That deals with the actual, not with an imaginary condition other than the facts. It goes no further than to recognize that, as with negligence, between the two extremes of the obviously illegal and the plainly lawful there is a gradual approach and that the complexity of life makes it impossible to draw a line in advance without an artificial simplification that would be unjust. The conditions are as permanent as anything human, and a great body of precedents on the civil side coupled with familiar practice makes it comparatively easy for common sense to keep to what is safe. But if business is to go on, men must unite to do it and must sell their wares. To compel them to guess on peril of indictment what the community would have given for them if the continually changing conditions were other than they are, to an uncertain extent; to divine prophetically what the reaction of only partially determinate facts would be upon the imaginations and desires of purchasers, is to exact gifts that mankind does not possess.

This language, it would seem, is strikingly applicable to the situation presented by the pending measure. Producers and distributors of motion pictures must continue to lease their wares, and to compel them to guess, on peril of indictment, whether a price that they are about to quote will unreasonably restrict the offeree's freedom of choice or will tend to require him to lease all or none, is to "exact gifts that mankind does not possess." Dealing with a man's state of mind—with the manner in which a man will receive a price quotation—is not dealing with ascertainable fact. It delves into the metaphysical.

The views of the Court in the above-cited case were further amplified in that of Collins v. Kentucky (234 U. S. 634), which involved the same Kentucky statute. The Court further clarified its position:

The Harvester Co. was prosecuted for being a party to a price-raising combination; Collins, for breaking a combination agreement and selling outside the pool which he had joined. With respect to each, the test of the legality of the combination was said to be whether it raised prices above the "real value." If it did—in Collins' case—he would be subject to penalties for remaining in the combination; if it did not, he would be punishable for not keeping his tobacco in the pool. He was thus bound to ascertain the "real value," to determine his conduct not according to the actualities of life, or by reference to knowable criteria, but by speculating upon imaginary conditions and endeavoring to conjecture what would be the value under other and so-called normal circumstances with fair competition, eliminating the abnormal influence of the combination itself, and of all other like combinations, and of still other combinations which these were organized to oppose. The objection that the statute, by reason of its uncertainty, was fundamentally defective was as available to Collins as it was to the Harvester Co.

There can be no doubt that the question of whether or not an exhibitor will feel that his freedom of selection has been restrained by price relationships is not a "knowable criterion."

It is important to remember in considering this measure that the bill proposes a criminal statute providing a fine of $5,000 or 1 year's imprisonment, or both, for its violation. The United States Supreme Court holds that the requirement of definiteness in statutory language is stronger in criminal statutes than in civil. This point was clearly presented in the case of Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel (258 U. S. 242), in which case the Court upheld language in the New York housing laws as sufficiently definite. The statute was of a civil nature, and provided that a tenant should have a defense in a suit for his rent if the rent were unjust or unreasonable. The Court said:

While the act is in force there is little to decide except whether the rent allowed is reasonable, and upon that question the courts are given the last word. The standard of the statute is as definite as the "just compensation" standard adopted in the fifth amendment to the Constitution and therefore ought to be sufficiently definite to satisfy the Constitution. United States v. Cohen Grocery Company (258 U. S. 81), dealing with definitions of crime, is not applicable.

The Lever Act, to which reference has been made, provided that it shall be unlawful for a seller to exact excessive prices for necessaries. In the case of Weeds, Inc., v. United States (255 U. S. 109), the defendant was charged with an indictment alleging that it had exacted excessive prices. The Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment quashing the indictment, stated:

The ruling in the Cohen case is decisive here unless the provision as to conspiracy to exact excessive prices is sufficiently specific to create a standard and to inform the accused of the accusation against him, and thus make it not amenable to the ruling in the Cohen case. But, as we are of the opinion that there is no ground for such distinction, but, on the contrary, that the charge as to conspiracy to exact excessive prices is equally as wanting in standard and equally as vague as the provision as to unjust and unreasonable rates and charges dealt with in the Cohen case, it follows, for reasons stated in that case, that the judgment in this must be reversed and the case remanded with directions to set aside the sentence and quash the indictment.

If it is too vague to enact penalties for charging excessive prices, the language of the bill under consideration would seem to be a greater offense against the "due process of law" clause. The bill adds to the vagueness of the phrase "excessive prices" the equally uncertain standard of whether or not individual prices for pictures will operate upon each exhibitor as "excessive" so as to tend to require him to take a group rather than single pictures. To an indefinite relationship between wholesale and retail prices is added the subjective problem of its effect upon another's mental operations.

Laws which create crime ought to be so explicit that all men subject to their penalties may know what acts it is their duty to avoid. Before a man can be punished, his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute.

So said the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Brewer (139 U. S. 278), at page 288.

As has been stated, the Federal cases setting up a standard of definiteness in the field of criminal statutes might be listed indefinitely. It would be impossible to go into the host of State cases to the same effect. However, the preceding review of the leading cases in this field suffices to indicate the limits of the rule. It is enough to say, from a reading of the cases, that a criminal statute must define with certainty the crime and must furnish an ascertainable standard of guilt to guide and inform the public what it is their duty to avoid; and if a statute fails to do this, and delegates to a jury the fixing of the test or standard, it is lacking in due process of law, is unconstitutional, and void.

With these principles in mind, the practical effect of the language in the present bill may be examined, with a view to determining whether or not the language itself furnishes a guide to the conduct of those who would obey the law.

Subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 require a distributor, in marketing his product, to project himself into the mental operations of the exhibitor in an endeavor to ascertain whether or not a certain price quotation will operate upon such a mind as to restrict its freedom of selection.

It is a recognized fact in all lines of business that there is economy in mass distribution. The language of the bill indicates that some price differential between group and single leasing is justifiable. When does this price difference become such as to restrain the exhibitor in his freedom of selection? What test is to be used? Is it a question of whether or not a reasonable, ordinary exhibitor would be restricted by certain prices; or is it a question of whether or not this particular exhibitor was in fact restricted? The bill gives no answer.

A distributor who is found to have unreasonably restrained the exhibitor's freedom in this respect is a criminal. How can one conscientiously seeking to obey the law market his product under a threat for violating such an indefinite standard? Every wholesale price, and block booking is a form of wholesaling, is offered as an inducement to buy more and avoid the higher retail price. Under the provisions of the bill when does this inducement become criminal?

Let it be assumed that a higher price for a picture individually leased may be justified upon the ground of cost. Suppose a distributor were willing to lease an outstanding picture at a very nominal sum when it is included in a group of other pictures, but that there were a great demand for the picture individually—a demand by big theaters which are willing to pay a very high price for that one picture alone. Because of this demand, the distributor feels that he must quote a high price to a small exhibitor who desires that picture alone; if he should quote a lower price, he would be losing money, because large theaters are willing to pay more. The price he quotes to the small exhibitor is so high in comparison with the patronage of the small exhibitor that the exhibitor feels that he cannot afford to pay the price; and yet he could have afforded to buy that picture in connection with a group, because the price for the entire group reduces the average cost for the outstanding pictures.

Under such circumstances, is the distributor liable to the penalties provided in the bill? Under the wording of the bill he is a criminal. He has quoted a price for a group which the exhibitor felt he could afford; but he quoted a price for an individual picture which seemed so high to that particular exhibitor that it tended "to require him to forego the leasing of any number of the group."

The bill does not make differences in cost a defense to an indictment under its provisions. The sole test is whether or not the difference in prices quoted, as between group and single pictures, operates unreasonably to restrict the exhibitor's freedom of selection or tends to require him to lease an entire group or none.

If inducing a prospective purchaser to buy more at a lower price than he otherwise would buy is to be regarded as restricting the purchaser's freedom of selection and is to be made criminal, then, indeed, every vendor of merchandise restricts the buyers' freedom of choice, and would be liable to criminal penalties if the policy embodied in the bill should be extended to trade in general.

As was asked in the minority report on this measure:

> Can any salesman ever be sure that the prices he quoted were such that the exhibitor felt himself free from restraint to select only such films as he may desire and prefer? Does the exhibitor himself know definitely and surely that fact? Can the salesman get into the exhibitor's mental operations to know which he desires and prefers?

The mere posing of such questions indicates the lack of certainty in the standard of criminality proposed by the bill. The bill proposes to create new penal offenses; and in so doing a standard so vague is established that "men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its application." The indefiniteness of the language used cannot be supported on the analogy of the Sherman Act; the courts have been too persistent in explaining the reason for upholding the uncertain term, "restraint of trade." There is no such ascertained common-law meaning of the phrases employed in the bill as was found with respect to the Sherman Act.

The standard, if there be one, is such as to leave the question of guilty conduct purely conjectural. The words of the Supreme Court must be remembered: "The dividing line between what is lawful and unlawful cannot be left to conjecture."

It might well be added that the guilt of a man may not depend upon the effect of certain outside phenomena upon another's mind. Subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 of the bill clearly do not lay down a rule of conduct by which a person seeking to obey the law may guide his actions. The bill, failing to supply an adequate standard of guilt, lacks that quality of due process of law which is guaranteed in the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution.

I therefore unhesitatingly say that the bill, if enacted, would be unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer, but, before concluding, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, excerpts from the testimony given before the committee by several of the witnesses who testified before the subcommittee reporting the bill. Their names are:

Sidney R. Kent, president, Twentieth Century-Fox Corporation; Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for Motion Picture Producers & Distributors Association; Dr. Russell Potter, Columbia University, representing the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures; George J. Schaefer, president, RKO Radio Pictures Corporation; William F. Rogers, general sales manager, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Robert Montgomery, representing Screen Actors' Guild; Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Screen Actors' Guild; Mrs. Florence Fisher Parry, of Pittsburgh, Pa., writer and businesswoman; and Mrs. Piercy Chestney, president of the Macon Little Theater, Macon, Ga.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before concluding his remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, by virtue of an existing order, the Senate must, at the expiration of 3 minutes, vote on the bill. In the meantime I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum by Abram F. Myers, chairman of the Board of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, in which he answers, and, in my opinion, conclusively refutes the arguments made against the bill in the Senate last Friday.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, providing the memorandum submitted by Mr. Myers may appear in the RECORD following the excerpts I am presenting.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The excerpts from testimony given before the committee inserted by Mr. KING as a part of his remarks are as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF SIDNEY R. KENT, PRESIDENT OF TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX CORPORATION

I want to confine myself strictly to the merits of the bill. I agree with your remarks, Senator NEELY, in the record, that there are only two things that matter here, after all. One is whether block booking and blind selling are a bad practice. The other is—Is this the proper way to make them right? I am going to confine myself to that argument. I want to talk on the general aspects of the bill, of course, and its practical application to the sale and manufacture of motion pictures, based on by 23 years of experience.

I am speaking for the eight major producers and distributors, who make from 75 to 80 percent of the quality motion pictures that are made in America and who distribute them throughout the world. It is not my purpose to cover specifically all of the things that I will touch here in a general way. We will have here experts who will testify to whatever extent the committee desires in amplifying and proving any statements that I may make generally.

For example, when I state that the bill as drawn is entirely impractical from the standpoint of motion-picture making as the people who have to make motion pictures know it, we will introduce evidence to prove that point, and that evidence, we think, will practically demonstrate our position, so that you will not have to rely on my statement.

I do not know whether this committee approves of the trade practice of block booking or blind buying. I cannot believe that they would wish to inflict a hardship on this industry for the sake alone of inflicting it, or even, if in the opinion of the committee legislation was necessary, that they would include or retain hardships now in this bill, that accomplish nothing and do not, we contend, even reach the end that the author has in mind.

* * * * * * *

First, I would like to analyze the two interests who are supporting the Neely bill, first from the angle of the trade itself, and second from the public angle, which I will come to later.

The Allied Exhibitors Association—there is no secret about this—has been very active in support of the Neely bill. I think it is pretty well known that they are the ones who have done the consulting in the drawing of this bill. There are in this country approximately 12,000 independent exhibitors, of which I think the Allied claim approximately 4,000 in their membership.

Senator WHITE. What do you mean by independent exhibitors?

Mr. KENT. I mean exhibitors who run their own business, Senator. I mean exhibitors who are not affiliated with any producer or distributor but who make their living out of their own operation.

There is another organization, known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which, the Allied people will tell you, is not an independent organization. I will let Mr. Kikeyndall, the president, fight that out for himself, but I know that there are nine State organizations, with which I recently negotiated on our trade practices, who were just as independent as either Allied or anyone else who calls himself a true independent, and I know that none of them are here in favor of this bill.

So, I say, leaving out the producers and their interests, and leaving out the distributors and their interests, and saying that we are entitled to no consideration at all, and putting this bill on the basis of just the independent exhibitors of the country, the majority of the independent exhibitors of the country are against this bill. It seems to me that a bill as dangerous as this is in its consequences should be based on facts, if the facts are available. I say that if the majority of the independent exhibitors of this country were given a chance to vote on this bill, they would reject it, but that is just a statement. However, it is entitled to just as much weight by your committee as the statements of the gentlemen on the other side, who have said the opposite.

In my 23 years of work in this industry, I have been closely associated with exhibitors and exhibitor associations. I have been present and taken part in every one of the many sessions for trade reforms that have been held in the motion-picture industry. I know the problems and the complaints of the independent exhibitor equally as well as the author of this bill. I know as many of them by name as anyone else who has testified or will testify here, or as well as anyone else in the industry. I think that I can say, with as much right to say it as anyone else who testified on the other side, that the majority of the independents, as I know them, do not favor the Neely bill.

If this bill were the salvation of the independent exhibitor, not all of the independents in this industry are fools outside of the Allied organization. They know what they want; they will fight for it just the same. I will go back of this bill to the last three or four bills we have had on block booking down here, and there has been, at any time I know of, one organization that was trying to abolish block booking and blind selling.

* * * * * * *

As to the economic aspects of block booking and blind buying I make the statement that no industry could have expanded and grown as this one has if the method of sales and commercial intercourse between buyer and seller was oppressive or stifling. For 15 years I have waited in vain, in spite of general charges that have been made, to see someone submit a list of the constantly talked of independents who have been put out of business by block booking and blind buying. It seems to me unfair that year after year this claim is made that block booking and blind buying is putting not only themselves but others out of business, and yet they are here year after year not only with the same theaters but, in many instances, with more theaters.

* * * * * * *

A lot has been said in this hearing about the right of a man to buy what he wants to buy at a time when he wants to buy it. I will admit that that is a very sacred right, but I do not believe that under the Constitution it is any more sacred than the right to choose your own customer and decide whether you will sell or will not sell, or that you will or will not allow a man to pick out three or four choice pictures that you have made out of a group and throw the rest away, as long as you are in open and free competition in doing it.

The company that I represent will spend this year approximately $30,000,000 in the building of a motion-picture program. It will spend that money based on its faith that it has showmanship enough and reputation enough and assets enough to make 52 motion pictures that will bring that money back with a profit. That program is built without one dollar of guaranty from any of these gentlemen that we will get a single dollar of it back. I feel that the right to protect that investment, even if we are a large unit and sell that merchandise in our own way, is as sacred as any man's right to buy it his way, as long as we are freely and openly competing.

* * * * * * *

Furthermore, I wish to say that there is no law in this country that forces anyone in these public bodies to go to see any picture that he does not consider satisfactory or suitable. As a matter of fact, the good work that these public bodies have done has been in building up the types of pictures that they want the producers to make and supporting them, and staying away from the type of picture they do not like, because there are not three or four people in a town of 20,000 or 25,000 who can prescribe what everybody else in that town wants to see. Opinions of pictures are very, very different.

* * * * * * *

When this bill was first introduced, it was stated by the public groups who testified—I think it was 2 years ago—that there was a moral issue involved and that this was their predominant interest. In the other block-booking bills we had up until 2 years ago, which was the first time the public was definitely tied in, block booking was attacked on the ground of economics. It was bad economics and was bad for the exhibitor. Finally that was given up, and now the public issue has been brought in, and the claim is that the morals of the motion pictures are bad.

I do not believe that anyone can state seriously today that the part of this industry which lives under our production code is not living up to its obligation from a moral standpoint. I think a cross section of the press of the country will bear that out. Neither do I believe that any honest exhibitor will get up here and testify that he can consult with public bodies and run his theater except in a very general way. For any man to say that he can consult on every picture, if he is using three or four pictures a week, or two pictures a week—it just cannot be done.

Whether the exhibitor buys his pictures singly or collectively, or buys those that, in his opinion, will make for him the most money, for which I do not blame him, if he does not buy pictures that make money for him, that is a bad sales plan for him, just as bad as he calls block booking, in some instances.

We are in favor of a militant public interest. I think that the public has done great things for this industry. I think that this industry needs militant public opinion. We feel it very quickly when any of our people get out of line. They get word to us very quickly that we are stepping over the line.

Block booking and blind buying are as old as the industry itself. This form of selling came into being due to the desire on the part of exhibitors to have a steady and known source of product, week in and week out. If you will notice the announcements of most of these companies, they provide for 52 pictures a year. That is not just an accident. It might be said, Why not 56 or 48? It is 52 because there are 52 weeks in a year, and because the exhibitors, many years ago, when they tied in with one source of supply, wanted to have a picture every week, and the producer had to make 52 releases in order to keep the exhibitor open.

* * * * * * *

It is apparent to me as a salesman exactly what will happen under this bill as it is now written, even though any producer or distributor would be foolish enough to run a risk of the drastic penalties of the bill. For example, an exhibitor comes into my office, and I have 10 pictures in various stages of completion at the studio—which is more than anybody usually has; it is ordinarily five or six—and I take a chance and give him a synopsis or shooting script as far as I can. If the price I quote is right, and he makes money on those pictures, you will never hear another word about them. But if the deal turns out to be bad for him financially on one or all of them, he will take me into court under the terms of this act, and even if I should succeed in winning, I would be put to the terrific expense of defending what I had done in connection with each of these pictures.

* * * * * * *

I cannot figure out the exact mathematical point required by this bill, the point at which the wholesale price is just right as against the individual price quoted. The result would be that if the wholesale price I quoted was to the liking of the exhibitor, he would take it. He could state that either the wholesale or the individual price was too high, but I would be in for a lawsuit.

Here is an industry, gentlemen of this committee, whether you approve this trade practice or not, that is vitally important in itself and very important to American business in general. Its value in foreign countries as a salesman of American merchandise can be attested to by our own Department of Commerce. I am citing this not as a reason why any wrongs that exist should not be righted, if they exist, but because a wrong trade practice, if wrong, should not be made the reason for harming or hog tying an entire industry without the most careful study.

Here is a business doing annually hundreds of millions of dollars, developed to the present importance in size and quality by Americans; an industry that pays higher wages to labor than any other industry in America, barring only two or three small, highly specialized groups; an industry whose people pay more taxes because of the brackets in which they fall than any other industry of similar size; an industry that has gone through the entire depression without one dollar of Government help; an industry which, while billions were being spent to carry on other lines of business, has fought its own financial fight and carried its own burdens.

Different from any other export business, this industry does not send merchandise or material out of the country, such as happens in the exportation of an automobile. Our product is manufactured completely here; only the shadows go out to be shown abroad. It is entirely a product of American labor and personalities. It is entirely proper that some heed be given to the foreign problems now facing this industry. I cannot believe that they are of no interest to this committee.

* * * * * * *

The producers and distributors for whom I am speaking, who spend annually approximately $200,000,000 in production, believe also that they are entitled to the constructive and sympathetic attention of this committee. We do not feel that just because we represent the larger units in this industry we should be denied the right to be consulted or to furnish facts and figures to the fullest extent before legislation as drastic as this is favorably reported on. All of us must bow to public opinion. We recognize that as much as anyone. We say there is as much public opinion in favor of block booking as there is against it, but we say that even if the opinion against block booking were overwhelming and that, as a trade practice, it should be legislated against, we still maintain that this bill is not good legislation from any standpoint except for that of the minority who have sponsored it. We further believe that before legislation of this or any other type is adopted, a thorough and complete study should be made by some agency that will bring in the facts from all parts of the industry and not just from one.

This is no ordinary measure. If it is not passed this year, it does not mean that a lot of people are going to be crucified or injured. We certainly are not opposing the making of a most thorough study, by any Government agency, of the methods of block booking and blind buying; whether or not they have outlived their usefulness. If they have, the problem should be taken up on that basis. We can contribute many important facts to such a study that are not in the possession of this committee and certainly not in the possession of those who wrote this bill.

* * * * * * *

In closing, I wish to state that this bill will increase the cost of film for the exhibitor and for the public very definitely. There can be no other way out, since it prohibits in its effect the selling of pictures except one at a time, and it will be a serious problem to meet. You cannot sell pictures in this far-flung country of ours one by one without adding tremendously to the sale cost. Somebody has to pay the freight, and if the exhibitor pays more, the public must pay more. The exhibitor frequently asks the question why he should pay for our failures. My answer is that 35 years of history have shown that he has not paid for our failures. We have paid for our own with the amount by which we have discounted the larger value of our successful pictures, which is the reimbursement we have received for our less successful pictures.

If the time has come when block booking and blind buying as a trade practice have got to fall before public opinion, we bow to it; we are not going to stand in the way of progress. But that is not what these gentlemen want. I say that if these practices are to be prohibited, I say it should be done on the basis that really does the job and that is fair to all parts of the industry.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, GENERAL COUNSEL FOR THE MOTION-PICTURE PRODUCERS AND DISTRIBUTORS ASSOCIATION

This bill is a proposal to destroy the distribution system of the motion-picture business—a system which distributes daily more than 25,000 miles of film to some 17,500 theaters in the United States, with less than a dozen miss-outs per year, and those miss-outs are mostly caused by severe snowstorms or floods. In many of these instances, pictures are delivered by airplane at an expense many times their rental, because it is a tradition of the show business that "the show must go on."

It is a proposal to set aside the distribution system of the motion-picture industry without offering a better one to take its place, which every producer and distributor of pictures would welcome if the substitute was more efficient, economical, and fair to all parties concerned. This bill tears down and destroys. It does not build up.

The motion-picture industry, through years of development and constant improvement, has taken a "peep-show business" with short flickers, shown in ex-barber shops and restaurants, furnished with chairs moved in from the undertaker's parlor, and turned it into an industry which provides a cheap, wholesome form of amusement for more than 80,000,000 of our people each week; which provides all types of theaters, charging various prices of admission, with the same identical pictures; which permits the same identical picture playing a first-run engagement at a rental of from $5,000 to $10,000 to be shown sometimes within 30 days, frequently within 60 days, and almost universally within 6 months, to the smallest, most humble theater in America for from $5 to $10.

That is the system that it is sought here to destroy. I don't know of any business in the world so good to the "little fellow." I would like to buy a Rolls-Royce car the way they buy motion pictures, after 60 days.

* * * * * * *

Pictures cannot be sold one at a time if this business is to exist. I want to address myself very briefly to that. You cannot send a salesman 200 miles, feed him, pay his salary, bill, collect, and distribute, make and furnish prints, and lease them singly for from $10 to $20. It cannot be done. There is an economic side to this problem. It is necessary not only for the producer but the exhibitor to know in advance what he is going to play and when he is going to play it. It is as necessary for the motion picture to have well in advance a definite schedule of play dates for pictures as it is for the railroads to have timetables for their trains. Imagine 17,500 theaters, with 25,000 miles of film a day being delivered, and without knowing anything in advance of what you are going to do. It is a ridiculous proposition.

We now come to the subject of blind buying, which simply means contracting for a film that you have not seen. That is, the exhibitor buys them ahead. Does he not know what he is going to get when he buys? Today every exhibitor has all the information about pictures that the producer himself has. Is it possible that theater men do not know what they are going to get when they buy a Shirley Temple picture or a Clark Gable picture, or a Jimmy Cagney picture?

And while we are on the subject of blind buying let me modestly suggest to any complaining theater man that each and every one of their customers who buys a ticket at the box office buys that ticket blindly. They sometimes do not give their customers as much information about the picture as they themselves have had given to them by the producers. Blind buying means buying pictures in advance. That is all it means.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF DR. RUSSELL POTTER, OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, REPRESENTING THE NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEW OF MOTION PICTURES

That Senator Neely's bill is more than it pretends to be is best indicated by the following passage of his report to the Senate last year, in referring to the manner in which the motion-picture industry has solved through self-regulation the problem of decency and good morals on the screen. Senator Neely said, and I quote from his report:

"The recent reformation is purely voluntary and there is no assurance that present imperfect standards will be maintained if this legislation is not passed. Experience teaches that, as a rule, such reforms are sporadic, induced by outbursts of public indignation and are of short duration."

If this is the position to be adopted by the Congress of the United States, we might as well scrap all the processes of democracy in American industry and American life. If reformation or self-regulation is to be suspected because it is voluntary, no industry is safe.

* * * * * * *

My thought is that this bill will not correct what needs correction, and that the whole issue is so terribly confused, and the proponents of the bill come in with such a mass of evidence from all of these organizations out over the country, lay persons who have no specific, exact, definite, first-hand knowledge of the complex and complicated industry that has grown up here. You yourself, Senator, yesterday morning and today, frequently asked how many members does such and such an organization have. That is important. And let me say again that every one of these organizations is very fine; its aims are laudable in its own field; but now they are trying to come in and form a mass movement.

STATEMENTS MADE BY GEORGE J. SCHAEFER, PRESIDENT OF THE R. K. O.-RADIO PICTURES CORPORATION

The motion-picture industry have perfected a very simple distribution system. When the negative is completed they strike off an average of approximately 250 positive prints. A branch office in New York which has a large number of theaters to serve will receive as many as 20 positive prints on a given subject; whereas a branch office in Washington, not having the same number of theaters in a concentrated district, may receive only 8 positive prints. The motion picture which is first shown in the Music Hall, New York City, will eventually be shown in every neighborhood in Greater New York, regardless of the importance or size of the theater. The Music Hall, for the right of prior showing, may pay as high as $100,000 in film rental; yet that same motion picture will eventually be shown in the small 500-seat theater, probably charging 15 cents, at a price as low as $15. The motion pictures which are shown in the larger first-run theaters in Washington, such as the Capitol, Palace, Keith's, and Earle, eventually will be shown in every neighborhood in Washington, D. C., and in every city or town serviced by the Washington branch office. The film rental for a first run in Washington may well amount to $10,000, but will be shown in the smallest town or community in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, or Delaware at as low as $10.

The 31 branch offices maintained by the various motion-picture producers and distributors have a weekly pay roll of approximately $530,000 and hire 12,500 employees.

* * * * * * *

The theory of this bill seems to be that if it were not for the so-called compulsory block booking, the theater management would select for showing only the finest and most suitable pictures, that no motion pictures would be exhibited in the theater except those which the people who patronize the theater should see, not just those which the general public likes and will pay to see. This theory, no doubt appeals strongly to the earnest women's club, church organizations, and other public and pressure groups, who have been persuaded by an organized campaign to actively support this bill.

These sincere people do not understand the fact that the proposed law does not prohibit exhibition of any film, no matter how improper, at any time or place, and no matter how unsuitable. In fact, this bill does not prevent the showing of entirely immoral pictures. We cannot assume that any local exhibitor would put aside pecuniary consideration in the interest of public morals to a greater extent than the producers and distributors. This is best evidenced by the fact that such pictures as I am about to mention were not produced by any of the major and important producing companies. Neither were they distributed by the organization affiliated with the important producers. In truth, they were distributed by independent companies, and were leased on an individual basis. All of these pictures had very wide circulation, mostly in the independent theaters and in particular in many of the neighborhood houses: Ecstasy, Birth of a Baby, Goona-Goona, and Valley of the Nude.

Again I submit to you that there is nothing in the bill which would prohibit any exhibitor from leasing or showing pictures of this type.

From Mr. Atkinson's opening statement we are led to believe that the exhibitor will consult with his local community as to the so-called suitable pictures which should be exhibited in his theater. There is nothing in the bill which obligates the exhibitor to consult his local community, and bearing in mind that the exhibitor will only lease and book such pictures as are actually produced, can it be assumed that he would put aside commercial considerations in the interest of public morals?

It should also be noted here that this bill will not change the type of stories that are written each year by our well-known authors and published in book or magazine form, all of which are finally purchased by the producers and eventually find their way to the screen.

FROM THE TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM F. ROGERS, GENERAL SALES MANAGER, METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURES

From June of last year and up until this present moment I have been the chairman of the so-called negotiating committee representing distributors and have been in conference with a committee representing the Allied States committee, representing the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, and with every organized group of theater owners in these United States. I have met with them in New York, I have met with them in Washington, I have met with them in California; in fact, I have met with them anywhere it would suit their convenience. Without exception, sirs, there is not one organized group of theater owners in this country that favors the Neely bill, except those gentlemen associated with the Allied States Theaters. That is not an idle remark; that is based upon fact.

Nevertheless, we want to satisfy the Allied States Theaters and their association the same as we do any other group. Even though they may sponsor legislation that we think is detrimental to our interests, we recognize, nevertheless, that they are our customers, and as such we want to satisfy them.

As a result of those various conferences, we did work out an understanding. Unfortunately, not being a lawyer, I stated in a publicity article that an understanding had been reached. They objected very seriously to that, because it was not the proper word, but I do know that in principle the points that we had agreed to concede were acceptable to the majority of their members, notwithstanding the vote of their executive committee. But the men who have their dollars and cents invested in this business do not want the Neely bill; they were satisfied that the trade practice proposals which we advanced would properly protect them.

As Mr. Pettijohn reminds me, it went a great deal beyond the Neely bill. There are some of their members, admittedly so, who are very strong for the Neely bill, but I do know, not from hearsay but by the advice of their own associate, that one or more units of their same organization wanted to deal with us on a trade-practice proposal, and so informed their board of directors, rather than support the Neely bill.

* * * * * * *

Senator, if you will permit me to say so, we have proposed in this trade-practice code, aside from the elimination or cancelation privilege that was discussed here, and in addition to that, to eliminate any picture that is objected to on moral, religious, or racial grounds. But let me tell you what we are up against.

For instance, my company a year or so ago believed that the American public and the people of the world would be interested in a classic, so we produced at an expense of $2,800,000 a picture called Romeo and Juliet. We selected the very best stars we could get. From our own pay roll we had Miss Norma Shearer, and we borrowed Mr. Tyrone Power. In addition to them, we used Leslie Howard.

Yet, under my exclusive privilege that exists in my contract, 590 theaters took advantage of that cancelation clause. They did not want to play it. On the other hand, in the same year, again trying to find the public taste, we bought a story that was based on the life of Al Capone and we titled it "The Last Gangster." We did not hold up Eddie Robinson, who was the star of it. Robinson was no idol or hero. To the contrary, he suffered even unto death. Nevertheless, I had 13 cancelations. There could have been 590 cancelations, but only 13 theaters canceled.

That is why I say that these ladies—and I am honestly grateful to them, because I do not subscribe entirely to the fact that the Legion of Decency was responsible for our cleaning our own house—I say that they in cooperation with the theater owners helped us, and in that respect I am grateful; but when they tell me that an anti-block-booking bill is going to cure that condition, I will promise them that whether I sell The Last Gangster alone or as a part of a group, I am still going to sell 10,000 contracts on that picture; there is no doubt about that.

STATEMENT OF ROBERT MONTGOMERY, REPRESENTING THE SCREEN ACTORS GUILD, BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.

My name is Robert Montgomery; Beverly Hills, Calif.; occupation, an actor.

I want to thank this committee for the privilege of appearing before it. I have been asked to appear before you by the board of directors of the Screen Actors Guild. For the benefit of those of you who may not be familiar with the guild, it is a union of all actors and actresses who appear in motion pictures, whether extras or stars. It is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. I have served as president of the guild and am at present a member of its board and executive committee.

The guild board and its attorneys have carefully studied this bill and have come to the very definite conclusion that if it should become a law of this country it would cut in half the production schedules of the motion-picture industry. This would directly affect the employment of some 282,000 persons who are employed in the production, distribution, and exhibition divisions of the film industry.

The acting profession which I represent is but one of the 276 crafts employed in the industry. It consists of 8,500 people, approximately 1,600 of whom are employed as actors in small parts, featured roles, character and leading parts in films. The remaining 7,000 are those who play extra parts or small roles known as "bits." With the exception of the small group under contract to the studios, the earning power of these people is extremely limited and depends entirely upon the volume of production.

Later witnesses will present to you, I am sure, expert evidence on the effect the provisions of this bill would have upon all branches of the industry. I shall confine my remarks to one paragraph, No. 7. In this paragraph 12 months of grace are given to the industry, during which time it must readjust its entire structure. I should like to point out that the methods of production and distribution, which are attacked by this bill, while admittedly not perfect, are the result of 30 years' experience and effort. The sponsors of this bill ask the Congress to destroy the entire business structure of one of the largest industries of the United States without offering any alternative plan, except one which has failed every time it has been tried.

The officers and directors of the Screen Actors' Guild feel that they would be neglecting their duty to the people they represent if they did not point out to this committee that the enactment of the Neely bill would bring about a chaotic condition in the motion-picture business, from which, in their opinion, there could be no recovery within a period of 12 months or 12 years.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF KENNETH THOMSON, EXECUTIVE SECRETARY OF THE SCREEN ACTORS' GUILD

Like Mr. Montgomery, I am appearing before you at the request of the board of directors of the Screen Actors' Guild. The reason for the guild's interest in this legislation is because it is the belief of the board of directors that employment of actors and all other employees would materially decrease should it be enacted. Furthermore, as the guild is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and as its members are American citizens, we are naturally deeply concerned by anything which would tend to reduce employment in this or any other industry. Other witnesses have told you that the production of motion pictures is largely financed because of the ability to provide a definite market for the product by selling pictures wholesale to exhibitors in advance of their production. It follows, therefore, that if this practice is stopped there will be less production, and therefore less employment.

Before becoming executive secretary of the guild I spent 15 years of my life as an actor, 10 of those years in motion pictures. During that time I played in at least 50 motion pictures, both sound and silent. During the past 5 years it has been my duty to observe closely production methods of the entire industry. Therefore I feel qualified to state that the substitute for blind selling in the Neely bill will not accomplish what the proponents of the bill expect of it for two reasons: First, it would put the production of motion pictures into a strait jacket which would make it impossible for producers, directors, writers, and actors to use their talents to improve a picture after production, even though by audience reaction at previews grave flaws in writing, action, or direction had been discovered.

Second, and I think this is important, it presupposes that the exhibitor is capable even from a complete synopsis to judge what the finished picture would be like. As I said before, I have acted in at least 50 motion pictures. In every case I have been furnished not with a synopsis but a complete shooting manuscript, and I never knew until I saw the finished picture on the screen and before an audience just what the result of all the effort and expenditure would be. I submit to you that the average exhibitor is no more qualified to judge the entertainment or educational values of a picture from a study of a synopsis than he would be to understand the Einstein theory. I further submit that the substitute suggested would lead to endless litigation. If 10 trained screen writers were asked to make a synopsis of a finished picture after seeing the film, there is little question but that they would submit 10 different synopses. How often, then, would the exhibitor contend that the finished picture delivered to him differed from the synopsis? I think it would occur almost every time he played a picture which did not live up to his expectations at the box office.

STATEMENTS OF MRS. FLORENCE FISHER PARRY, OF PITTSBURGH, PA., WRITER AND BUSINESSWOMAN

My capacity as motion-picture critic has necessitated, over the last 13 years, my seeing on the average of about five motion pictures a week, either in private or at actual exhibition in the theaters. I have been forced at times, sirs, to take some of my little children with me. Very often the contents of the play have been—I would say not often, but occasionally—too mature for their comprehension, and sometimes objectionable, but I had no other recourse.

Now they have reached their maturity, and I might say that they have so far exhibited no criminal tendencies of any kind. If they did, I would be apt to lay it to heredity or some other cause rather than to motion pictures, because it has been my experience that children take motion pictures as they do a great many other kinds of entertainment, and as they do their oatmeal for breakfast. They gobble up the palatable part, and they spit out the lumps or what they don't like.

Gentlemen, shall we say that there is no moral issue involved in the Neely bill? There is a very profound moral issue involved. There is a challenge to our personal liberty in almost every line of this bill as written. I do not deny its honorable intention of reform. I do not deny the estimable philosophy that lies behind this intention or the sincerity of its sponsor and proponents, but I attest that the bill S. 280 is, as written and submitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, inadequate, inoperative, destructive to free commerce, and will only serve to involve the fifth major industry of the United States in a network of litigation, racketeering, and red tape, which in itself will defeat its whole objective.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF MRS. PIERCY CHESTNEY, PRESIDENT OF THE MACON LITTLE THEATER, MACON, GA.

I understand that Senators have been swamped with letters urging its passage—letters from many organizations composed entirely, or almost entirely, of women, many of whom are mothers and few of whom have the faintest idea what is meant by block booking. They never get as far as the blind-buying part.

These women have been told that were block booking and blind buying eliminated, enabling an exhibitor to select his pictures, he would select only good pictures and those they want him to buy.

But what they have not been told is that their definition of a good picture and the exhibitor's idea of a good picture differ widely. By "good" they mean a picture of high standards. By "good" the exhibitor means one that will make money; and as an exhibitor is in business to make money and not to preach or teach, that is his main object.

Yesterday Mrs. Bannerman said that 47 of the 48 States had in their parent-teacher association conventions passed resolutions in favor of the Neely bill. I want to tell you what happened in Georgia.

I was the motion-picture chairman and I went to the convention. The president, who at that time was Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, asked the secretary to read a resolution that had been sent from National endorsing the Neely bill. Somebody made a motion that the resolution be accepted. Somebody else seconded the motion, and the president started to put the vote. I asked her if she was going to have any discussion. She asked me if I would like to discuss it. I said, "No; but I would like to ask one question." She gave me permission to ask the question. There were over 500—I have forgotten the exact number—present. I said, "All those who understand about the Neely bill and all about 'block booking,' please raise your hands."

One woman raised her hand. There were both men and women present. I said, "Madame President, I believe that the question was not understood. Will all who understand what 'block booking' and 'blind buying' in the Neely bill mean, raise your hands?"

This same woman raised her hand. I said, "Madame President, will you ask this delegate to explain to the other delegates about block booking?"

The lady who had raised her hand in response to my question said, "Oh, don't ask me to do that. I have heard about it, but I don't know what it is."

So they decided they would not pass the resolution at that time.

I went in succession to several other conventions, still in my capacity as motion-picture chairman for the State, and they did not pass the resolution. Then I slipped up and did not go one year, and they did pass it.

What is true of the Georgia Congress of Parent-Teachers Association is probably true of other State congresses.

The memorandum by Mr. Myers, offered by Mr. NEELY, is as follows:

Memorandum in re S. 280, by Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board, Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

(Answers to the principal points made in the speeches against the bill. Answers to points I, III, IV, and VII are to be found in Senator NEELY's speech for the bill, and are simply repeated here)

I

Point: Action on the bill should await the outcome of the Government's antitrust suit against the Big Eight.

Answer: Contrary to the assertion made, that suit does not involve blind selling. To prohibit compulsory block booking without prohibiting the twin evil of blind selling, would be futile. Moreover, prohibition of the practices calls for detailed affirmative as well as restrictive measures which can more appropriately be included in a statute than in a decree. (Hearings, pp. 40, 563; Com. Rep., p. 15.)

If the suit is not effective in preventing these practices, then it will not fully curb the monopoly, because so long as the Big Eight can force their pictures on the screens they are as a necessary corollary able to keep off the screens the pictures of would-be competitors.

II

Point: Antitrust statute should not be written for a single industry.

Answer: There is no existing statute which bears directly on compulsory block booking or which, by the furthest stretch of the imagination relates to blind selling. The choice is between a special statute or allowing these practices to go unchecked.

Furthermore, Congress has never hesitated to write special legislation for particular industries whenever there was need therefor, as witness the utility holding-company law, the Packers and Stockyards Act, the Grain Futures Act, and special regulatory laws relating to railroads and radio.

III

Point: Because the court [Judge Martin T. Manton] denied an enforcement order for the Federal Trade Commission's anti-block-booking order against a single company—Paramount—there is no ground for legislating against the practice.

Answer: This is tantamount to saying that because an evil practice is not covered by an existing statute, there is no basis for legislating it out of existence. An exact parallel is found in the circumstance that the tying clause contracts employed by the United Shoe Machinery Co. to accomplish full-line forcing were held not to violate the Sherman Act (247 U. S. 32). Congress then enacted section 3 of the Clayton Act which was aimed directly at tying clauses, and this section was given effect by the courts (258 U. S. 451).

This disposes of the implication that because of the Court's ruling legislation on the subject of compulsory block booking would not be valid. There is no difference in principle between compulsory block booking and full-line forcing. In addition, there are the memoranda by Judge Harold M. Stephens (see Neely speech) and Prof. Noel T. Dowling (appendix to committee report) to the effect that legislation on the subject of compulsory block booking and blind selling will be upheld.

IV

Point: Section 3 is too vague and general for a criminal statute.

Answer: (a) Basically the section calls for a test of reasonableness—the reasonableness of the differentials between aggregate prices for complete blocks of pictures and prices for individual pictures or groups of pictures less than complete blocks. After the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case (221 U. S. 1) laid down the "rule of reason" the test of a violation of that statute became whether the defendant had "unduly" or "unreasonably" restrained trade. As thus interpreted, the act was upheld as a criminal statute in Nash v. United States (229 U. S. 373). The Court, by Mr. Justice Holmes, said:

"But apart from the common law as to restraint of trade thus taken up by the statute, the law is full of instances where a man's fate depends on his estimating rightly; that is, as the jury subsequently estimates it—some matter of degree. If his judgment is wrong, not only may he incur a fine or a short imprisonment, as here; he may incur the penalty of death."

(b) The test provided in the bill is essentially the same as that provided by section 3 of the Clayton Act.

(c) If the criminal provisions are too broad, the courts will protect those accused thereunder.

(d) The bill provides for enforcement by injunction as well as by criminal proceedings, and there is no suggestion that the bill cannot be enforced by proceedings in equity.

V

Point: That the bill would prevent wholesale selling.

Answer: Not a line or sentence says or even hints that a distributor may not lease as many pictures at one time as he and the exhibitor may agree upon. Opponents of the bill have confused wholesale selling with full-line forcing. (Hearings, p. 155.)

The bill does not seek to make a distributor lease any pictures to an exhibitor unless he is so minded. It merely says that a distributor, trading in the channels of interstate commerce, may not require an exhibitor to take pictures which he does not desire in order to obtain those that he does desire. This is the basis of section 3 of the Clayton Act and of all regulations of interstate commerce.

VI

Point: Bill will discourage production of outstanding pictures because there will not be an assured market therefor.

Answer: (a) If, as opponents of the bill contend, compulsory block booking is not now rigidly enforced, or will be relaxed under a voluntary undertaking by the Big Eight, then the assured market theory goes by the board.

(b) The truth is that the Big Eight have looked only to the independent exhibitors for an assured market, while allowing their own theaters and the theaters of one another to pick and choose without being subjected to compulsory block booking. (Hearings, pp. 95–96, 557, 618.) Why should independent theaters have to take and play all the pictures while the trust theaters play only the ones they choose?

(c) Under the standard license agreement (hearings, pp. 556, 594) the distributor undertakes to deliver to the exhibitor only pictures generally released during the term of the contract. The "road showing" of a picture (i. e., its exhibition by the distributor at prices higher than those which generally prevail) is not a general release. Thus distributors can and frequently do "road show" outstanding pictures and thus, in effect, remove them from their blocks, in order to resell those pictures to the exhibitors the following year at higher prices. (Senate hearings, 1936, p. 60.)

Senators doubtless have observed that pictures such as Romeo and Juliet, Lost Horizon, etc., have been road shown at the National Theater for admissions as high as $1 or $1.50. That meant that those pictures were taken out of the blocks—out of the assured market—by the distributors themselves.

This has a direct bearing on a colloquy which occurred on Friday:

"Mr. BARKLEY. * * * If the producers of that picture and other pictures had to depend on their ability to sell it as a single production to all the moving-picture theaters in the United States, I am wondering whether, in view of its cost of production, they would incur the risk necessary to produce the kind of picture that everybody expects from Gone With the Wind.

"Mr. WHITE. My answer is that, in my opinion—and I base the opinion on what is in the record—such pictures would not be produced in the United States." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 9132.)

(d) Gone With the Wind will undoubtedly be road shown for at least a year before it is generally released. The distributor, exploiting it singly, will bleed it white before releasing it to the independent exhibitors. In other words, when they have an assured box-office success, the distributors ignore their assured market. Compulsory block booking forces upon the independent exhibitors the bad pictures; they do not get the outstanding pictures under their contracts until the distributors have squeezed the last penny out of them.

VII

Point: Exhibitors exercise their cancelation privilege improvidently; therefore they would not choose pictures wisely under the bill.

Answer: (a) No cancelation figures are contained in the record. The figures, in every instance, cover play dates, not cancelations. The number of play dates a picture receives is mainly determined by the selections or rejections by the producer-owned theaters and the extended and repeat runs forced by the distributors.

(c) The House hearings (pp. 471–472, 547) show how Paramount forced independent exhibitors to give extended playing time to the Mae West pictures. Incidentally, these very pictures were primarily responsible for the outburst of public indignation which led to the formation of the Legion of Decency.

VIII

Point: Cancelation of a picture gives it wonderful advertising value.

Answer: Agreed. Proponents of the bill advocate a right of selection at the time the pictures are contracted for and before they are put into circulation. Opponents insist that a cancelation provision, which they propose to offer, is the solution of the problem. These inconsistencies appear in Senator WHITE's speech, page 9134 (bottom of second column) and page 9136 (middle of column 1).

IX

Point: A new motion-picture code granting a cancelation privilege has already gone into effect.

Answer: (a) At the hearing the following occurred with respect to the proposed code, called an "agreement" (p. 212):

"Senator WHITE. That is your proffered offer or agreement, or is that the existing agreement?

"Mr. RODGERS (of Metro). No; this is what we have now offered."

(b) As shown by exhibit D, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9125, the code has been rejected by Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

(c) It has been branded inadequate by the public groups supporting the bill. (Hearings, 510, 517; and see telegram from Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 9123.)

(d) The code, if it ever goes into effect, will be a purely voluntary undertaking by the Big Eight. It should be remembered that the highly restricted 10 percent cancelation provided in the N. R. A. Code was withdrawn as soon as N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional. (Hearings, p. 132.) And see enumeration of the "13 broken promises" of the producer-distributors in the hearings, pp. 54–56.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to vote on the pending bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. NEELY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrd	Gibson	Hughes
Andrews	Byrnes	Gillette	Johnson, Calif.
Ashurst	Capper	Glass	Johnson, Colo.
Bankhead	Chavez	Green	King
Barbour	Clark, Mo.	Guffey	La Follette
Barkley	Danaher	Gurney	Lee

Norris	Schwartz	Thomas, Utah	White
Nye	Schwellenbach	Townsend	Wiley
Overton	Sheppard	Truman
Pepper	Shipstead	Tydings
Pittman	Slattery	Vandenberg

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the "ayes" have it.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. BARKLEY asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALONEY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATCH. On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is detained because of illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] have been called to Government departments on matters pertaining to their respective States.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who is also absent on official business. I am not advised how these Senators, if present and voting, would vote.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on important public business. They have a pair on this question, and I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea," and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are absent on official business. They are paired on this question, and I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea," and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—46

So the bill (S. 280) was passed.

HIGHWAY BETWEEN CHORRERA AND RIO HATO, REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2163) to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes, which was to strike out the preamble.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF AMERICAN ISLANDS FOR NAVAL AND AIR BASES

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, we are now expending huge sums for our national defense. This year we are spending some $2,000,000,000 for that very purpose. Why not acquire permanent naval and air bases along our Atlantic and Pacific coast lines?

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks certain data concerning islands within 1,500 miles' range of Nicaragua and the Panama Canal Zone. These islands are on the west coast. The United States ought to acquire these strategic and important islands as naval and air bases for our national defense.

An article appearing in News Week of June 19, 1939, reads as follows:

[From News Week of June 19, 1939]

GALAPAGOS TO UNITED STATES?

Though it may be denied, President Narvaez of Ecuador is going ahead with plans to offer the United States control of the strategic Galapagos Islands, about 800 miles southwest of the Panama Canal. A similar idea fell through in 1911. But today Ecuador's Government needs money badly—much more than it needs the islands, which it has never developed. Also Ecuador has been deeply influenced by the good-neighbor policy and would now rather deal with the United States than other governments. Plans being discussed range from offering the islands as security for a $17,000,000 loan to selling them outright for something like $100,000,000. Presumably the Roosevelt administration would favor the idea, but there might be squawks of "imperialism" in Congress.

On Friday, July 14, 1939, I introduced five joint resolutions, Senate Joint Resolutions 170, 171, 172, 173, and 174, bearing on the proposed negotiations. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD the joint resolutions as introduced.

The screen of islands on the west coast and the islands from Greenland to the continent of South America all must be acquired. They are all American and should be under our defense control. Let us act now before it is too late.

I ask that the matter I have referred to be printed in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1939.

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR LUNDEEN

Subject: Islands within 1,500 miles radii of Panama and Nicaragua (west coast).

Enclosures: (A) List of islands within 1,500 miles radius of Panama; (B) list of islands within 1,500 miles radius of Nicaragua; (C) sheet 2 of Outline Chart of the World; (D) H. O. Chart No. 823; (E) H. O. Chart No. 1007.

1. Enclosures are forwarded herewith in compliance with your verbal request for lists of islands within 1,500-mile radii of Panama and Nicaragua in the Pacific Ocean.

2. Certain small islands in close proximity to coasts of various countries have not been included. For example, Lobos de Afuera Island, off the coast of Peru, is not listed.

3. Distances given are approximate and have been inserted on charts for your convenience.

G. S. BRYAN,
Captain, United States Navy, Hydrographer.

INFORMATION CONCERNING SELECTED ISLANDS ON THE WEST COASTS OF MEXICO, CENTRAL AMERICA, AND NORTHERN SOUTH AMERICA

(By Margaret Blachly and John B. McClurkin)

INTRODUCTORY NOTES

The islands included in this compilation are the larger ones appearing on maps for the regions named, published by the Hydrographic Office of the United States Navy Department. With a few exceptions, they are all within a radius of 1,500 miles from Nicaragua and Panama. Many small islands described in the sources consulted as high rocks, cliffs, etc., have been omitted, especially since published information indicates their nonavailability for landing purposes and makes no mention of inhabitants.

The islands are listed under the countries having jurisdiction over them. Population figures are noted in all instances where they were found.

Sources used, and any abbreviations adopted to denote them, appear below:

1. Cerros (Cedros) Island (off west coast of Lower California): Length, 20½ miles; width, varying from 2 to 9 miles. * * *

It is of volcanic origin and consists of a mass of high, abrupt peaks, the highest of which, Cerros Mountain, has an elevation of 3,950 feet. * * *

The southern part of the island is, in general, barren, but the northern part is comparatively fertile and well wooded. The crests and western slopes of the mountains are covered with a growth of cedars and pines, some of which attain a height of 60 to 70 feet; there is also a species of dwarf oak on the island, and many varieties of shrubs and flowers are found in the ravines. Gold is mined on the island.

* * * * * * *

There is a village on the eastern side of the island about 4½ miles northward of Morro Redondo Point. The economic life of the village centers around a large fish cannery. * * *

* * * * * * *

Repairs to engines can be performed at the village. The cannery has a fairly well equipped machine shop. Competent sea divers with adequate equipment are employed at the cannery at all times. Source: H. O. 84, pp. 78–79.

2. Guadalupe (about 140 miles off coast of Lower California): Length, 20 miles; maximum width, nearly 7 miles. The southern part of the island is very barren, but the northern part has several fertile valleys and some vegetation on the mountains. * * * In 1930 there was a goat-meat cannery near the abandoned barracks on the shore of this cove, and some employees of the cannery were living there. Source: H. O. 84, pp. 42–44.

3. Isabel Island (17 miles from nearest part of mainland), length, about 1½ miles; width, ½ mile. No permanent settlement. Sources: H. O. 84, p. 208. W. S.

4. Las Tres Marias Islands (Cleopha, Magdalena, Maria Madre, San Juanito), 50 to 63 miles off the coast. * * * extend 39 miles in a general northwesterly and southeasterly direction. These islands are of volcanic origin; their western sides are high, inaccessible, barren cliffs, while the eastern sides are generally low and sandy, with some vegetation (H. O. 84, p. 209).

Cleopha, nearly circular in form, diameter about 3 miles (H. O. 84, p. 209).

Magdalena Island, length, 8 miles; maximum width, 4½ miles. The soil of the island is sandy, but there is considerable vegetation, consisting principally of lignumvitae, citrus fruits, cactus, and almost impenetrable thickets of small, thorny trees and brush (H. O. 84, p. 210).

Maria Madre Island, largest of group, length, nearly 12 miles; width, 3 to 6 miles. On the southeast side there is a small settlement of about 20 people who collect salt from a nearby lagoon. Vessels load the salt at a mole near the settlement (H. O. 84, p. 211).

San Juanito, smallest of group, length, 2½ miles; maximum width, 1¼ miles (H. O. 84, p. 211). Source: H. O. 84, p. 209–211.

5. Reville Gigedo Islands (Socorro, San Benedicto, and Clarion): Area, 320 square miles. Uninhabited. Volcanic in origin.

Socorro: As viewed from seaward the island has a barren and uninviting appearance; the ground is covered with a thick and almost impenetrable growth of flat cactus and sagelike brush. * * * The volcanic nature of the island is everywhere apparent; quantities of lava are strewn along the slopes in isolated patches, as if forced up from beneath the surface, and the red soil is plentifully mixed with ashes. * * * The surface of the island is broken by hummocks and craterlike mounds, and in some places is furrowed by deep ravines that are walled with lava. There is some grass, but the vegetation in general is of a low order. On the northern slope of the island, however, the prospect is somewhat more pleasing. A kind of edible bean produced by a vine that runs along the ground grows abundantly on that part of the island.

* * * * * * *

There is an abundance of animal life on the island. Birds, such as robins, canaries, swallows, and blue herons, are plentiful. Along the shores of the island are fish, turtles, crabs, and crawfish, and in the vicinity of the island are sharks, whales, and porpoises (H. O. 84, p. 46).

San Benedicto Island: * * * a barren rock with a length of 3 miles and a maximum width of three-quarter mile (H. O. 84, p. 49).

Clarion (Santa Rosa) Island: * * * It has a length of 5¼ miles, east and west, a maximum width of 2 miles at its western end, and is covered with a thick growth of cactus. * * *

* * * * * * *

The vegetation of the island comprises, besides cactus and grass, a dense growth of weed which has a thick, fleshy, lanceolate leaf, a type of trailing vine having red and yellow flowers, a species of bean, low, thorny bushes, and morning glories.

* * * Animal life was abundant. The island seems to be a place of habitation and a breeding ground for sea birds, of which many thousands were found laying eggs in the sand near the beach or in nests in the clefts of the hills. Besides gulls and gannets, there were doves, owls, crows, and numerous song birds. Several turtles were seen close to the beach. In the water around the island there were numerous whales, sharks, and porpoises (H. O. 84, p. 50–51). Sources: EB vol. 19, p. 240. H. O. 84, p. 46, 49, 50–51.

II. COSTA RICA

1. Cano Island: Length, 1½ miles; width, 1,750 yards. Covered with trees. Source: H. O. 84, p. 330.

2. Cocos Island: About 13 miles in circumference. Uninhabited.

The island is reported to be covered with a dense forest. * * * The soil is fertile and will produce all tropical fruits and staples. There are a number of streams from which a plentiful supply of fresh water may be procured. Fish are abundant and game may be found in the interior.

The following statements are taken from a report of the U. S. S. Taylor, dated June 29, 1935:

"An abandoned coffee plantation, the remains of a Costa Rican penal colony, is located on the top of one of the ridges.

"Most of the timber is a pith wood of no value, but a small quantity of very hard wood is found on the higher ground. * * * Rats and a stunted species of formerly domesticated hog were found. Fish are very plentiful, but must be landed smartly, as the sharks are extraordinarily numerous and follow the fish right up to the boat. * * *

"The Costa Rican Government appears to have adopted a policy of allowing reputable treasure hunting parties to visit the island, one at a time, under the supervision of the Government, by making a substantial cash payment and agreeing to share with the Government any treasure found." Source: H. O. 84, pp. 54–55.

3. Isla San Lucas (Golfo de Nicoya): Length, about 1¾ miles.

A small but secure harbor, at the head of which there is a Costa Rican penal colony, lies on the northwestern side of the island. Communication with the island is strictly forbidden. Source: H. O. 84, p. 319.

III. PANAMA

1. Isla Coiba: Length, 21½ miles; maximum width, 13 miles.

Population, about 200 (most of whom are connected with the penal colony * * * on the eastern coast).

* * * The interior is quite mountainous and is covered with forest, but there is some swampy land on the west coast. There are several anchorages around its shores, but no harbor in which vessels may be protected from all winds.

This island is used as a penal station, and it is forbidden to land on the island without permission of the Panamanian Government. Sources: H. O. 84, p. 348.

2. Jicaron: Triangle-shaped; length, 3¾ miles; greatest width, 3 miles. Uninhabited. Heavily wooded. Source: H. O. 84, p. 349.

3. Perlas Islands (number of islands and numerous rocks in Gulf of Panama): Area covered, about 450 sq. miles; length of group, about 30 miles; width, about 20 miles.

Population (in the four towns on the islands) about 7,500.

The inhabitants of the islands are a mixture of the native Indians, Panamanians, and Negro races, and in general are friendly and peace-loving. There are many schools in the larger villages, but the people are very poor and, generally speaking, are undernourished. The principal industry is pearl fishing. Some of the smaller islands are owned by the natives, and in a few cases, by residents of Panama City, but most of them are owned by the Republic of Panama, which Government controls the group. Source: H. O. 84, p. 384.

IV. COLOMBIA

1. Gorgona: Length, about 5 miles; width, 1½ miles.

"Gorgona is a beautiful island, well watered, and productive where it has been cultivated."

Fishermen on the island, but no permanent settlement. Sources: H. O. 174, p. 459. W. S.

2. Malpelo Island: "* * * a barren, high, perpendicular rock about 1 mile long. * * * A small quantity of green moss and a few dwarf bushes which grow in its cracks and gullies afford the only verdure it possesses."

Uninhabited. Sources: H. O. 174, p. 454. W. S.

V. ECUADOR

1. Amortajada or Santa Clara Island: Length, a little more than a mile; width "narrow." Probably a few natives. A lighthouse. Sources: H. O. 174, p. 421 W. S.

2. Galapagos Islands (Colon Archipelago): Area, 2,868 square miles. Population (1936), 2,063. Six principal islands, nine smaller ones and many islets "scarcely to be distinguished from rocks."

Production: Sugarcane, cotton, coffee, grain (except rice), vegetables, fruit, hides, alcohol, vinegar, coal (low grade), fish, and fur seal.

Two crops of corn, coffee, and potatoes annually on Cristobal Island.

Statistics, 1918, for El Progreso on San Cristobal Island:

Sugar (pounds)	3,000,000
Coffee (pounds)	300,000
Alcohol (liters)	14,000

Other resources: Sulfur, guano, salt, phosphate of lime, cattle, goats, horses, pigs, fish.

Foreign commerce: Decree of May 18, 1935, forbids all foreign merchant vessels to enter the waters of the Galapagos Archipelago. (Figures on commerce probably would be included with the Ecuadorean province to which the islands are united.) Sources: SYB, p. 855. H. O. 174, p. 443–54. Bulletin of the Pan American Union, November 1931, p. 1143–44; November 1935, p. 885. Telephone conversation with offices of the Pan American Union.

3. La Plata Island: Length, about 3½ miles; width, 1¼ miles at northern end. Native settlement on island. Agriculture and some fishing.

The island "presents a brownish, dried-up appearance, cut up by gray furrows. The western side forms precipitous cliffs, off which are a few small islets. * * * Wood, and frequently turtle, can be obtained here." Sources: H. O. 174, p. 435. W. S.

4. Puna: Length, 29 miles; width, 8 to 13 miles.
Large settlement; Ecuadorean summer resort; tourists; radio station. Sources: H. O. 174, p. 422–23. W. S.

5. Salango: Two miles in circumference. Occasional natives.
"* * * covered with luxuriant vegetation. The island formerly was an anchorage much resorted to by whalers, who came for water and fresh provisions, which are to be obtained from a neighboring plantation."
Large bamboos are found in shoal waters, and fish are plentiful. Sources: H. O. 170, p. 433–34. W. S.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930.

Mr. NEELY. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. NEELY, Mr. BULOW, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF VIOLATIONS OF RIGHTS OF LABOR—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, some weeks ago the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 126), asking for a continuation of the work of the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, known as the Civil Liberties Committee.

Since that time I have received many thousand letters on the subject from various parts of the country. I have separated the letters and telegrams which came from heads of national organizations, and at this time I ask unanimous consent that these letters and telegrams be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which the resolution was referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield; yes.

Mr. HATCH. I do not know whether or not I correctly understood the Senator, but I think he said he had submitted a resolution relating to the extension of the life of the Committee on Civil Liberties.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. Some 3 or 4 weeks ago the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and I submitted a resolution asking for a further appropriation of $100,000 and asking for the continuation of the work of the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I do not know whether or not it is the intention of the Senator from Washington to ask for action on his resolution. I see in the Chamber, however, two distinguished members of the committee, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I recall that at the last session something was said to the effect that no more funds would be asked for the committee. Without expressing myself about the matter, I should like to hear something from the members of the committee on the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Near the close of the last session of Congress the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported a resolution which had been submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and myself, providing an additional $60,000 for the work of the committee. The resolution came up under the call of the calendar for consideration of bills and resolutions by unanimous consent, there being no opportunity in the closing days of the session to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. At that time, in response to an inquiry, I stated that I believed the sum provided by the resolution would enable the committee to complete its investigation, make its reports, and file such legislative recommendations as the committee, or members thereof, might deem to be warranted as a result of the investigation.

At that time, and for many months prior thereto, we had our attention drawn to a situation in California; and when the resolution was adopted the committee set up a budget, and sent members of its staff to the west coast to begin the investigation of that situation. We believed at the time that we had sufficient money and sufficient time to make the investigation. However, as the investigation progressed the complexity of the situation kept constantly increasing and opening up before the committee, so that by the time a few months had gone by it became perfectly apparent that, for the reasons I have just stated, the committee could not complete a thorough investigation and hold hearings. Therefore, despite the fact that a great deal of material has been assembled, no hearings have ever been held upon the material, because the committee did not feel that the investigation had progressed to the stage where hearings were warranted and justified.

Having made that statement at a time when any one Senator who desired to do so might have prevented the adoption of the resolution providing an additional $60,000, I have kept both the letter and the spirit of the statement. In response to the Senator's inquiry, however, I will say that I think a perusal of the data the committee has already assembled will convince any person that the investigation should be completed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I concur in everything which has been said by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Our work to date has been of an extremely conscientious character. As the Senator from Wisconsin has said, we have entirely lived up to the implied promise made at the close of the last session. We have introduced proposed legislation as a result of the hearings which have been held; and so far as the work of the committee is concerned, it represents a unit in accordance with the promise which was made. But, Mr. President, in times such as those we are now going through there will be, and there always is, a demand for investigation of adjustments which are being made and difficulties which are being encountered.

Those who are familiar with the hearings which have been held so far realize and know the great worth of merely having this committee in existence. Those who have read our reports realize that corrections and changes have been brought about as a result of the hearings themselves. That is the best kind of service which a committee of the Senate can offer to the Government.

Personally—and I am sure that the Senator from Wisconsin concurs in this statement—I am satisfied with what has been done, provided the legislation proposed is enacted. Having been on the committee for 3 years now, we realize the work it entails. At the same time, there has come to us an understanding of the responsibility of the task.

Knowing what the conditions are as the result of the partial investigation we have conducted, I fully believe that if we do not proceed and hold further hearings, the country will be deprived of some of the benefits of the hearings which have already been held.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish very briefly to make a statement in reference to the attitude which has been shown by both the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I am in a particularly good position to testify that they have both religiously insisted on keeping the agreement they made with the Senate at the end of the last session. In fact, I have become rather impatient with them at times because of their insistence on not indicating any desire to have further appropriations for their committee. They have taken the very high position that they agreed not to seek additional appropriations, and that they could not do so.

My interest in this matter arose last fall as a result of an effort on the part of an organization known as the Associated Farmers, which originated in the State of California, and which has extended its influence to a greater or less extent up and down the Pacific coast and into some of the Mountain States. Last fall in the three Pacific Coast States there were initiatives involving questions of labor rights and labor legislation. The instigators of those initiatives were the association known as the Associated Farmers.

Rumors were current throughout each one of the States—I know they were current in my own State—that the Associated Farmers was not a farmers' organization; that it was in fact an organization which was financed by groups which had absolutely no interest in the problems of agriculture, who were merely setting up the organization of farmers for the purpose of obtaining benefits which they thought they could derive through the respectability which they might obtain by having farmers as a front for them. I do not say whether or not those rumors are correct; I do not know. I know I returned to the present session with a firm determination that, if it were possible, through the investigation which this committee had made to ascertain the facts about that matter, I was going to do so. Because of the nature of the various communications which the committee itself has, I do not think it would be either proper or desirable to attempt to reveal definitely the information the committee has. I think that can only be revealed in a hearing in the nature of a public hearing, giving to the people on all sides of the argument an opportunity to be heard.

The National Grange, which is certainly a highly respectable organization, and an organization which cannot be viewed in the light of asking for something of this nature to which it did not feel it was entitled, has asked for the continuation of the investigation. The two great labor organizations of the country ask for the continuation of the investigation.

On April 4 of this year the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] inserted in the RECORD a telegram which he had received from the Associated Farmers themselves stating that certain newspaper articles had been written about them, that charges had been made against their organization, accusing them of being an organization which was not really a farm organization, and the Associated Farmers themselves asked that an investigation be made and that the facts be made public.

On the basis of the request of everyone involved, from one of the leading farm organizations, the National Grange, the two labor organizations, the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and finally the Associated Farmers themselves, the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and I introduced this resolution. It has been reposing peacefully in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and has not been disturbed there in any way. I think the committee should go into the records of the Civil Liberties Committee, and should determine whether or not hearings should be held upon the facts which the Civil Liberties Committee has in its possession. I think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should determine the amount of money which would be necessary in order to conduct the hearings, and should recommend the adoption of the resolution, carrying such amount as would take care of the requirements.

I appreciate the fact that we on the Pacific coast are far away, and it is rather difficult for us to attract the attention and the sympathetic approval of those who come from other sections of the country, but we do constitute an integral part of the country, we have problems out there, and their proper solution is of interest to the remainder of the country, as is true of the problems of the East and the North and the South. Everyone on the Pacific coast wants this investigation continued.

Mr. President, I desire now to conclude by asking that there be printed in the RECORD a copy of the resolution adopted by the State Legisature of the State of California, and certain newspaper editorials upon this question printed in various newspapers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly Joint Resolution 46

Relative to civil liberties investigation

Whereas a subcommittee of the United States Senate Committee on Education and Labor was authorized to investigate violations of civil rights in California and other Western States; and

Whereas the subcommittee initiated the investigation but was unable to complete it because of a lack of funds; and

Whereas there has been a widespread public demand for the continuance of the investigation, as evidenced by action taken by such organizations as the National Grange, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and others, urging an appropriation of additional funds for the use of the subcommitee; and

Whereas the Associated Farmers of California, Inc., in a telegram to Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, dated April 4, 1939, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on that date, demanded an opportunity to be heard before the subcommittee in respect to charges made against it; and

Whereas Senators SCHWELLENBACH and DOWNEY have introduced Senate Resolution 126 in the Seventy-sixth Congress, providing for an appropriation of $100,000 for use in enabling the subcommittee to continue its investigation; and

Whereas Gov. Culbert L. Olson has already communicated with the chairman of the United States Senate Audit and Control Committee, Senator BYRNES, to support Senate Resolution 126: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That this legislature approves of and endorses Senate Resolution 126, now pending in the Seventy-sixth Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the chief clerk of the assembly to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and to each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and to Senator JAMES BYRNES, chairman of the United States Senate Audit and Control Committee.

[From the Labor Clarion, San Francisco, Calif., June 9, 1939]

LA FOLLETTE COMMITTEE

The Grand Lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is urging the passage by Congress of a resolution (S. Res. 126) to provide for an appropriation of an additional $100,000 for the La Follette Committee, to permit it to complete its investigations, particularly in the States of California, Oregon, and Washington, where the denial of civil liberties is rampant.

The brotherhood declares it is vital to the existence of organized labor to insure the continuation of the work of this committee.

[From Babson's Washington Reports, Confidential Forecasts of Coming Developments, May 15, 1939]

LA FOLLETTE GROUP SHOULD GET FUNDS

Continuation of the activities of the La Follette civil liberties committee now seems probable. Earlier opposition has somewhat faded, particularly since the Dies Committee got its grant of $100,000.

Further, big business is now less concerned over possible witch-hunting proclivities of the La Follette group. This change of front has come about since the National Association of Manufacturers went on the stand and gave an excellent account of itself under hostile fire from the committee's investigators.

The testimony of Tom Girdler, head of Republic Steel, likewise encouraged business to follow the policy of stepping out and meeting its critics head on. Hence, chances now favor the committee's getting an appropriation through this session—possibly $100,000 to wind up its work.

[From the Milwaukee Post of February 8, 1939]

CONTINUE THE CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

The Associated Farmers complained that they were mentioned in the La Follette civil liberties committee hearings without having an opportunity to reply. Well, they will have plenty of opportunity if the committee is continued, and there is a bill in the United States Senate to give the committee $100,000 for additional work. No committee has ever paid for itself more handsomely, in results accomplished, than has the Civil Liberties Committee. The bill should pass.

[From the San Francisco News, April 5, 1939]

FINISH THE INVESTIGATION

The La Follette Senate civil liberties committee ought to call the Associated Farmers of California, Inc., on their demand for a fair hearing.

The demand springs from a Washington dispatch in the News from Bruce Catton, N. E. A. correspondent, asserting that "A story of repression and denial of civil rights as startling as anything told of Harlan County in its palmiest days will soon be laid before the country when the La Follette committee submits its report on the Associated Farmers.

Harold E. Pomeroy, Associated Farmers' executive secretary, protests that his organization has been given no hearing to present its side of the case. That is correct.

Investigators for the civil liberties committee spent weeks here this winter, subpenaed scores of witnesses and voluminous files and records, took information on charges of antilabor and vigilante activities, and then suddenly were recalled to Washington. The expected public hearings were dropped. Senator LA FOLLETTE announced that startling evidence had been uncovered, but that he personally was retiring from the civil liberties investigations. From that point the California inquiry has been left hanging in midair, without a word of explanation.

Even those sources closest to and most in sympathy with the inquiry have been mystified by its sudden, unexplained folding up. They have wondered whether it proved "too hot to handle" or whether Senator LA FOLLETTE, jolted by his brother's defeat in Wisconsin, has been impressed with a need to spend less time on civil rights and rebuild his political fences at home. This speculation is not in accord with the Senator's past tireless and fearless efforts.

The committee's secret agents presumably have been summing up their findings, and it is their forthcoming report to which the Washington dispatch referred and to which Mr. Pomeroy took exception. Such a report at best would be unilateral and incomplete. Public hearings would be required to get the whole story.

The News and a host of liberal, A. F. of L., C. I. O., and other organizations have been urging that the California investigation be completed openly. Now, the Associated Farmers' demand for a fair trial ought to make it unanimous.

Worth especial note is Mr. Pomeroy's statement: "Undoubtedly, mistakes have been made by members of the Associated Farmers. * * * We seek to correct our mistakes. We want to solve the agricultural problems of the State on a basis that is fair for all. * * * They can be solved only by an objective consideration of the problems and around the council table."

This expression is encouraging.

Open hearings could turn the spotlight on past mistakes and help the Associated Farmers in this declared intention of dealing justly and peacefully. They would give both the Associated Farmers and their critics the opportunity to "put up or shut up" on such charges as Mr. Pomeroy voiced when he complained that farmers have been provoked "by lawless men acting in the name of labor," and on the charges developed by the La Follette investigators. Extremists of whatever side need to be halted.

So the Senate committee should end the long uncertainty over its California investigation and hasten steps to assure a thorough, impartial inquiry.

[From the San Diego Sun of March 30, 1939]

FINISH THE JOB

The American Federation of Labor's national executive council asks the Senate to continue the Pacific coast investigations by the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

Weight is added to this appeal by the fact that it is originated by Daniel J. Tobin, international president of the teamsters, who has gained Nation-wide respect for his sensible efforts to end the A. F. of L.-C. I. O. war.

The Civil Liberties Committee should finish the California investigations, which were halted without public hearings after several weeks of secret work here by its investigators. Senator LA FOLLETTE has been too retiring about urging the inquiry be completed. Meantime demands for it have increased. The A. F. of L. action should be the signal to bring the movement to a head.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement respecting the matter discussed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

I think it was in 1936 that the Committee on Education and Labor was authorized first to make an investigation into so-called violations of civil rights. The authority was continued in 1937. There was a question in 1937 as to how much longer it would continue.

In 1938, as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated, he appeared before the committee, and I think the Senator from Utah appeared at the same time. I believe the RECORD will show that the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that, if the committee would recommend the amount asked for, the investigation would be ended, was made in the committee, as well as on the floor of the Senate. The statements were recorded by a reporter, and I have a copy of the report, at which time the Senator from Wisconsin stated—I do not recall what the Senator from Utah had to say about the matter—that if the amount then asked for were allowed, the work of the committee would be concluded. There was some discussion as to whether $60,000 would be necessary, but the committee was of the opinion that, in view of the statement that the work of the committee would be concluded, the resolution should be reported with the entire amount included. Thereafter on the floor of the Senate the Senator from Wisconsin made a statement similar to the one made in the committee to which he has referred. Therefore, I think it was not made solely because one Senator could object, but it was made to the committee, as well as to the Senate.

The Senator from Washington has spoken to me informally on one or two occasions about the resolution offered by him. I know that his purpose in talking to me was to have his resolution reported, though he has not made any specific request that he be given a hearing at any time. Certainly the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has had a rule, which it will now enforce, that anyone and everyone who has a resolution before the committee will before adjournment be given an opportunity to appear, and the Senator from Washington will have an opportunity to present his case.

I must say, as I have stated heretofore, that I have always believed that the object of investigations has been to secure information upon which to legislate, and as the result of the investigation in question, covering a period of 2 or 3 years, reports have been made. I do not know that the committee has reported any proposed legislation, but that is a matter with which I am not familiar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Utah and I have joined in introducing a bill at this session, and it is now pending in the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has no legislative power, and I had not noted upon the calendar any bill introduced as a result of the investigation. I think that, in all fairness to Senators, they should know that there never will come a time when somewhere in this country some person will not complain of a violation of his civil rights. If it be the purpose of the Senate to have a permanent committee established, then the Senate should proceed to establish a committee for the investigation of violations of the law. If an investigation is to be made every time there is a complaint of violation of civil liberties, manifestly we ought to make this committee a permanent one, established by action of the Senate, which would be entirely satisfactory to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The resolutions of investigation reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have been of an entirely different character. Their purpose has not been to establish a permanent committee.

In this case for 3 years the work of this subcommittee has continued. So far as my own views are concerned, I believe that whenever there is a violation of civil liberties it ought to be investigated by the Department of the Government having the power to enforce the law, if there is a violation, and because I so believe, upon my motion, the Appropriations Committee this year not only gave to the Department of Justice the amount of money it requested for the investigation of violations of civil liberties, but further, upon my motion, the amount was increased and then it was specifically provided in the bill that of the total amount $50,000 should be available for the purpose of investigating violations of civil liberties. The balance of the appropriation is available for prosecution. However, the Department of Justice has the power to investigate violations.

Inasmuch as reference has been made to the situation in California, it should be said that the Attorney General advised the Committee on Appropriations and advised me personally that with the funds made available as the result of the Senate action, an investigation was to be made by the Department of Justice of the complaint made as to the occurrences in the State of California particularly. That was a month or 6 weeks ago. I do not know what has been done since the 1st of July. Members of the Senate know those funds did not become available to the Department of Justice until July 1. However, the Department now has a fund available for the purpose not only of prosecuting but of investigating violations of civil liberties. If, notwithstanding that, the Senator from Washington desires to ask for further consideration by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as I have stated heretofore, he will be notified of the hearings and invited to attend.

STANDARDS OF LABOR UNDER GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1032, calendar No. 667.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1032) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States," and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036), entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended as follows:

Section 1 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. That in any contract made and entered into by any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency or instrumentality of the United States, or by the District of Columbia, or by any corporation all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States (all the foregoing being hereinafter designated as agencies of the United States), for the manufacture or furnishing of supplies in any amount in excess of $4,000, there shall be included the following representations and stipulations: (a) That the contractor is the manufacturer of or a regular dealer in the supplies to be manufactured or used in the performance of the contract; (b) that all persons employed by the contractor in the manufacture or furnishing of the supplies required under the contract will be paid not less than the minimum wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor to be the prevailing minimum wages for persons employed on similar work or in the particular or similar industries or groups of industries currently operating in the locality in which the supplies are to be manufactured or furnished under said contract, such minimum wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor in no case to be less than the applicable minimum wages required to be paid by employers subject to section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1060) to employees in the particular industry or industries, or branches thereof, for which such minimum wages are being determined; (c) that if the applicable minimum wage required to be paid by employers subject to section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to employees in the particular industry or industries or branches thereof shall be increased prior to the performance or completion of performance of the contract, all persons employed by the contractor in the manufacture or furnishing of the supplies required under the contract will be paid not less than such increased minimum wage from and after the date such increase shall be effective under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; (d) that no person employed by the contractor in the performance of the contract for supplies shall be permitted to work in excess of 8 hours in any 1 day or in excess of 40 hours in any 1 week; (e) that no person under 16 years of age and no convict labor will be employed by the contractor in the performance of the contract for supplies, and that no person under 18 years of age will be employed in any occupation or industry which the Secretary of Labor has determined to be hazardous or injurious to the health of such persons; (f) that no part of the contract for supplies will be performed in any plants, factories, buildings, or surroundings, or under working conditions which are insanitary or hazardous or dangerous to the health or safety of the employees engaged in the performance thereof. Compliance with the safety, sanitary, and factory-inspection laws of the State in which the work or part thereof is to be performed shall be prima facie evidence of compliance with this subsection; (g) that the contractor will comply with all the terms and conditions of this act, including any and all rules and regulations in force and effect; (h) that the contractor will, on or before entering into any contract with any person for the manufacture or furnishing to him or to the contracting agency of the United States, whether directly or through any middleman or broker, of all or any part of the supplies specifically required under the contract in any amount in excess of $4,000, file with the Secretary of Labor a certificate or certificates executed by each person with whom he proposes to or has entered into such contract, which certificates shall contain the same representations and stipulations required of the contractor."

Section 2 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. (a) That any breach or violation of any of the representations and stipulations in any contract for the purposes set forth in section 1 hereof shall render the party responsible therefor liable to the United States of America for liquidated damages, in addition to damages for any other breach of such contract, the sum of $10 per day for each person under 16 years of age or each person under 18 years of age employed in any occupation or industry which the Secretary of Labor has determined to be hazardous or injurious to the health of such person or each convict laborer employed in the performance of such contract, and a sum equal to the amount of any underpayment of wages due to any employee engaged in the performance of such contract, and for the second breach or violation double such amount due any employee, and for the subsequent breach or violation treble such amount; and, in addition, the contracting agency of the United States shall have the right to cancel the original contract with the contractor and to make open-market purchases or to enter into other contracts for the completion of the original contract, charging any additional cost to the original contractor or to the party responsible for such breach or violation. Any sums of money due to the United States of America by reason of any violation of any of the representations and stipulations in any contract for the purposes set forth in section 1 hereof may be withheld from any amounts due the contractor on any contract or may be recovered from the party responsible for such breach or violation in suits brought in the name of the United States of America; underpayment of wages, including such double or treble damages as may be found due, shall be held in a special deposit account and shall be paid, on order of the Secretary of Labor, directly to the employees who have been paid less than minimum rates of pay as set forth in such contracts and on whose account such sums were withheld or recovered: Provided, That no claims by employees for such payments shall be entertained unless made within 1 year from the date of actual notice to the contractor of the withholding or recovery of such sums by the United States of America; (b) any breach or violation of any of the representations and stipulations contained in such certificates as are required under section 1 (h) shall subject the party responsible therefor to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section and of section 3."

Section 3 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to distribute a list to all agencies of the United States containing the names of persons or firms found by the Secretary of Labor to have breached any of the agreements or representations required by this act: Provided, That such list shall contain the names of all persons who shall be found in a final adjudication by the appropriate court to have interfered with, restrained, or coerced their employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. Unless the Secretary of Labor otherwise recommends no contracts shall be awarded to such persons or firms or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which such persons or firms have a controlling interest until 3 years have elapsed from the date the Secretary of Labor determines such breach to have occurred."

Section 6 is amended by inserting the following at the end of the third sentence thereof:

"SEC. 6. In the exercise of his power to make reasonable variations and tolerances from minimum-wage determinations, the Secretary of Labor shall take into account the prevailing practices established by collective bargaining in any industry which is the subject matter of such determination."

Section 7 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. The words defined in this section, unless otherwise indicated, shall have the following meaning when used in this act, to wit: (a) 'Person' shall include one or more individuals, copartnerships, associations, corporations, trustees, legal representatives, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers; (b) 'supplies' shall be deemed to include materials, articles, vessels, equipment (including floating equipment), and services of any form, excepting professional, which are required to be furnished under the contract or subcontract."

Section 11 is hereby amended by the addition of the following: ": And provided further, That this act as amended shall apply to contracts entered into pursuant to invitations for bids issued on or after 90 days from the effective date hereof.

"SEC. 12. In respect of all contracts subject to the provisions hereof, the provisions of this act and of any regulations of the Secretary of Labor issued hereunder shall be deemed to be controlling, anything in the provisions of section 1 or section 2 of chapter 174 of the act of June 19, 1912 (37 Stat. 137), or of any other act to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the 'Public Contracts Act.'"

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Does an amendment to this bill have to be offered to the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute is open to amendment.

Mr. TAFT. After its adoption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; before its adoption.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendment of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement about the bill.

The original public-contracts law was enacted following the decision of the United States Supreme Court declaring unconstitutional the N. R. A. Following that decision there was a movement all over the country to go back to the conditions affecting labor conditions which existed prior to and led to the enactment of the N. R. A. It will be recalled that the sudden and severe depression, with millions of men being driven from their places of occupation, led to the rapid development and growth of what are called "chiseling" or sweatshop methods of employment. The restrictions upon the hours of labor under the N. R. A. which were universally agreed to by the industries of the country, and the wage scales which were agreed to generally, were suddenly broken down, with the result that industrial conditions returned to the conditions of cutthroat competition which existed following the depression and prior to the passage of the N. R. A. law.

Briefly stated, the Supreme Court ruled that the Congress had not authority to fix maximum hours of labor and minimum wages for all industries, as distinguished from industries engaged in interstate commerce. The Government found that in its requests for bids, the departments being required to ask for bids under general law, the absence of any limitation or restriction upon hours of labor invariably led to the award of contracts to those who worked their employees the longest hours and paid the poorest wages. In fact, the origin of the present law on the subject in part came to a climax from one particular ruling. The War Department, in asking bids for shoes, found that the particular bidder to whom the contract was awarded had entered into an agreement with his employees to work longer hours than are usual in shoe factories and for less wages. The War Department requested a ruling from the Attorney General, asking if it would be permissible for the Department, in its request for bids, to put a limit upon the working hours of those employed in manufacturing particular commodities which the Government sought to buy. The Department of Justice ruled that, so long as there was a general law which compelled the award of a contract to the lowest bidder, no matter what the labor standards were, no matter what the conditions of employment were, no matter what the wage was, the Government departments must give the contract to the lowest bidder, in the absence of specific legislation to the contrary.

Similar instances arose in contracts for shirts for the Army and Navy, for hosiery, for gloves, for caps, particularly in the case of textiles, but also in many other fields.

As a result the Government contracts were going to sweatshop institutions or industries. While the present law on the subject bears my name, as well as that of a Member of the House, it does so only because I happened to be chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor at the time. As a result of the facts I have stated, the administration proposed to the Congress—and I introduced the bill at its request—that provision be made that in making contracts and purchasing supplies by the Government, limitations upon the hours of employment and minimum-wage provisions should be included in the requests for bids.

The present law was passed in 1936, after deliberation and discussion here in the Senate and the other House. It provided that the requirement setting forth a limited scale of working hours and providing for a minimum wage should apply only to contracts in excess of $10,000. It develops that such contracts represent only about 3 percent of all Government contracts, and in value only about 15 percent of the money spent by the Government for supplies. No question of constitutionality was involved in this instance as in the N. R. A., because it has been ruled that the Government, like a private individual, may specify the hours of work of employees engaged in the performance of any particular job for it, or for which it contracts, or may fix a minimum wage on such work or contracts if it sees fit. So the present law was an effort, within constitutional limitations, to set a standard of reasonable working hours and a minimum wage by the Government in its purchases of supplies and in its contracts.

The bill now before the Senate is for the purpose of correcting some of the limitations which experience has unfolded and some of the efforts to evade the present law which have been discovered since its enactment, and also for the purpose of bringing it somewhat into harmony with the wage and hour law of last year.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. As I understand the Senator's pending amendment to this bill, it provides that prospective bidders shall be ineligible only when they are found guilty by a court. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. That is one of the provisions of the bill which establishes a so-called blacklist and which I shall discuss later.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Last year, in the bill before Congress at that time and which failed of enactment in the House, there was a provision which forbade a person who was discovered to be violating an order of the National Labor Relations Board to bid for a certain period of time on Government contracts. The bill this year modifies that provision, and provides that no such limitation or restriction or denial shall be inflicted upon anybody who is charged with violating the terms of a contract of this kind unless a court decree finds that there has been such a violation.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what I thought. The bill introduced last year, and to which there was a great deal of opposition, provided that if the Department of Labor issued some decree on the subject, the bidder should be on the blacklist.

Mr. WALSH. I shall come to that a little later. There is in the present public-contracts law a requirement that all supplies costing the Government over $10,000 should be subject to the law. We found that departments of the Government, or bidders, or both, proceeded to evade that provision of the law by making their contracts for a sum which might be less than $10,000. There was one instance of a contract for $9,999.99. There are several instances of contracts being for an amount five or ten dollars less than $10,000. So one of the important amendments of the law incorporated in the bill now before the Senate is a provision that contracts for supplies costing in excess of $4,000 shall come under the provisions of the law. The proposal from the Department fixed the sum at $2,000, but the committee, in deliberating over the matter, in weighing the arguments pro and con, decided that $4,000 probably was a reasonable amount to agree upon. So the first change in the present law provides that all purchases by the Government costing in excess of $4,000 should come under the provisions of the law which fixes a 40-hour week for workers engaged in filling Government contracts, and which also provides for a minimum wage, to be fixed by the Department of Labor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. In that connection, am I correct in thinking that the language at the top of page 7 which requires that the Secretary of Labor determine the prevailing minimum wages is one of the points upon which a certificate must be issued?

Mr. WALSH. By the subcontractor or the contractor?

Mr. DANAHER. By the contractor.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. If a manufacturer in Massachusetts, for instance, bids on a contract for supplies which are to be furnished, let us say, at an Army field in Texas, such manufacturer in Massachusetts must comply, under the terms of the pending bill, if the order be for a purchase amounting to over $4,000, must he not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. So that if the prevailing minimum wage be fixed as the wage which is prevailing in Massachusetts, can the Massachusetts manufacturer compete with a manufacturer, let us say, in a State where a far lower minimum prevailing wage exists, as found by the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. WALSH. There is no minimum wage fixed by the Secretary of Labor for each State. The minimum wage fixed is a rate which is established as a result of the study of the wages paid in all parts of the country in a particular industry.

Mr. DANAHER. Does it not apply at all on the basis of regional area within which minimum rates of wages are established by the Secretary?

Mr. WALSH. It depends upon the particular industry. To an extent the Secretary of Labor may fix a minimum wage in one region as against another, depending upon the particular facts and circumstances, which the law requires the Secretary to take into consideration.

Mr. DANAHER. I understand that. Now, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Then is it not necessarily so that within those particular spheres as to which the Secretary of Labor may fix the prevailing minimum wage, based on the regional or area rate, a manufacturer in one locality who may be paying a rate which is much higher than that paid by a manufacturer in another locality may be found not to be complying?

Mr. WALSH. I assume the method of procedure is that a department of the Government which desires to purchase hosiery, let us say, requests the Secretary of Labor to fix a minimum wage for them to incorporate in their contract, and in the request for bids such minimum wage as fixed by the Secretary of Labor is designated, so that all the bidders in all parts of the country know the minimum wage they are expected to pay, and also know the hours of employment.

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator will yield further, my fear is that the business will be driven from the manufacturer in one area who is paying a higher rate of wage to the manufacturer in another area who is paying a lower rate of wage, and therefore a premium will be put upon the manufacturer who is paying the lower rate of wages. Can the Senator allay my fears in that particular?

Mr. WALSH. Frankly, I have not had called to my attention the situation about which the Senator speaks. Personally I have always been opposed to preferential rates of wages. I will say to the Senator that the provisions of the pending bill were the result, after much agitation and discussion and some compromises. The bill does not contain the rigid provisions found in the wage and hour law with respect to minimum wages; in other words, it is more or less elastic. But I do not think there has been any suggestion from any source—certainly not before our committee—of the embarrassment or the difficulty which the Senator points out.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I should like to take up, if I may, several other amendments or changes to the present law which are in this bill. I began with the first amendment, relating to the $4,000 requirement, and have not finished discussing that.

Mr. DANAHER. The question arises because the Senator has addressed himself to the reduction of the minimum, with reference to subcontractors, from $10,000 to $4,000, which necessarily affects people in Massachusetts, and in Connecticut, and in all other States where the manufacturers are fabricators principally, rather than producers principally. Because of that, and because of my fear on the point as to which the Senator says he has not heard the question raised, I had hoped that perhaps we could dispose of that matter with reference to the language at the top of page 7.

The minimum hours and wage law fixes a standard, and that is all right, I am in favor of it; but here we have a very different situation, for the Secretary of Labor is the one who now is going to fix the prevailing rate, and since it lies within the purview of the Department to do it on a regional basis, it is entirely possible that they will wind up by penalizing the manufacturer who pays a high minimum, giving a bonus to the area or the region where a low minimum is paid.

Mr. WALSH. The difficulty is that under the wage and hour law the minimum wage is fixed now at 25 cents. It is absurd to attempt to incorporate in any request for bids for steel a provision for a 25-cent minimum wage. Can we in the Congress determine whether it should be 57 cents, 65 cents, 73 cents, or 79 cents? We cannot. So the proposed law permits the Secretary of Labor, after a study of the whole situation, after a consideration of the wages paid in the industry and of the conditions in the industry, to fix the amount which shall go into the request for bids. Frankly, I do not know of any other way in which it could be handled. If we did not have a provision covering the matter, the minimum wage would be 25 cents in the steel contracts, whereas the wage in that industry as fixed by the Secretary is now 62½ cents, so that when the Government bids for steel that is the minimum wage designated. At the time the Walsh-Healey law was enacted, the wage and hour law was not in operation, and it was impossible for us to fix the standard of wages in connection with all goods purchased from the various industries by the Government.

Mr. DANAHER. If we should strike out the two words "or furnished" from line 5, page 7, it might well be that the Senator would find that the very evil to which I allude might be cured, and in due course it may be that the Senator will comment with reference to his ideas in that connection.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be pleased to give it consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to see if I understand the matter correctly. The proposed law would do more to correct the situation to which the Senator from Connecticut is objecting than anything else, because, if it were not for such a provision, when the manufacturer in Massachusetts who paid a higher wage than was paid at some other point bid on a Government contract, the Government would be bound to buy from the person who sold at the very cheapest rate and paid the lowest wages. In other words, the Government would be stimulating and helping the sweatshops of the country rather than manufacturers who have to pay high wages. It seems to me that even though there may be some merit to the Senator's objection the pending proposal goes a long way toward correcting the evil.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut to reply to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DANAHER. Addressing myself particularly to the Senator from Montana, let me say, first, that I have voiced no objection; secondly, that I have raised a question the answer to which I think is highly material.

I have a fear which I should like to have allayed, and the point raised by the Senator from Montana does not begin to reach the situation, as he would have us understand, for the reason that the words "or furnished" at the end of line 5, on page 7, take this situation out of the category explained by the Senator from Montana, for if the prevailing minimum wage were to be paid in the section or region where the goods are to be manufactured that would be one thing, but if the manufacturer at the point of manufacture were to be put in competition with the prevailing rate where the supplies are being furnished as distinguished from being manufactured there would be a different situation.

Mr. WALSH. The words "or furnish" meet such a situation as that.

We all regret the necessity of a law of this kind. I wish the conditions in the industry and business life of the country were such that there was no chiseling, that there were no sweatshops; that the Government could purchase from high-class industries and business establishments which are striving to maintain the best possible standards of working conditions for their employees. But all laws of this kind are the result of abuses and are designed to correct abuses. Unless we have a law of this kind, then shoes will be manufactured in sweatshops; hosiery will be manufactured in sweatshops; caps will be manufactured in sweatshops; Army and Navy supplies will be manufactured in sweatshops; clothing will be manufactured in sweatshops. If there are still sweatshops all those things will be done as they were done to some extent before the original public-contracts law was passed.

The purpose of the law is to give protection to industries and to business establishments that maintain reasonable hours of labor and that pay good wages, so that when they submit their bids they will not be punished and be subjected to the competition from bids of sweatshop producers, but will have an even chance because we will compel those who operate sweatshops to maintain the standards which the others have. That is the philosophy behind the bill. The bill is just as much for the benefit of the fair-minded, progressive, liberal, decent employer as it is for the welfare of employees.

If time permitted, I could give illustrations of the background of the proposed legislation. A few minutes ago I gave an instance of what will be reached by it. I know of an instance of an employer calling his employees together and saying, "I have a chance to obtain a big contract from the Government. I cannot get it if I have to maintain the same standards which my competitors maintain, but if you will agree with me to work longer hours and for less wages, I will get that contract."

Mr. President, is such conduct fair to the employer and to the businessman who is maintaining a first-class labor condition in his factory or shop? Of course, it is not.

In that connection let me read a case which the Board has to deal with. It illustrates the necessities of a law of this kind. I merely read a summary from the report:

> The Sigmund Eisner Co., a New Jersey corporation, carrying on business at four different points in New Jersey, was found guilty of breaching 23 Government contracts.

Even after this law was passed that concern was found guilty of breaching 23 Government contracts.

> The corporation admitted that instructions had been given to its employees to punch their time cards in such a way that the wages earned on a piece-rate basis divided by the hours of labor punched on the time cards would show earnings of at least 37½ cents an hour, even though the number of hours actually worked might have far exceeded the hours punched on the time card.

In other words, they gave instructions to their employees so to manipulate the punch machine that it would show that they were getting a minimum wage of 37½ cents an hour, when they were actually getting much less than that because they were working a greater number of hours than shown on the machine.

That concern violated 23 Government contracts. Should it not be punished; should it not be blacklisted for resorting to such criminal methods? And what about the rights of competitors of this concern—the men who lost the contracts to furnish the Government the supplies because they were willing to pay 37½ cents an hour and work their employees only 40 hours?

I wish to emphasize the fact that it is not pleasant to undertake in the Congress to regulate business. Only a few persons, generally speaking, violate an automobile law; yet we have a law limiting the speed at which one may drive an automobile. The purpose of the law is not to punish those who live up to it, but to check some of those who violate the law occasionally.

So here we are making an effort to provide that when the Government itself spends the taxpayers' money, even if it costs a little more, sweatshops and chiselers and crooked business establishments shall not get contracts but employers who maintain decent conditions for their workers shall be rewarded with contracts.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to call the Senator's attention to page 11, line 20, which reads as follows:

> Section 6 is amended by inserting the following at the end of the third sentence thereof—

Then comes the matter to be inserted, beginning as follows:

> SEC. 6. In the exercise * * * of his power—

And so forth. That may be a misprint. If we pass the bill in this form there would at least be a grammatical error there. Evidently "Sec. 6," in line 22 should be omitted, because that will appear at the beginning of section 6, and it is not proposed to strike out the entire section 6, but only to make an insertion after the third sentence. Does the Senator get the point I am trying to make?

Mr. WALSH. So that following the third sentence in section 6 of the law there should be inserted the words beginning "In the exercise of his power."

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Omit "Sec. 6" there; otherwise it would appear twice.

Mr. WALSH. That is an error which should be corrected in the phraseology. I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me 1 minute more?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. First, I want it definitely to appear that I have not been nor am I now objecting to this bill.

Mr. WALSH. No; I understand the Senator's position. In fact, he is discussing a very important feature of the pending bill.

Mr. DANAHER. So much so that it is possible I would be the last one here to raise an objection as such. In any event, it has been called to my attention that the Labor Department has fixed, for example, in New England, a minimum rate of 57½ cents with reference to granite workers; let us say that the Labor Department has fixed a rate of 42 cents or 42½ cents in Indiana; and let us say in another State it is 32½ cents. It is perfectly apparent that if the contract is to be based upon the prevailing wage, at the rate prevailing in the section where the manufacture occurs, on the one hand, or where the supplies are to be furnished, on the other, it is very possible that a huge disparity may result, with the necessary conclusion that the business will be driven from the States which are paying the higher rates, to the division or area which is paying the lower or the medium rate. Because of my fear in that connection I want to see labor in my own section protected.

I want to see labor, wherever located, when it is uniformly on a high standard, protected. All I wish is to avoid any possible disparity which will have the effect of giving a bonus to those who are already paying a low rate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am informed by the representative of the Department of Labor who is administering this law that the Senator has referred to a particular industry in which there is a great deal of variation in the minimum wage, and that it is one of the few industries as to which it is not possible to obtain a more or less uniform general minimum wage. But even in that field progress is being made. For instance, in the South the pay was 15 cents an hour. The Department of Labor has established a minimum wage of 32 cents an hour, having in mind what is paid in other parts of the country, and yet not going up to the higher or larger minimum wage which is being paid in other sections of the country. So it seems to me to be a matter which we have to leave to the Department of Labor and let it work out the problem.

But I must admit that there is some reason to believe that an advantage may be given in getting a contract from the Government—for instance, in the case of granite—to that section which pays the lowest wage, unless the specifications call for granite from a particular section of the country. Of course, that could be done; and it would overcome the difficulty. Government contracts oftentimes designate granite of a certain type and of certain character. The same thing is true of marble, limestone, and other products.

I shall be glad to hear any suggestion the Senator has to make which would correct that situation; but I think the Department of Labor, insofar as it can, is striving to meet the condition. The Senator has called attention to a special circumstance.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator for his indulgence and courtesy.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has been helpful.

Mr. President, the second amendment about which I wish to speak is an amendment to harmonize the child-labor standards in this act with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. The wage and hour law fixes the wage age at 16 years for both females and males, and also permits limiting the age of employment to 18 years in hazardous occupations. The original law passed in 1936, the public-contracts law with which we are now dealing, fixed the age limitation for males at 16 years and for females at 18 years. The second amendment is to conform to the wage and hour law, establishing the age of 16 for both males and females. It does not seem to be controversial.

The other amendments are not particularly controversial. The two most important amendments are the ones to which I have referred, the age limitation for employment, and the extension of the scope of the act so as to include all contracts in excess of $4,000, eliminating the present limitation of $10,000.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has referred to section 3, which I think I ought to read to the Senate:

> Section 3 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:
> "SEC. 3. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to distribute a list to all agencies of the United States containing the names of persons or firms found by the Secretary of Labor to have breached any of the agreements or representations required by this act: Provided, That such list shall contain the names of all persons who shall be found in a final adjudication by the appropriate court to have interfered with, restrained, or coerced their employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. Unless the Secretary of Labor otherwise recommends, no contracts shall be awarded to such persons or firms or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which such persons or firms have a controlling interest until 3 years have elapsed from the date the Secretary of Labor determines such breach to have occurred."

It seems to me a reading of the amendment indicates what is contemplated.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the able chairman of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Does not the Senator feel that in connection with the amendments he has just discussed it should be pointed out that transferring control of a blacklist from an administrative body, and permitting action only after a judicial body has made a decision, overcomes practically all the objections to the amendment as it was offered last year?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has emphasized what was called to the attention of the Senate by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. The amendment last year gave authority to the Secretary of Labor to blacklist—if I may use that word—those who violated orders of the Labor Relations Board. The present amendment—which I understand is now acceptable to all interests, even including most employers—prevents any blacklisting of violators of mere orders of the Board. There must be an actual violation of a court order before anyone is subjected to this particular penalty.

Another amendment broadens the scope of the present act to include within the term "supplies" the construction of vessels, floating equipment, and services, except professional services. Strange as it may seem, the provisions of the law are applicable to the construction of naval vessels, but are not applicable to construction of vessels by the Maritime Commission. As Senators know, the Bacon-Davis law deals with the construction of buildings by the Government. The only materials or structures for which the Government is likely to contract which are not covered by the law, and which would involve a contract of more than $4,000, are ships and vessels.

Mr. President, if there are no other questions, I suggest that we take up the committee amendment and dispose of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is only one amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the Senator ask that the committee amendment be amended in the particular to which I called his attention.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I think the same thing may apply to other sections.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think not. I think section 6 is the only place in the bill where it applies.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct. While the bill embodies a great many changes in the nature of amendments to the present law, as a matter of fact they are all included in one amendment, beginning on page 6 and ending on page 13.

Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment, which is about to be voted upon, be amended by striking out on page 11, line 22, the words "Sec. 6."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on page 12, line 20, I observe the following language:

SEC. 12. In respect of all contracts subject to the provisions hereof, the provisions of this act and of any regulations of the Secretary of Labor issued hereunder shall be deemed to be controlling, anything in the provisions of section 1 or section 2 of chapter 174 of the act of June 19, 1912 (37 Stat. 137), or of any other act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The act to which reference is made is an act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. The first section of that act really sets the standard of the 8-hour day.

I have read the committee report, on page 6, referring to section 12, which seems to be entirely satisfactory so far as it goes. That report appears to me to refer only to the provisions of section 1 of the act of 1912. My difficulty, which I hope may result in an amendment being accepted by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, is that section 2 is also included; and section 2 does not appear to me to be necessary to achieve the object spoken of in the report. Section 2 contains provisions which I feel confident the Senator from Massachusetts does not intend to reduce to a position subordinate to the rules which might be promulgated by the Secretary of Labor under this act, or to the provisions of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator reads section 2, may I inquire if we are agreed upon the fact that the act of 1912 limits the hours of employment on Government work to 8?

Mr. AUSTIN. Section 1 does so.

Mr. WALSH. That section makes no provision for working more than 8 hours with extra pay.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The so-called Walsh-Healey Act, or the public-contracts law, makes provision for permitting employees to work more than 8 hours, provided an increased wage is paid during the extra hours. So the purpose of the amendment to which the Senator refers, and which is embodied in the pending bill, is to prevent the act of 1912 from interfering with the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, which permits more than 8 hours' labor per day under certain conditions, provided extra wages are paid. That is the only purpose. If the Senator thinks the language of the amendment extends beyond that objective, I shall be glad to accept any amendment he may suggest.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have no fault to find with the objective of the learned Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed that we were agreed on it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would assent to that modification of the act of 1912, and I think it could easily be accommodated by specifically referring to the element to which the Senator from Massachusetts now refers, which is contained in sections 1 and 2 of chapter 174 of the act of June 19, 1912. I think that would be a better way to do it than the method I first had in mind.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator read the second section? I have it not before me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I read the second section of the old act of 1912:

That nothing in this act shall apply to contracts for transportation by land or water, or for the transmission of intelligence, or for the purchase of supplies by the Government, whether manufactured to conform to particular specifications or not, or for such materials or articles as may usually be bought in the open market, except armor and armor plate, whether made to conform to particular specifications or not, or to the construction or repair of levees or revetments necessary for protection against floods or overflows or floods on the navigable waters of the United States: Provided, That all classes of work which have been, are now, or may hereafter be performed by the Government shall, when done by contract, by individuals, firms, or corporations for or on behalf of the United States or any of the Territories or the District of Columbia, be performed in accordance with the terms and provisions of section 1 of this act. The President, by Executive order, may waive the provisions and stipulations in this act as to any specific contract or contracts during time of war or a time when war is imminent and until January 1, 1915, as to any contract or contracts entered into in connection with the construction of the Isthmian Canal.

Of course, that date will have to be changed if we are going to include the Panama Canal.

Mr. WALSH. May I suggest to the Senator that I think the difficulty can be removed by inserting on line 23, after the word "controlling," the words "insofar as hours of labor are concerned"? That would limit the authority of the Secretary of Labor merely to hours of labor.

Mr. AUSTIN. It would not quite accomplish the object, because it would be necessary, as I see it, to strike out also the words "or section 2." Then the measure which we are now considering would control section 1 as to hours and not control section 2 as to service in time of war or service on flood-control projects or service on the Isthmian Canal. That is what I want to accomplish, if possible, namely, to exclude from this measure its controlling effect on Government contracts in time of war.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has section 2 referred to by the Senator from Vermont anything to do at all with hours of labor?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; by reference to section 1.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts should be adopted would not the limitation apply only to hours in both sections?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. ELLENDER. Why not?

Mr. AUSTIN. Because section 2 of the act of 1912 enables the President in time of war to exempt any specific contract from the operation of section 1 and section 2. I do not think the safety of this country should be hazarded through arbitrary time, wages, and other standards with respect to the production and supply of necessary materials for our defense in time of war or other great emergency which is referred to in section 2.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there is a provision in the existing law permitting the Secretary of Labor, for purposes of national defense or the public interest, to suspend the operation of the public-contracts law. Does not the Senator think the amendment I have suggested would tend to liberalize the act of 1912, which, I assume, he desires, by permitting the Secretary of Labor to continue to permit in emergencies and at other times longer working hours than 40 per week at increased wages for the extra hours?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no complaint about the hours and wages at other times than during time of war.

Mr. WALSH. If the amendment contains the limitation on the authority of the Secretary of Labor to deal only with hours of labor, how is any of the remainder of the law of 1912 affected?

Mr. AUSTIN. The act of 1912 is made subservient to the bill we are considering by the terms of section 12 of the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. What does the Senator suggest?

Mr. AUSTIN. This is the first time that I have considered this matter, and I make the suggestion with some reservations, but I thought if the words "or section 2," in line 24 were stricken out so that section 12 applied only to section 1, it would accomplish the objective.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, section 2, it seems to me, has a special bearing on the proposition with which we are dealing. The only purpose of section 12, on page 12, of the bill before the Senate is to permit the Secretary of Labor to continue to operate as she has been operating under the public contract law by permitting in certain cases the extension of the hours of labor to more than 40, with increased wages. I cannot see any objection to the amendment as drafted and prepared by the department of the Government that simply seeks to overcome the ruling of the Comptroller General which would prevent the operation of the provisions of the laws enacted in 1936.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then I understand the Senator means by that that he would accept an amendment that would strike out the words "or section 2"?

Mr. WALSH. Frankly, I do not think it is particularly important, but if the Senator insists upon it, I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I feel it sufficiently important so that it would change my vote. That is how important I regard it.

Mr. WALSH. What does the Senator contend the language on page 12 of this amendment does to modify or change the law of 1912?

Mr. AUSTIN. Section 12 of the pending bill would put both sections of the law of 1912 under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Only for the purpose of permitting the Secretary of Labor to regulate hours.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is sufficient in time of war. It might mean the difference between building a ship for example, under emergency conditions, at the most rapid rate of speed, and having the building of the ship delayed.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the Senator's difficulty, then, the present law itself gives the Secretary of Labor that authority. He has full authority at any time to suspend this law and prevent its being at all operative.

Mr. AUSTIN. By what section?

Mr. WALSH. Section 6 of the existing law which is not amended.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think it is the opening sentence of section 6 of existing law which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator. I read from section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. Upon a written finding by the head of the contracting agency or department that the inclusion in the proposal or contract of the representations or stipulations set forth in section 1 will seriously impair the conduct of Government business, the Secretary of Labor shall make exceptions in specific cases or otherwise when justice or public interest will be served thereby. Upon the joint recommendation of the contracting agency and the contractor, the Secretary of Labor may modify the terms of an existing contract respecting minimum rates of pay and maximum hours of labor as he may find necessary and proper in the public interest or to prevent injustice and undue hardship. The Secretary of Labor may provide reasonable limitations and may make rules and regulations allowing reasonable variations, tolerances, and exemptions to and from any or all provisions of this act respecting minimum rates of pay and maximum hours of labor or the extent of the application of this act to contractors, as hereinbefore described. Whenever the Secretary of Labor shall permit an increase in the maximum hours of labor stipulated in the contract, he shall set a rate of pay for any overtime, which rate shall be not less than one and one-half times the basic hourly rate received by any employee affected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I call to the attention of the Senator the fact that that section does not answer the same purpose which section 2 of the act of 1912 did, and that in this bill there is a section, numbered section 6, which adds to the section which has just been read by the learned Senator from Michigan the following words:

In the exercise of his power to make reasonable variations and tolerances from minimum-wage determinations, the Secretary of Labor shall take into account the prevailing practices established by collective bargaining in any industry which is the subject matter of such determination.

Which nullifies the effect of the old section 6 so far as it could be used in time of war. I feel sure that the Senator does not want to nullify the power of the President to waive these provisions in time of war, and I also suppose he does not want to have that power taken away with respect to the Isthmian Canal or with respect to flood control.

Mr. WALSH. Evidently the Senator from Vermont considers the inclusion of section 2 in this amendment of great importance and wants it eliminated. I do not consider it of special importance, in view of the limitations I suggested. Therefore, in order to dispose of the matter, I see no objection to striking out, on page 12, line 24, the words "or section 2."

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I further move, as an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 12, line 24, to strike out the words "or section 2."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed to insert, between sections 12 and 13, a new section reading as follows:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to persons subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, there are a few isolated cases in which railroads furnish steam to the Post Office Department, and so forth, for the convenience of the Government. It seems to me that to inject another Federal agency into their labor relations would create confusion and conflict, as their labor relations are already thoroughly covered by the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that amendment was in the bill of last year that failed of enactment in the House. The Senator from Pennsylvania consulted me about it, and the committee have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out lines 24 and 25 on page 10, and lines 1 to 19, inclusive, on page 11, as follows:

Section 3 is hereby amended by striking out the entire section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to distribute a list to all agencies of the United States containing the names of persons or firms found by the Secretary of Labor to have breached any of the agreements or representations required by this act: Provided, That such list shall contain the names of all persons who shall be found in a final adjudication by the appropriate court to have interfered with, restrained, or coerced their employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. Unless the Secretary of Labor otherwise recommends, no contracts shall be awarded to such persons or firms or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which such persons or firms have a controlling interest until 3 years have elapsed from the date the Secretary of Labor determines such breach to have occurred."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this is a motion to strike out the blacklist provision, a provision that no person shall have a Government contract for 3 years if the court finds that he has violated any of the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

In the first place, I do not think that the way to enforce one act is to provide that the violator thereof shall be penalized under another act.

In the second place, I do not think it is a fair provision, because, after all, many of the terms of the National Labor Relations Act are very indefinite.

It is very difficult for a man to determine whether he is violating that act or is not violating it; so that it becomes almost impossible for him to tell what a court may decide. His attorneys may advise him he has not violated the act, and yet some day he may be found to have violated the act.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, as I understand, this provision of the bill will only apply if a person has been convicted and found by a judgment of a court to have been guilty of a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. There is nothing speculative about that.

Mr. TAFT. Take this particular term—if the person shall have been found by the appropriate court to have "interfered with" his employees. The term "interfered with" is so vague that we have representatives of the American Federation of Labor before us saying that the words must be taken out of the statute; that no one knows what they mean. And Mr. Madden says that the word "interfere" includes such a case, for instance, as an employer saying to his men, "Those who are forming this other union are Communists"; and even though they are Communists, still Mr. Madden says such a statement is an interference with the employees' rights to self-organization. That and nothing more.

My point is that the language of the Labor Relations Act is so vague that no one knows whether he is violating it or not until the court finally adjudicates the question involved.

Furthermore, I am not perfectly certain that the provision does what the learned author attempts to make it do, because it says, "Found in a final adjudication to have interfered with." As a matter of fact, the court does not find that those charged have interfered with or done a certain thing. What the court finds is that the order of the Board is based on evidence—on some evidence—not on a preponderance of the evidence. A court cannot go back of the Board's findings of fact. As a matter of fact, all it can do is to pass on the law. So that I would say it is impossible for a man to tell in advance what may be held to be an interference with the right of self-determination of unions.

We have held hearings in our committee now for 5 months. There is the additional fact that there is serious doubt whether or not the Board is fair. If we believe what the American Federation of Labor says, what Mr. Green says, what Mr. Padway says, then we must believe that under this Board has occurred the grossest perversion of justice that has ever occurred in the United States, and yet this proposed legislation says that if that Board shall have found that certain things have happened and a court finds that there was some evidence on which that finding could be based, then for 3 years the firm involved and any other firm in which the person owning it has a controlling interest shall be barred from all Government contracts.

I think the Senate recognizes the truth of what I am saying, that these are new words and that nobody yet knows exactly what they mean. That is clear from the fact that the Labor Relations Act itself contains no penalty provision. The court was given the right to enforce the act by injunction, but if we want to enforce this provision it seems to me we should first put in the National Labor Relations Act some language which would impose a penalty of fine or imprisonment for committing the particular acts which are found to be unjust.

But we do not put such language in the National Labor Relations Act for the simple reason that everyone knows this is a new situation. We have not yet arrived at the point where a man knows whether or not he is violating the act. I think it would be most unfair to a large number of men who may go to court to have their rights determined and who may be held to be in the wrong, to say that they shall never get another Government contract.

There is an additional point. In a way it is a kind of blackmail. One of the complaints that employers have made about the actions of the Labor Relations Board deals with what may result, if they take a matter to court, or even if they do nothing and wait for the National Labor Relations Board to take it to court.

The National Labor Relations Board may issue many orders against employers, and even though the orders are not complied with it may fail to take the steps to go to court and have them enforced for a year or 2 years frequently, apparently, because the Board does not want a court test of the particular question involved. We have much complaint from employers that they cannot go to court to have their legal rights determined. They do not dare to because it is so expensive. If they should go to court, the case would be strung out over a year or two, anyway, and then, if they should lose, they would find that they would have to pay all the back wages for 2 years.

Furthermore, the Board in effect can say to an employer, "We have issued an order to you, and if you take the matter to court and should happen to lose you will lose all your Government contracts for 3 years after that time. You will be ruined in many cases. So you had better not take it to court." That is a very effective weapon which the Board can use against employers who wish to have their legal rights determined.

I do not think we ought to mix up the National Labor Relations Act with this act. We had very much the same question before us in the Barkley amendment to the airplane bill, and the Senate decided that it ought not to be put in an extraneous bill. I think the proper thing to do is to eliminate it. If a stronger penalty should be provided, let us put it in the National Labor Relations Act where it belongs and not in the pending measure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is no penalty in this bill except the penalty preventing the violators of the law further to bid on Government contracts. There is a provision compelling them to pay extra wages to their employees in case of violation of the wage provisions of the law.

In the present law there is a so-called blacklist provision. In some respects it is broader than the provision in this bill. The Secretary of Labor may put anyone on the blacklist at any time she wants to under the present law, if he violates the public-contracts law. In a moment I will read to the Senate the authority which she has. She has that authority now. The reason why it is not assumed that there is a blacklist provision in the present law is simply because it has not been exercised. Out of 15,000 Government contracts it has only been exercised twice. To my mind, it is unbelievable that the concern whose record I read a few minutes ago to the Senate, which violated 23 Government contracts in 23 particulars, could not be blacklisted without being brought into court. Under the proposed amendment such firms could not be blacklisted unless they were brought to court.

I wish first to read the present law and then call attention to the proposed change, and state why it is proposed:

> The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to distribute a list to all agencies of the United States containing the names of persons or firms found by the Secretary of Labor to have breached any of the agreements or representations required by this act. Unless the Secretary of Labor otherwise recommends, no contract shall be awarded to such persons or firms or to any firm, corporation, partnership, or association in which such persons or firms have the controlling interest, until 3 years have elapsed from the date the Secretary of Labor determines such breach to have occurred.

The present law covers any person or firm found by the Secretary of Labor to have breached any of the agreements or representations required by the act. When the Secretary of Labor finds that situation to exist she may stop that person or firm from obtaining any contracts for 3 years.

That section of the law is proposed to be stricken out, and there is proposed a modified, more liberal provision, which, if I recall correctly, the language abandons the present law giving the authority to the Secretary of Labor, and providing that no one may be blacklisted until the court has found a breach of the contract.

There is one addition that evidently has prompted the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to take the position he has taken, and that is the inclusion of the power to blacklist not only violators of this law but violators of the provisions of law guaranteeing to labor collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing. In other words, the amendment permits blacklisting for the purpose of preventing the obtaining of Government contracts when a court has decreed a violation of the National Labor Relations Act, as well as when a violation of the Walsh-Healey Act is found to exist. That provision was added at the request of the C. I. O., the American Federation of Labor, and others interested in seeking an effective way of punishing those who violate the labor provisions of this law and of the National Labor Relations Act, but not until there has been an adjudication of a violation of the National Labor Relations law. So, other than broadening the provision to include violations of the National Labor Relations Act, the amendment is much more liberal.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not find anything in the amendment which says that the Secretary of Labor must have a court order to find that there is a violation of the Walsh-Healey Act. The only instance in which a court order is required is with relation to the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct. The court decree applies to a violation of the National Labor Relations Act and not to the public-contract law.

Mr. TAFT. The effect of my amendment would not be to change the general provision imposing a penalty for violation of the Walsh-Healey Act, but merely to prevent the amendment of the committee from establishing a relationship between the National Labor Relations Act and this bill. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I recall, one of the objectives of the Walsh-Healey Act was to harmonize the letting of Government contracts with the requirements of the National Labor Relations Act. The two acts are not altogether separated in their relations, although of course the Walsh-Healey Act rests upon its own foundations.

Mr. WALSH. The Walsh-Healey Act followed the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the National Industrial Recovery Act unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. I have forgotten, in the matter of time, whether or not the Walsh-Healey Act was passed subsequently to the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. WALSH. It was passed in 1936, prior to the National Labor Relations Act. Immediately upon the breakdown of labor conditions, with the chiseling and extreme competition developed as a result of wiping out the N. R. A., the Walsh-Healey Act was proposed to keep the standard fixed under the N. R. A., so far as they related to Government contracts.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the theory of this particular provision, which relates to the National Labor Relations Act, the Government ought not to encourage the violation of its own laws among those who supply it with materials or supplies of any kind. The Government ought to keep its own skirts clear by insisting that its own laws, with respect to the standards under which the supplies are manufactured, shall be observed by those with whom it does business. Otherwise, contractors or manufacturers who complied with the law and observed it with respect to wages and hours would be at a disadvantage, because they would always be outbid by those who did not observe the law. The Government would thus be used as an agency to break down its own law with respect to wages and hours. Is not that correct?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So I see no reason why this provision should not apply to the National Labor Relations Act as well as to the previous Walsh-Healey Act.

Mr. WALSH. The provision is so strongly urged by the representatives of labor, for the purpose of providing an opportunity to punish those who violate the law with respect to collective bargaining, that I cannot accept the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and will leave the decision to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. This provision would apply only after it had been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction that there had been a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. What is worse than violation of the right of labor to engage in collective bargaining, when it is determined by the Supreme Court of the land to be a violation of the law?

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator. Even after the Supreme Court had determined that a concern had been guilty of a violation of the act by prohibiting collective bargaining or by refusing to sit down and negotiate, or a violation of any of the other provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, without this amendment the Government might still be compelled to continue to award contracts to violators of the act.

Mr. WALSH. There would be no way of stopping it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If a violator of the act happened to be the lowest bidder, he would have to receive the contract.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he probably would be the lowest bidder merely because he did not comply with the law set up by the Government of the United States to provide a fair method of arriving at wages and hours.

It seems to me the amendment is just and fair, and is not unreasonable.

Mr. TAFT. Is not this amendment in substance the same amendment which the Senator offered to the Airplane Act, which amendment was voted down by the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. What difference does it make?

Mr. TAFT. I am merely asking if it is not the same as the amendment which the Senate once rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be; but the Senate frequently learns things after it takes a position, and corrects its attitude. I am not certain whether or not the language is the same. I do not think it is very material.

Mr. TAFT. Has the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] any other reason than the one I gave for the fact that there is no penalty or fine imposed in the National Labor Relations Act itself? Before we begin to penalize persons under the Walsh-Healy Act, should we not impose a penalty under the National Labor Relations Act if we think a penalty is justified?

Mr. WALSH. Personally, I feel that the performance of work for the Government ought to be a distinct privilege, granted only to the most reputable employers. I do not think chiselers and irresponsible employers should have the privilege of a Government contract. Government contracts ought to go to those who maintain the best and highest standards of employment, the shortest hours, and the best wages, and who are recognized as dealing with their employees in the most acceptable manner, according to law.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator familiar with the cases in which employers are unable to determine whether they must deal with the American Federation of Labor or the C. I. O., and in which they act at their own risk, without knowing whether or not they are correct, and without being able to find out until the court determines the question?

Mr. WALSH. I cannot conceive of anyone blacklisting a legitimate employer who raises technical questions of law.

Mr. TAFT. That is what the Senator is proposing to do by the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The question the Senator from Ohio raises cannot be raised under this amendment for the simple reason that a dispute between the C. I. O. and the American Federation of Labor would not enter into the question because the employer could be penalized only after the highest court had passed upon the question.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; but an employer may make a contract with the American Federation of Labor, and the C. I. O.

may say, "You should not have made the contract with them; you should have made it with us." When the employer appeals to the Labor Relations Board, the Board may say, as it often has said, "You should have broken your contract with the American Federation of Labor. You should have dealt with the C. I. O." When the employer finally appeals to the court, the court may say "There was some evidence to support the finding of the Labor Relations Board." The court does not find that the Board's decision was right. The court simply finds that there was some evidence to support the finding of the Board; so an employer may find the court telling him that he violated the Labor Act by making a contract with the American Federation of Labor. Courts have so held.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course; but, whether one likes the court or whether he does not, after a finding by the highest Court of the country that a man has violated the law and is guilty, what excuse is there for anyone saying that he may continue as a chiseler and bid on Government contracts?

If I may interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts for just a moment more——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think I can clear up the whole matter. The decision of the court does not put a contractor on the blacklist. The Secretary of Labor has an option, a discretion, after the decision of the court, but she cannot act until there is a decision of the court. In 15,000 Government contracts she has acted only twice, and she has not yet had a court decision.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the name must go on the blacklist automatically under the law unless the Secretary of Labor chooses to make an exemption. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. She has discretion as to whether or not the name shall go on the list.

Mr. TAFT. No; the bill says the list shall contain the names of those persons unless she finds, for some special reason, that there should be an exemption.

Mr. WALSH. "Unless the Secretary of Labor otherwise recommends, no contracts shall be awarded to such persons or firms," and so forth. So she has authority to recommend that the name of a person shall not go on the list because the violation was only a technical one, because it was not a serious one, or for some other reason.

Mr. TAFT. Perhaps it was technical; but the fact is that the name must go on the list, and then no contract may be given to the person unless the Secretary of Labor recommends that he be given special consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to say that recently a manufacturer in this country called my attention to the fact that he had bid upon a Government contract, that he was complying with the law, and that he wanted and could afford to pay good wages; but he said, "My competitor boasts of the fact that he can hire girls for five, six, and seven dollars a week." He said, "I grew up with the men in my factory. My grandfather was in the business, my father was in the business, and I am in the business. I want to pay good wages, and I can afford to do so; but," he said, "I cannot do so when my competitor cuts his wages. I have to cut mine, too." He said, "I am not going to go out and face my men and do what my competitor wants." Should not the decent manufacturers of the country be protected when they want to do the right thing, when they want to pay good wages, instead of letting some chiseler come in and take the contract away from them?

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will let me answer the question——

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my question.

Mr. TAFT. I am not objecting to the provision which says if you do not pay wages as required by the Walsh-Healey Act, you will get no contract.

I am perfectly willing to have that provision remain in the bill. I recognize its justice; but I say the National Labor Relations Act is still so indefinite that no employer can know what it means. He cannot tell when he is interfering; people do not agree on what is interference. The slightest little act may be held to be interference, although the union is an American Federation of Labor union, and absolutely free from the employer's domination. That is what the American Federation of Labor is complaining about.

Mr. WHEELER. But the answer to that statement is that the manufacturer is not going to be thrown out until after the highest Court passes upon the matter and definitely says he has violated the law.

Mr. TAFT. But the highest Court only says there was some evidence on which the Labor Board based their decision. The law does not give the Court the right to determine the preponderance of the evidence. Violation of the National Labor Relations Act is not a crime. The Congress have not made it so, because they have known that the act is so indefinite that it is not a sufficient warning to an employer to say that if he violates the act he shall be penalized by being fined or put in jail.

We have not attached any such provision to the National Labor Relations Act for that reason. Why should we come along now and take a backhanded slap at persons who have not had the benefit of Government contracts, who may have opposed the act in perfectly good faith, who thought they were not violating it at all, who were so advised by the best lawyers, but when they finally get up to the Court, the Court says, "Well, we do not think you were violating the act, but there is some evidence upon which the Labor Board might have found that you were, so we are going to affirm the decision"?

Mr. WHEELER. But all that argument is done away with when the court finally says, "You did violate the law."

Mr. TAFT. The court never says that, as a matter of fact.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; the court does.

Mr. TAFT. No.

Mr. WHEELER. I disagree with the Senator from Ohio. When the court finally finds a manufacturer guilty he knows what the law is, because the court has so found. There is not any of this "thin line" there.

Mr. TAFT. The bill says that even though such a manufacturer immediately complies, even though he does everything he can, for 3 years he cannot get a Government contract.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Senator's pardon. We have given discretion to the Secretary of Labor when manufacturers comply with the act. It seems to me there is not any question that even if they violated the act at first, if they comply with it afterward they ought to be permitted to contract.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I have the floor.

Let me say, in connection with this discussion, that I have already pointed out that there have been only two cases of blacklisting by the Secretary of Labor in the 4 years this law has been in operation. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] informs me that 20,000 complaints have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board, only 6 percent of them have reached the Board for action, and less than 20 cases went to the Supreme Court and were adjudicated by it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Without reference to the parliamentary situation, but having in mind the observations of the Senator from Montana and those of the Senator from Ohio, I have drafted an amendment to be added after the word "occurred", in line 19, page 11, and I should like to read it into the RECORD:

Provided, That such prohibition shall earlier terminate upon a finding by the Secretary of Labor that such contractor has removed the grounds upon which such adjudication was based.

In that particular there will be ground upon which the 3-year prohibition of an opportunity to contract may be removed. When compliance has been had, and reinstatement has occurred, the contractor is again in the good graces of the Government and is eligible to contract with it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not quite understand what the Senator's amendment would accomplish.

Mr. DANAHER. It would accomplish the point of having the Secretary of Labor find that compliance has been had with the requirements of the law, with all the grounds upon which the court adjudicated that the particular contractor was a violator of the law and hence was subjected to the penalties of section 3.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, the court makes an adjudication which is sufficient to put an offender on the blacklist unless the Secretary of Labor, who has the authority, intervenes and can save the manufacturer from going on the blacklist.

Mr. DANAHER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. Once an adjudication has been had the individual automatically goes on the blacklist.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment would take away the discretion of the Secretary of Labor after a court has held that there has been a violation. If the violators claim that they have corrected the situation out of which the lawsuit grew, then automatically they go back on the list.

Mr. DANAHER. Not unless the Secretary of Labor so finds.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, the Senator is tightening up the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator read his amendment again?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the language of the bill, the Secretary of Labor may take all that into consideration, and undoubtedly will do so; but what the Senator does is to compel her or him, whoever it may be, to take certain action after an adjudication of the court holding that a concern had violated the law. The concern might even come in temporarily and say, "We have corrected this situation," and get a contract, and the very next week they might continue the violations out of which the lawsuit grew.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. I point out to the Senator from Kentucky that the way the bill is drawn, there is granted to the Secretary of Labor sole discretion as to whether or not the inhibitions or penalties contained in section 3, lines 13 to 19, shall be removed in the case of any contractor. In other words, if the Secretary of Labor shall refuse to recommend that the individual contractor be again eligible, for a period of 3 years that contractor indeed is debarred.

If we give the Secretary of Labor the opportunity, as a matter of law, to make a finding that the individual has in fact complied by removing the grounds upon which adjudication was predicated, we will then have given opportunity to the contractor to remove the conditions which, after all, we are seeking to remove, and that is why a penalty is inserted. The effort is to coerce action. If we get the action, we will have remedied the situation, and we will again have reinstated the opportunity for the contractor to act.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment pending is the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. DANAHER. I realize that.

Mr. WALSH. And we must understand just what its effect would be. It would remove from section 3 the right to put on the blacklist any violator of the National Labor Relations Act, found to be a violator of that law by the Supreme Court. For the committee, I desire to say that this section was given a great deal of attention and thought.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Permit me to finish, and then I will yield. This section was perhaps given more attention than any other provision in the bill. It was submitted to a great many varying interests for criticism, or for suggestions which would be helpful. We finally agreed—I had supposed unanimously—upon the provisions of the section, and I for one feel that we must stand upon this section, and not modify it or change it by amendments which are proposed without being considered by the committee.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator think the amendment is entirely foreign to the purposes of the Walsh-Healey Act?

Mr. WALSH. I would not say foreign; I would say it places a penalty upon the violation of another labor law, other than the Walsh-Healey Act, but, in my opinion, that labor law is far more important than the Walsh-Healey law.

Mr. TAFT. But the removal of the section which I am seeking to remove would not in any way affect the Walsh-Healey Act; it would remain practically the same as before, would it not?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not also true that the subcommittee which held the hearings on the pending bill, and to which it was referred, never had a meeting, never made a report to the full committee, and never went over the bill section by section?

Mr. WALSH. I know there were several days of hearings, that the bill was reported to the full committee by myself, and I was asked to point out the changes between the bill of last year and the bill of this year.

Mr. TAFT. It was considered by the full committee, but it was never considered by the subcommittee, according to my recollection, nor do I remember that at the meetings of the full committee this particular provision was discussed at any time.

Mr. WALSH. I do not recall, except that the subcommittee was practically unanimous. I do recall, and I call this to the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and also to the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Alabama both being members of the subcommittee, that we talked about the matter and discussed it frequently at several of the meetings. When we were hearing evidence this matter was debated and discussed by witnesses who appeared before the committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not believe this particular section was discussed to any great extent before the committee as a whole. I really do not remember that it was.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator know that it was clearly pointed out that it was much more liberal, not so narrow, and did not contain such limitations as were contained in the section last year? The subcommittee was practically unanimous, and the first time I heard of the Senator from Ohio objecting is today.

Mr. ELLENDER. That might have been done before the subcommittee, but not before the full committee.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the same bill was before the committee last year, and very few changes and very few modifications, practically, were made. This section was drafted for the purpose of breaking down and removing the opposition which appeared last year to a somewhat similar provision. All the committee appeared to be pleased at the modification made from last year's provision in this section. However, it was understood any Member could protest any part of the bill in the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that if the Members of the Senate will refer to page 5 of the committee report, where section 3 is considered and explained, they will find plenty of evidence to show that the section had consideration, as it has been stated it had. There is a full explanation of the section in the committee report. Probably the Senator from Massachusetts would like to read into the RECORD the paragraph on page 5 of the report relating to this section.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be pleased to do that. From page 5 of the report of the committee I read as follows:

> Section 3 modifies the corresponding section in the present act only to the extent that contractors who have violated laws relating to collective bargaining and against whom courts have issued decrees for such violations shall be included among the firms to be placed on the ineligible list. It will be noted that this amendment is somewhat different from the amendment proposed by the Senate last year which placed firms violating any orders of the Labor Relations Board on the ineligible list.

It was made apparent again and again in the hearings that this completely changed the position of the year before, and required a court decree instead of an order by the National Labor Relations Board to put a violator of the law upon the blacklist. I read further:

This amendment was contained in the bill which passed the Senate but encountered such serious opposition in the closing days of the Seventy-fifth Congress in the House that its ultimate passage was blocked. The objection raised at that time, namely, that this provision tended to deprive contractors cited by the National Labor Relations Board of their statutory right to judicial review of the order, has been overcome in the present bill since it places no contractor on the ineligible list until the courts have finally adjudicated any administrative orders. The policy of this amendment cannot be seriously questioned for the present law places the Government in the anomalous position of subsidizing the violators of its own labor laws by entering into profitable contracts with them.

I repeat that:

The policy of this amendment cannot be seriously questioned for the present law—

Which permits them to have Government contracts after violating Government laws—places the Government in the anomalous position of subsidizing the violators of its own labor laws by entering into profitable contracts with them.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut would meet my approval, and I would be perfectly willing to substitute it for the one I have offered. What I am concerned about is that when there is a court decision on a question and the employer immediately conforms, I do not think he ought to be any longer barred. Of course, there are some flagrant violators, but in many cases the employer cannot tell whether or not he is violating the law. If the Senator would be willing to accept that amendment, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I am desirous of accepting any amendment which will give the Secretary of Labor discretionary power to act, after a court decree, in the case of a violation of the Labor Relations Act, when the violation has been of a technical character, and the question has been raised in the court simply for the purpose of clarifying the law.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as the Senator from Connecticut has written out his amendment, he has included the word "permanent," so that it will read that if the Secretary of Labor finds that the employer has permanently cured the defects or the violations, then she will have it within her discretion to award contracts. My own view is that that will be helpful.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the way the language is drawn, the law would be automatic. It may be all right, but it would take away from the Secretary the discretion to decide a matter, provided she should find that the cause of the controversy had been removed. I suggest that if an amendment is to be accepted it ought certainly to provide that the removal shall be permanent, because otherwise an employer might remove the defect for a week and get a contract and go right back to the original practice.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator from Connecticut object if we had the amendment reported?

Mr. TAFT. I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and respectfully ask that the clerk state it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed, on page 11, line 19, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That such prohibition shall earlier terminate upon a finding by the Secretary of Labor that such contractor has permanently removed the grounds upon which such adjudication was based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will state my objection to the amendment. Let us consider a situation involving a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. There is final determination of that fact by the Court. There is the inclusion of the name of the violator on the list. Then there is a correction of that situation by the employer. As a result of that the Secretary of Labor recommends that, despite the fact that his name is on the list, he shall not be deprived of the contract.

The inclusion of that provision in the law may make it mandatory upon the Secretary to make a finding rather than to leave it to her discretion. Then if a week later the contractor starts violating that same provision of the National Labor Relations Act, or violating any other provision of the National Labor Relations Act, the whole procedure can be started again; and it will take a further adjudication by a court before the time comes when the Secretary of Labor may again put such a violator on the list, and withdraw her recommendation that he be given the right to get Government contracts.

That would mean that the whole 3-year period might expire before the procedure could again be gone through and a final adjudication of the court had.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, that could be done under the law as it is now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator from Washington if the National Labor Relations Act does not now carry penalties? If this provision is enacted a violator will be punished twice for doing one thing. If the Labor Relations Act carries its own penalty, and a man who is guilty of having violated the law can be punished under it, why should he be punished under some other act for the same violation?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator well says that the act carries a penalty. The right of injunction exists under the act. The penalty is that violators of the law have to pay the wages during the period of litigation, but it is not a penalty in the ordinary sense of penalty. The Senator from Montana says action can be taken under the law as it now is. The Secretary of Labor has the right to recommend or not to recommend. The Senator from Connecticut pointed out a few minutes ago that the purpose of his amendment was to have a record made, and a finding of fact made by the Secretary of Labor. I think he will concede that the purpose is to enable the bidder to go into court and prevent the Secretary of Labor from stopping him from getting the contract.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator misunderstands the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. All the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut proposes to do is to say that after the court has found that there is a violation, if the Secretary of Labor then finds that the violator has ceased his violation, and has complied with the provisions of the law, then he can be awarded a contract. That is all the Senator's amendment provides.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the bill must go to the House for action, and then probably a conference must be held, to save time at this late hour the amendment might be accepted and the bill passed. If that is acceptable to the Senator from Washington, I shall be pleased to keep his views in mind when the time comes for action in the conference.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to be certain that I understand the situation which now exists. Am I correct in saying that in reality there are two classes of contractors that are affected by the amendment; that is, one class of contractors who apparently in good faith thought they were doing the correct thing, but found out afterward that they had violated the law, and then a second class who perhaps willfully and with some malice aforethought, so to speak, sought a contract for the purpose of chiseling, as the Senator from Massachusetts has frequently said? If there are two classes, if there is the chiseler involved, who violates the law with impunity, and if there is the other man who thought he was acting in good faith, and yet violated the law, then it strikes me there ought to be something in the way of segregation between the two. In other words, both individuals should not receive the same treatment.

Mr. WALSH. Those two classes operate under the public contract law, and those two classes are subjected to the penalties of the law, but it is discretionary with the Secretary of Labor, and it is assumed that she will exercise her authority to punish the malicious and evil group of violators rather than those who commit only a technical violation of the law.

Mr. LUCAS. But does not the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut give the chiseler an opening?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is the difficulty of amendments being hastily drawn in a bill of this kind in the closing hours of a session without being submitted to a committee, but, in view of the fact that the bill will go now to the House, and then to conference, for the sake of having the bill passed tonight, I shall accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, is the bill open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to turn to page 7, and in line 6, after the word "contract", I wish to have added the language which I ask the clerk to read. I send forward an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 7, line 6, after the word "contract", it is proposed to insert "and which shall be not less than the highest minimum wage paid by any bidder for such contract."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, personally I would rejoice at the incorporation of that amendment, but my committee is very strongly opposed to it, and, speaking for them, I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I may say briefly, Mr. President, that the situation which this amendment seeks to cure was made the subject of much debate earlier in the afternoon, and at that time the Senator from Massachusetts asked if I could give my attention to language of a proposed amendment which would cure the difficulty we then discussed. It seems to me that the language sent to the desk will take care of the difficulty, and it will provide that so far as labor costs are concerned, they shall be equal among the bidders who are offering to supply the Government. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 14. The provisions of this act shall not be effective during any period that the United States is engaged in war and the President so declares by proclamation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I personally think that the Secretary of Labor now has that authority, but I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 8. Section 9 is amended by striking out the words "nor shall this act apply to perishables, including dairy, livestock, and nursery products" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nor shall this act apply to dairy products, or to perishables, including livestock and nursery products."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, this amendment was rejected by the committee. The language is: "Nor shall this act apply to dairy products, or to perishables, including livestock and nursery products."

The Public Contracts Act now provides:

SEC. 9. * * * Nor shall this act apply to perishables, including dairy, livestock, and nursery products. * * *

The Secretary of Labor under regulations No. 504, dated September 14, 1936, interpreted this section of the act as follows:

(b) Where the contract relates to perishables, including dairy, livestock, and nursery products ("perishables" covers products subject to decay or spoilage and not products canned, salted, smoked, or otherwise preserved).

I submit that when Congress passed the law back in 1936 it intended that section 9 of the Public Contracts Act should exempt all dairy products. Not one scintilla of evidence can be found anywhere in the legislative record of this measure which warrants the conclusion reached by the Secretary of Labor that section 9 of the act provides an exemption only for "perishable dairy products," or that it was the intention of Congress so to provide. The circumstances under which Congress acted, the reports of committees having the measure in hand, and the testimony before the committees of Congress interpret the effect and scope of the act and make it appear, beyond all doubt, that Congress intended to exempt from operation of the act all dairy products without limitation as to kind, quantity, or quality.

The House Judiciary Committee report on the Walsh-Healey bill, S. 3055, which was transmitted to Congress by Representative HEALEY, contains the following pertinent statement:

Section 9 excludes from the operation of the act articles usually bought in open market—farm, dairy, and nursery products, and transportation and communications contracts.

Any dairy product, be it butter, cheese, whole milk, buttermilk, dry milk, condensed milk, ice cream, or evaporated milk, is, according to the interpretation of the act by the House Judiciary Committee, wholly and completely excluded from operation of the act.

During the debate on this measure in the Senate, Senator AUSTIN took occasion to make the following remarks with regard to the work of the committee having the bill in charge:

A. M. Loomis, representing the American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers, testified:

"* * * When the milk and cream reach the creamery or cheese factory they must be promptly taken care of. They cannot be carried over until the next day, because at this stage deterioration is rapid. * * *"

That argument applies to the making of all kinds of food products which are perishable in their nature, and show beyond any question how utterly futile it is to limit the hours and days in a manufactory of that kind, and undertake to move shifts out of a process such as that and move new shifts into it. * * * (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, August 12, 1935, pp. 12878–12879.)

Obviously it was in the minds of the Senate committee that this act could not be applied to industries dealing with perishable commodities or products subject to rapid spoilage and deterioration. Nor is there the slightest indication of intention to penalize any branch of the dairy industry because its product may reach the ultimate consumer in somewhat more stable form than that of some other branch of the industry.

During the debate on the measure in the House of Representatives, Congressman Greenwood, while explaining some of the salient features of the pending measure, stated:

> It makes certain exemptions. For instance, supplies of materials that should be purchased in the open market, or stock merchandise, in other words, as I understand it, and that nothing to be purchased under $10,000 in amount shall be considered; that agricultural, nursery, dairy, and perishable products shall not be considered subject to the law (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, House, June 18, 1936, p. 10077).

Former Representative Boileau, whose constituents were largely persons engaged in earning their livelihood from the production, processing, and distribution of dairy products, clearly stated what was in the mind of Congress when this act was being debated. Mr. Boileau stated:

> I do not presume the United States buys any farm products that are not processed, except perishables. Perishables are definitely exempted. So are dairy products, livestock, and nursery products. I cannot think of any other farm products that the United States Government buys (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, House, June 18, 1936, p. 10101).

The statements of these gentlemen were not challenged but, on the contrary, were permitted to stand as clear expressions of the undoubted intent of Congress to exempt not only perishable products, in whatever form, but to extend this exemption to include all dairy products as well.

When a manufacturer contracts to supply evaporated milk to the Government, he is able to fulfill his contract only by handling and processing a most perishable basic product—milk. To this extent the evaporated-milk industry differs in no respect from the fluid-milk, ice-cream, cheese, or butter industries, the products of which are recognized by the Secretary of Labor as exempt under the Walsh-Healey Act. Throughout the entire processing of evaporated milk—from the delivery of the raw milk by the farmer to the sterilization of this product in hermetically sealed containers—the most careful, sanitary conditions and care in handling must be employed to prevent loss, spoilage, and deterioration of the basic product. It was obviously the purpose of Congress to exempt such contracts from the purview of the Public Contracts Act, and it is reasonable that such exemption be made.

In May of each year the Navy purchases its yearly supply of evaporated milk. This large contract is filled by the evaporated-milk industry during a season of the year when the cows are fresh, when milk production is at its height, when plants must, of necessity, be operated at peak capacity in order to process the tremendous flow of milk; not only is the operation highly seasonal in character but, because of the extreme perishability of milk, there is ever present the need for prompt, skilled, sanitary handling and continuous, uninterrupted processing from the moment milk commences flowing through the plant until the day's supply is exhausted—quite irrespective of the number of hours of work necessary to complete the task. The very nature of the product and the process will admit of no carry-over of 1 day's supply of milk to another for handling and processing at the whim or leisure of man if loss, spoilage, or deterioration are to be avoided.

The Secretary of Labor has interpreted this language to exclude canned milk. My State is one of the great milk-producing States of the Nation. We have factories which can or condense the milk. In those factories farmer boys or boys from the village are employed. During the seasons of the year when the milk runs high, the law steps in and says "You are limited to 8 hours, boys, to work." Cows do not recognize any 8-hour day. The operators are told, "If you work 1 minute over 8 hours, you must pay time and a half."

I am not speaking for the milk canners. I am speaking for the milk producers of Wisconsin and for the farmers of the country. Senators know that every cent of overhead that is added to the canned or evaporated milk is paid by the farmer. The backs of the farmers are literally being broken now by circumstances over which they have no control. Government has improved their lot. All this regulation burdens the farmer more. Many farmers are receiving only 2 to 2½ cents a quart for their milk. Now it is proposed to add an additional burden. Milk is brought into the factories, which can it. Then the minute a factory tries to sell milk to the Government, if anyone in the factory has worked more than 8 hours, the factory has violated the act. There is no rhyme or reason to this kind of thing.

Is the Congress of the United States afraid of some supergroup or superman? By constantly hampering we do not help. It is time the voice of the farmers of the country was heard in no uncertain terms.

In 1936 the Senate interpreted the language to mean just what I ask, but because the power was delegated to a member of the Cabinet the language was interpreted differently. Congress again delegated its power. Why must Congress keep on delegating its power—shirking the job? The power was delegated to a member of the President's Cabinet to say to the farmers of Wisconsin what they must do. The language of the act has been interpreted unreasonably—without good sense.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In what way do the provisions of the bill compel farmers to comply with the law?

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy the Senator asked that question. Apparently the distinguished Senator was not listening. I said that the minute the product the farmer produces is loaded with an extra burden, the added overhead is charged to the farmer, who pays the bill. Then the Government, through its agencies, continues to foreclose mortgages on farms in Wisconsin and other places. Wisconsin was God's fairyland before a lot of these crackpot notions were put into effect. If you keep on thinking you can help by fool legislation, you will not find the remedy.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator exempt bakeries because the wheat comes from farms?

Mr. WILEY. That is beside the point; and the Senator is begging the question.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator by his amendment is asking that some of the largest industries of the country be exempted. I refer to the industries which can milk and sell it all over the country. The Government buys thousands and thousands of dollars' worth of milk for the Army and Navy.

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is asking that concerns such as Borden and other big concerns be exempted from the provisions of the law. Why should they be exempted?

Mr. WILEY. Because the Congress in 1936 said so. A Cabinet officer said "No." Now the Senator wishes to accept the view of the Cabinet officer rather than the interpretation of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What effect would the Senator's amendment have on the packing institutions which process livestock? Would it apply to them?

Mr. WILEY. Under the interpretation of the Cabinet officer, I do not think it would apply to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of any Cabinet officer's interpretation, which may or may not have been correct, as I listened to the Senator's amendment it seemed to me it would apply to all institutions, not only those manufacturing milk products but packing houses as well.

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator will read the law as it now exists, it says——

Mr. BARKLEY. I am talking about the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WILEY. Very well. Listen to the law which was passed 2 years ago:

> Nor shall this act apply to perishables, including livestock and nursery products.

My amendment says:

Nor shall this act apply to dairy products or to perishables, including livestock and nursery products.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, a live animal is not a perishable thing; and the law would not apply to the live animal. However, it seems to me the amendment would apply to any concern which is manufacturing or processing livestock, regardless of the ruling of any Cabinet member, or regardless of the language which may have been included in some other act. The amendment applies to this particular act.

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator wishes to limit the language of the act as it is, I have no objection. An analagous situation is the canning of peas. Peas keep on growing all night and all day; and if they are not harvested they perish. Food values perish.

Mr. BARKLEY. They do not grow while they are being canned or after they are canned. Other peas may grow, but after the peas are gathered for the market they do not grow.

Mr. WILEY. I realize that that argument is based upon the false premise that we must do something to protect labor. Fair labor and fair capital will take care of themselves in this instance. However, there is one industry which is being crucified by inaction or fool action of government, and that is the dairy industry of the country. I am trying to speak a word for that industry.

I am trying to say that if it is desired to limit the application of the law to milk products and change the language of the law we passed 2 years ago, that is the privilege of Congress. After I offered my amendment, apparently it was shot to pieces on the theory that it would benefit the so-called milk canners. I say it would benefit the farmers. The committee which rejected it will hear from the farmers, and the Senate will hear from the farmers if it shall reject the amendment.

There is much more to be said, but I do not care to discuss the question further.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin explain the difference between his amendment and the pending bill?

Mr. WILEY. Frankly, from my own personal point of view, I do not think there is any difference.

Mr. LUCAS. If there is no difference, what is the idea of the amendment?

Mr. WILEY. Will the Senator permit me to finish my answer?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to.

Mr. WILEY. The amendment is offered because the Secretary of Labor, interpreting the old law, which the Senate had already interpreted to mean just what I say my amendment means, said that it excluded canned milk.

That is the sum and substance of the matter. The committee blindly followed the Secretary of Labor. They took what she said, and not the report and the information given to the committee. They listened to her. That is the trouble with Congress right now. We are "listening to our master's voice." We had better listen to the voice of the people, and then we will "go places."

Mr. LUCAS. We had better listen to the voice of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Senator; and I add we might listen to the voice of the Senator from Illinois. I hope the Senator from Illinois will join me in voting for the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has said there is no difference between his amendment and what is already in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Let us have something in the RECORD. Is the Senator from Wisconsin through?

Mr. WILEY. Just a moment. In order that there may be no misunderstanding—because I was speaking probably facetiously in reply to the Senator from Illinois—I said that to me the language is synonymous; but the Secretary of Labor interpreted the original amendment to mean, as she explained very fully in her report to the committee, that the factories canning milk did not need this concession. I said, "No; not the canning factories, but the farmers do need it." So I have drawn this amendment, and she now says the amendment I have offered means exactly what I want it to say, that it will exclude products such as canned milk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, first of all I desire to say that this amendment reaches only the class of persons processing dairy products who can contract with the Government for over $4,000. Who are that class? They are the canned-milk producers, one of the largest and most prosperous industries in the country. The amendment proposes to remove their employees and the concerns themselves from the exacting provisions of this law.

Every farmer in the country dealing in perishable dairy, livestock, and poultry products is excluded. It is only when the farmer sells his milk, his fruits, his vegetables, or his berries, or his poultry to a factory or to a canning establishment that the law is made applicable.

The regulations of the Department exempt nearly every possible perishable article that can be conceived of or thought of. The list covers several pages. Let me read some of the exceptions and exemptions:

The act does not apply to agricultural or farm products, including those processed for first sale by the original producers.

Contracts entered into by Government agencies for the purchase of raw unprocessed cotton are not subject to the provisions of the act.

When the contractor raises and cans his own fruit or vegetable products the canning by him is exempt from the provisions of the act as an agricultural product processed for first sale by the original producer.

A farmer processes hemp for himself and other farmers and the sale price is divided equally on each lot. If he processes and sells the hemp to the Government as agent for the farmers, the contract is exempt from the act. If the farmers sell their hemp to him for half of the resale price and he sells to the Government on his own account, his contract with the Government will not be a first sale and will be subject to the act.

On pages 18, 19, and 20 there is a list of perishables; and they include almost every article of dairy, livestock, or poultry character.

I am going to conclude by reading what the Secretary of Labor has said about this amendment:

In general, this amendment would appear to open the way for other statutory exemptions, particularly as applied to canned food purchased by the Government. Furthermore, by depriving employees of the milk-canning industry of the protective labor standards afforded by the Public Contracts Act, this class of employees would be deprived of all protection afforded by Federal statutes prescribing minimum labor standards, since such employees are not subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The companies engaged in the condensed-milk industry of necessity operate mechanized factories, and employees working in such factories are industrial employees who should be entitled to work under the same labor standards as employees of other industries when they are engaged in work on Government contracts that are subject to the Public Contracts Act.

In brief, this amendment proposes to lift out of the law all employees who work in dairy-product factories where milk and cream and condensed milk and condensed cream are processed and manufactured; and these are some of the largest purchases and contracts made by the Government.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that on page 6 of the report Fred H. Brown, Comptroller General of the United States, in reporting on this matter, is quoted as saying:

This Office perceives no objection to such amendment.

The average person does not understand the farm business. We have professors who can write books on how to run a farm, but when they get on a farm and attempt to run it that way they starve to death. When we from Washington want to keep on regulating things so that the farmer cannot get anything for his milk we are doing a dastardly thing; and we cannot go ahead and put up the camouflage or smoke screen that this is simply trying to benefit the so-called milk condenseries. That does not work. These condenseries are just like other factories in the small cities and villages. They use local labor; and if we put additional overhead costs on milk, the farmer is the man who pays it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF JUDGMENT FUND OF SHOSHONE TRIBE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on Thursday last the Senate was considering Senate bill 1878, providing for the distribution of the Shoshone judgment fund. During the course of the consideration of the measure the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] addressed the following question to me:

I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether or not any part of the $4,000,000 consists of interest?

In response to that question I said "Yes." There was then further colloquy, and I referred to the interest which was awarded by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court upon the amount of the judgment.

I misunderstood the question of the Senator from Utah, and I desire to have the RECORD made clear upon the point. The Senator from Utah was evidently endeavoring to ascertain whether or not the Court of Claims had included interest in the judgment which was handed down. I misunderstood him to ask whether or not the interest applied to the whole judgment.

The fact is that in allowing the Indians to file their claim Congress permitted them to assert their claim for interest upon the amount due. The claim of the Indians was filed more than 12 years ago, and originated, as I recall, prior to 1880, so that, as a matter of fact, the principal amount of the judgment was $1,581,889.50, and interest in the amount of $2,826,554.07 was allowed.

I desired to have the RECORD corrected in this respect.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Emil J. Adam, Sr., of Mississippi, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Mississippi.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Robert W. Rabb, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Samuel O. Clark, Jr., of Connecticut, to be Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Tax Division of the Department of Justice, vice James W. Morris, resigned.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles Alvin Jones, of Pennsylvania, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, vice J. Warren Davis, retired.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of William J. Storen, of Charleston, S. C., to be collector of customs for customs collection district numbered 16, with headquarters at Charleston, S. C., in place of Charles J. Baker, whose term of office has expired.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Clarence F. Ludwig to be postmaster at Minersville, Pa., in place of J. F. Boran, removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there are no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The Legislative Clerk read the nominations of Dwight True Hunkins and William John Penly to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 18, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 17, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, maker of all things and lover of all men, we lift our grateful hearts to Thee in praise; this new day gives us fresh assurance of Thy fatherly care. We pray Thee to make it blessed with new hopes, new joys, and new visions of life. Thou who art the Good Shepherd, lead us into green pastures and besides still waters. Since our example means so much, may we not do the things which the restraints of a good name forbid. Fulfill in us that blessed beatitude:

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

We pray for Thy gracious blessing upon our President, his associates, and immediate advisers. Oh, gird them with more than human wisdom and with strength greater than their own that those things wisest and best may come to pass. Support us, O Lord, all the day long, and then give us Thy peace. In the holy name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 14, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that, on the following dates, the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On July 11, 1939:

H. R. 2310. An act to provide national flags for the burial of honorably discharged former service men and women.

On July 12, 1939:

H. R. 4674. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near the city of Monterey, Calif.

On July 14, 1939:

H. R. 3541. An act for the relief of John Chastain and Mollie Chastain, his wife; and

H. R. 4497. An act to prescribe rules for the enrollment of Menominee Indian children born to enrolled parents, and for other purposes.

On July 15, 1939:

H. R. 4511. An act to extend to Sgt. Maj. Edwin O. Swift, United States Marine Corps (retired), the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to the retired enlisted men;

H. R. 5346. An act for the relief of Mrs. A. R. Barnard, Charles A. Stephens, Donald W. Prairie, and dependents of Vern A. Needles;

H. R. 5610. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1939, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the Secretary be directed to request the House to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2662) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey an easement in certain lands to the city of New York, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5610. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, pursuant to authority granted him on Friday last, he did, on Saturday, July 15, sign the following bill: H. R. 5610, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Hon. Paul V. McNutt, United States High Commissioner for the Philippine Islands, before the Institute of Public Affairs, at the University of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE HATCH BILL

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert therein an amendment which I propose to offer on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for this brief period to advise the membership that I propose to put in the RECORD today an amendment which I intend to offer to the Hatch bill on Thursday next when that bill comes up for consideration before this body. I do this for the reason that there has been so much misunderstanding with reference to this bill.

In the first place, neither the bill nor my proposed amendment makes any new prohibition against any person making a political contribution not now covered by law except as it relates to those people who receive their salaries from the relief appropriation which we recently passed.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. During the many weeks this bill was under consideration in the Committee on the Judiciary the gentleman had ample time to urge upon the committee the consideration of the amendment he now says he is going to offer. I would like to know why he did not ask the committee to consider this particular amendment during its consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked, and I will gladly tell him why.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to know.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Because I was informed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other members of the Judiciary Committee were conferring with Senator HATCH on this particular matter and that it was being worked out. I understood that an agreement had been reached with Senator HATCH to amend section 9. When the committee reported out the bill, that amendment was not included, and a committee amendment was offered instead, which, in my opinion, would destroy and defeat the purpose of the Hatch bill. That is why I am offering this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman was misinformed. I was not a member of the subcommittee that considered it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It was my understanding the gentleman was one of those who conferred with Senator HATCH, and that as a result of that conference the bill would be reported out in such form that the amendment I propose to offer would have been unnecessary.

Mr. WALTER. Wherever the gentleman received his information, it was incorrect.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The amendment referred to follows:

On page 4, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and on page 5, strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

"(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WHEELER-LEA BILL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a short while ago the Secretary of War sent a powerful statement to the Congress in reference to the so-called Wheeler-Lea bill, which was followed by a similar statement in opposition by the United States Maritime Commission and the National Grange. A letter has been received today directed to the Speaker of the House from the Secretary of Agriculture stating how inimical this bill will be to the farmers of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this very strong letter from the Secretary of Agriculture addressed to the Speaker may be included under an extension of my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a letter from the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LUDLOW addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two short editorials from newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that last week's pages 8869 to 8890, 21½ pages of the RECORD, were used to incorporate a petition in reference to Government ownership of the Federal Reserve banks by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. It seems to me that 21½ pages are an awful lot of space of the RECORD to use for that purpose. How much of the RECORD is the gentleman going to use for this speech?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is a very short proposition. There are just a couple short illustrative articles I want to use with my remarks. Those petitions were from other people, not myself.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman had wanted to conserve space, he could have put that in and used only a half page of the RECORD. He could have thereby saved 20 pages of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in three particulars—one, on the subject of alien sedition laws; two, on the subject of the Bill of Rights, and to include in connection therewith a brief statement of Governor Lehman; and three, on the subject of jurisprudence and to include a statement of Assistant Attorney General Holtzhoff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Honorable J. Edgar Hoover, delivered to the graduating class last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some remarks of the Honorable Frank Murphy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

WAGE-HOUR AMENDMENTS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a report from the Wage-Hour Administrator on the Barden bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] has introduced a bill proposing to amend the wage-hour law, which the newspapers say is sponsored by so-called farm organizations. I have in my hand a report from the Wage-Hour Administrator on that law, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Labor, who is absent today. I am putting this report in the Appendix of the RECORD for the information of the Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, this proposal is a far-reaching one and, in my judgment, goes far beyond anything that may be justified in the name of farming. I hope the Members will read this, because I understand an effort will be made to bring this matter before the House before the Congress adjourns.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address by Postmaster Farley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KIRWAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a very short statement by a Kentucky newspaper regarding the production of power by the T. V. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of about 200 names of organizations that have endorsed a bill which will be taken up for consideration tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two respects; and in one extension, with reference to neutrality, to include an editorial from the News-Telegram, a local paper in Portland, Oreg., and in the other to include a resolution adopted by the Multnomah Civic Club of Portland, Oreg., with reference to the use of industrial alcohol.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

THE REAL-ESTATE SITUATION

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks an excerpt from the Southern California Business Review issued by the University of Southern California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LELAND M. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article written by the distinguished former Representative from Indiana, Mr. Pettengill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from this morning's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me at the sixteenth annual Michigan State Sunday in the George Washington Memorial Chapel at Valley Forge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINZER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the Governor of South Dakota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union. At Mount Rushmore, in the Black Hills of South Dakota, there is being completed the gigantic sculpturing of the figures of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, a project undertaken by Gutzon Borglum under commission from Congress to create the Great American Memorial. There, on the 2d of July, 12,000 people gathered in the spirit of the Fourth of July jointly to commemorate the Nation's one hundred and sixty-third birthday and the fiftieth anniversary of the admission of South Dakota into the Union. The day was marked by the unveiling of the fourth head, that of Theodore Roosevelt, who spent his early days in the Dakotas.

Members of Congress have followed this work with a great deal of interest. There, in the native, massive granite of a mountain, America's four immortals will speak for a million years or more. There at a fraction of the cost of any of our other great American memorials, will be the greatest of them all.

The significance of the ceremonies at Mount Rushmore National Memorial were recognized by Life magazine, this week, when it designated as its "picture of the week" a full-page, nighttime photograph of the four immortals on Mount Rushmore, lighted only by "the rockets' red glare" of fireworks. I hope that all Members of Congress will note the picture which I shall place on the board in the lobby.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the anniversary address given at Mount Rushmore by the Honorable Harlan J. Bushfield, Governor of South Dakota, at the ceremonies July 2, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the propaganda that is being put out by the National Emergency Council in an attempt to get around the O'Mahoney Act with reference to sending out free literature by franked mail.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this post card, which that agency is sending out to the people of this country, be inserted in the RECORD to show how they are getting around this law, contrary to what Congress intended.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask how many pages of the RECORD this will cover?

Mr. RICH. It will not take more than approximately one-sixteenth of a page, but it will show the gentleman from Mississippi what the National Emergency Council is doing contrary to law. We ought to stop franking this kind of mail for that agency. Too much propaganda for the N. E. C.; too much waste printed material; too much Government franking privilege in mail from bureaus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

DEAR SIR: The O'Mahoney amendment (sec. 6 of the 1940 Post Office Department appropriation bill) prohibits Federal agencies from sending through the mail free of postage any "report, periodical, bulletin, pamphlet, list, or other article or document," with certain formal exceptions, unless this service has been requested.

The National Emergency Council now has your name on its mailing list to receive various informational material. In order to conform with the law, it will be necessary to drop your name from our list unless a request is made by you that this material be sent. A return postal card is attached for your use if you want this service continued. Unless the card is returned, we will be forced to drop your name.

THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL.

JOHN L. LEWIS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to the fact—and I do this because the gentleman is such an ardent supporter of the President—that John Lewis is again cracking his whip around the ears of the President demanding that the President take the part of the C. I. O. in a strike to force the packers in the gentleman's city, Chicago, to agree with John Lewis that no one who does not belong to the C. I. O. can work in the packing industry, that all men seeking employment in that industry pay a fee to one of Lewis' unions before going to work. Mme. Perkins is trying the same thing in the Kentucky dispute. She knows very well that the only point in dispute down there is whether or not there shall be a closed shop. She knows they have been negotiating for months on this question, yet she calls upon the operators to meet and agree within 24 hours. That is coercion of the worst kind.

Three times the Supreme Court of the United States has held that when an employer has negotiated in good faith he has done all that the N. L. R. A. requires, that he cannot be required to sign a closed-shop contract nor required to agree to a closed shop. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that when the employer has in good faith bargained and has decided that he will not agree to a closed shop that is the end of the negotiations and he need bargain no longer.

Mme. Perkins knows, as does John L. Lewis, as do the members of the N. L. R. B., that the operators of the mines in Harlan County have said they will not sign a closed-shop contract, that miners in that county have said they do not want to sign up with or join the U. M. W. Nevertheless, seeking to drive the miners into agreeing to join his union and pay dues, trying to force the operators to tell the miners they cannot work until they join the union of Lewis, the Labor Board issues complaint after complaint against the operators. Perkins calls upon them to meet and settle their differences with the union, which can only mean sign on the dotted line.

And Lewis, for the third time, calls upon the President of the United States to command the packers, the mine operators to agree with Lewis in his demands. Three times has Lewis snarled at the President and gotten away with it. Who is Lewis that he should demand that the President carry out his unlawful commands? Neither a political contribution of $470,000 nor one of $1,700,000 ever purchased a President but Lewis acts as though he thought it did.

Let us amend the Wagner Act. Let some New Dealer tell Lewis where to head in, let some good southern Democrat tell Perkins she is not Lewis' hired girl.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is suffering from "Lewisitis." Each day it is his practice to complain about something or other that Mr. Lewis is doing. If it is his purpose to perturb Mr. Lewis or to embarrass the President he certainly is having very little success.

I do not rise to defend Mr. Lewis or to hold a brief for him, but I do want to assure the gentleman from Michigan that the people of Chicago are well able to take care of their own problems. I feel confident that any dispute between the packers and labor will be worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned, and not to the disadvantage of labor.

There are those who have no sympathy with labor's cause. I am not one of those. I emphatically disapprove of daily attacks upon those who are sincerely trying to improve the lot of the worker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has just been said that I am friendly to the President. Let there be no question on that point. I am friendly toward him, and I am entirely in approval of his policies. I see in him the desire and determination to help all the people and to make it possible for them to live. That is stating it very simply, but I can conceive of no higher endeavor, and in all my years of service here I have never known a President of the United States who has tried harder than President Roosevelt has to help all of the people.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 260

Resolved, That SOL BLOOM, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 261

Resolved, That WIRT COURTNEY, of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACT

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SUBSECTION B, SECTION 16, EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1939

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I have just placed in the legislative hopper a resolution intended to correct what I believe was a mistake, made when we enacted the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1939.

I have definitely stated to numerous constituents that I feel the requirement compelling all employees on W. P. A. to work 130 hours per month is fair and reasonable, and I can see no way in which the reduced hourly wages on W. P. A. can affect the wages paid in private employment. In fact, I feel very strongly that there should be a differential between relief wages and wages paid in private industry. We have a duty to provide an adequate subsistence wage, and we have met that duty in the provisions of the emergency relief appropriations of 1939.

However, I am convinced that subsection B of section 16 of the act was enacted by Congress as a result of apparent misinformation. We were told that there were over 900,000 citizens certified and eligible for W. P. A. employment. We were also told that there are approximately 10,000,000 unemployed in this country. It seemed only reasonable to believe that while W. P. A. could provide for approximately 2,000,000 there would be other millions among the unemployed who could be certified for W. P. A. employment. The average American workingman is just, and I am confident that those who have been on W. P. A. for 18 months would willingly step aside to give some other citizen, who might be merely existing on direct relief, an opportunity to secure employment on W. P. A. It appears now, however, at least in my district, that while we have no large waiting list in the city of Hartford, Conn., 1,200 W. P. A. workers will be discharged because of the 18-month continuous employment provision and that there are only about 350 eligible to take their places. In West Hartford there are approximately 50 to be discharged and only 5 eligible for replacement; in my own home town of Wethersfield there are about 20 to be laid off and, so far as I could ascertain, there are none eligible to fill the vacancies. Perhaps in some of the largest cities there are heavy waiting lists, but I do not believe it was the intent of Congress to lay workers off W. P. A. in communities where there are no waiting lists. Such a move would do two things, both undesirable: First, it would place on the local welfare rolls numerous citizens who had been employed on W. P. A.; and, second, particularly in the smaller communities, it would cripple W. P. A. projects which were under way.

This is not a question of yielding to pressure but simply a case of admitting that possibly we made a mistake or were misinformed but are now willing to rectify any mistake. I stand firmly on the position I have taken that no one has a right to strike against the Government—particularly a Government that has spent billions of dollars providing work relief rather than a dole, and I say right here that I believe the money spent to provide work relief was well worth while. Many cities and towns have spent millions providing materials so that skilled workers could continue their trade and not lose their skill through idleness. I realize the session is drawing to a close, but I sincerely hope that the resolution I have introduced can be adopted before adjournment so that unnecessary hardship will not be worked on those who might be discharged from W. P. A. employment, and that added burdens will not be placed on the local relief agencies. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of the legislative program for the day and the special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-six Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 130]

Andrews	Ditter	Jenks, N. H.	Richards

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-three Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives and for other purposes and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6205) and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 1 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (a)), is amended by adding two new paragraphs under the caption 'Clerical Assistance to Senators', as follows:

" 'Ninety-six additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator, in lieu of the assistant clerks now authorized by S. Res. 144, agreed to August 15, 1935, which resolution is hereby repealed as of January 1, 1940.

" 'Each Senator shall have one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum, and in addition thereto each Senator from any State which has a population of three million or more inhabitants shall be entitled, in addition to the one clerical assistant provided for in this paragraph, to one additional clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure "5" insert "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1 makes permanent 96 additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator, and repeals the Senate resolution authorizing same. It also gives each Senator one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum and each Senator from any State which has a population of 3,000,000 or more inhabitants is also given one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum. The proposal to give a research assistant to both the majority and minority leaders of the Senate has been stricken out.

On amendments Nos. 2 and 4 the numbers of the sections are merely changed.

On amendment No. 3, which would permit the office force of a Senator to be carried upon the pay rolls of the Senate for 90 days after the date of the Senator's death, also has been stricken out.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
JOHN J. COCHRAN,
JAMES WOLFENDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on May 16, the House of Representatives by a rather decisive vote, passed a bill to permit an additional clerk for each Member at the rate of $1,500 a year. The measure went to the Senate, and I think it would be a mere repetition for me at this time to state the amendments that the Senate placed on the bill because I went into that thoroughly a few days ago. The matter went to conference, and it now returns with the unanimous report of the conferees, both majority and minority.

Here in brief is what the bill provides at the present time: Each Member of the House is permitted to have one, two, or three clerks at a total of $6,500 annually, that being an increase of $1,500; and that no one clerk shall receive over $3,900 per year. The Senate for several years, in fact, since 1934, have been paying out of their own contingent fund for a clerk to each Senator at the rate of $1,800 a year. In this bill they make that clerkship permanent, and they also give each Senator an additional clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum, and each Senator from a State that has 3,000,000 population or over is given an additional clerk at the same rate per annum. There are 12 States that fall within that category, so that there are 24 extra clerks on that account. The bill, as boiled down, merely gives each Member of the House of Representatives and the Senate an additional clerk at $1,500 per year, plus the 24 extra clerks given to the Senators who come from States having more than 3,000,000 population, at $1,500 per year. The bill goes into effect January 1, 1940, and the adoption of the conference report is imperative at this time, because an appropriation must be secured in the deficiency appropriation bill.

I may say that the conference with the Senate was most cordial and pleasant. I subscribe to the theory that has been in effect here for over a hundred years—that there must be perfect comity in the relationship between the two Houses. That has been repeatedly stated in recent years and was very vigorously stated by a former distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the late Martin B. Madden, of Illinois. The Senate very firmly, but at the same time very courteously, told the House conferees that we had nothing to do with the clerical help that they might desire in their own offices, and I concur in that. At the same time, they realized that when they placed an amendment on the bill to allow a statistician or expert for the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and when they also placed an amendment which would continue on the Senate rolls all the clerks of a deceased or resigned Senator for 90 days after his death or resignation, they were injecting new matter on the pending question, and they very readily agreed to withdraw both of those propositions.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much are the Senators allowed now for clerk hire?

Mr. WARREN. The total I do not recall. I think they had five clerks, and this gives them six.

Mr. KNUTSON. I mean in dollars.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall that. I think it is something around $10,000. Mr. Speaker, that is what the conferees have agreed upon.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. When does the act go into effect?

Mr. WARREN. It will go into effect January 1, 1940.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not a fact that the total amount allowed for the various clerks in the Senate now amounts to about $12,000 for each Senator?

Mr. WARREN. I am not sure about that. The gentleman may be correct.

If there is no further question, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) entitled "An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the trade-agreement program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAGE AND HOUR EXCEPTIONS FOR COUNTRY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain rulings of the Wage and Hour Administrator.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, a week ago today I called the attention of the House to a ruling of the Wage and Hour Administrator which took away the exemption granted by Congress to certain weekly newspapers having a circulation of less than 3,000 subscribers. On Tuesday of last week I conducted a hearing before the Wage and Hour Division and strongly urged that the Administrator's ruling be rescinded. I am now happy to advise the House that the Wage and Hour Administrator has reversed himself, and under date of July 13 issued a new ruling so as to comply with the intent of Congress.

The Administrator's ruling provides for complete exemption from the provisions of the wage and hour law for all weekly and semiweekly newspapers having a circulation of less than 3,000 subscribers, irrespective of the fact that such newspapers may engage in job printing.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding with reference to the ruling of the Administrator which took away the exemption from country weekly newspapers, I quote herewith from opinions handed down by the Administrator under dates of November 1, 1938, and January 30, 1939:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION,
November 1, 1938.

It is the opinion of the General Counsel's office that newspapers are not service establishments within the meaning of section 13 (a) (2).

You will note that section 13 (a) (8) provides an exemption for "any employee employed in connection with the publication of any weekly or semiweekly newspaper with a circulation of less than 3,000, the major part of which circulation is within the county where printed and published." If Congress had intended to exempt newspapers as service establishments, it would not have exempted a particular class of newspapers.

Under date of January 30, 1939, the General Counsel for the Wage and Hour Division ruled as follows:

In my opinion, the exemption provided by section 13 (a) (8) will not apply during any workweek in which a plant is engaged in the production of job or commercial printing for interstate commerce.

The new ruling of the Administrator which reverses his former opinion was announced on July 13, 1939, and is quoted in part as follows:

The Congress must be presumed to have provided this exemption, fully aware of the fact that the publisher of the typical newspaper described in section 13 (a) (8) employs relatively few employees, all of whom are engaged a few days a week in printing and publishing the newspaper, and the balance of the week in other related work, usually job printing. Indeed, the use of the phrase "in connection with," which is found in no other exemption provided by the act, reinforces this presumption and indicates an intent on the part of Congress to grant the exemption to employees engaged in both types of work. In our opinion, therefore, except as hereinafter stated (referring to commercial printing plants), employees employed in connection with the publication of a county weekly or semiweekly newspaper described in section 13 (a) (8) must be considered within the exemption, even though they work on job printing during that part of the week in which they are not engaged in publishing the newspaper, and even though some of the job printing is produced for customers who use the printing in interstate commerce.

Commissioner Andrews has done a fine piece of backtracking in his new ruling. He has tried to make Congress believe that he has always carried out the so-called intent of Congress with respect to his ruling for the small weekly newspapers of the country. However, his former rulings removing the exemption from weekly newspapers and the fact that within the past 2 weeks he has sent his inspectors out in the country to enforce his regulations against weekly newspapers exempted by Congress, plainly shows that he had no intention whatsoever to follow the law or carry out the "intent of Congress" in respect to the exempted newspapers until the proceedings of last week changed his mind.

The new ruling of the Administrator clears up the entire matter, and as long as it remains in effect, weekly and semiweekly newspapers with a circulation of less than 3,000 subscribers, may consider themselves exempt from the provisions of the Wage and Hour law.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many newspapers are affected favorably by the new ruling?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. From eight to ten thousand weekly and semiweekly newspapers in this country.

Mr. KNUTSON. As the publisher of a small weekly paper, I want to say that the gentleman from Minnesota deserves the credit of every publisher affected by this order. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman, but I am glad that we did accomplish something worth while in behalf of the free press of this country. [Applause.]

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar Day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 18, authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been subject to objection for several years. The objections were based upon the report of the Bureau of the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget held that $33,725 was due the Indians. The bill carried $277,966.37. Those interested in the bill have now agreed to accept the Budget figure. As far as I am concerned, if they will accept an amendment which I will offer, and stand by the amendment in conference, I will not object to the consideration of the bill. I do not know how others feel about it, but I am willing to withdraw my objection if those interested agree to accept the Budget figure.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I have talked this matter over with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. Although I think the amount for the Indians is too small, in order to get it straightened out I am now willing to accept the Budget figure in lieu of the amount stated on page 2, line 1, which I presume is the amendment which the gentleman has in mind to offer.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is the amendment, together with a minor amendment, on page 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, as payment in full to the San Carlos Apache Indians, at the rate of $1.25 per acre for 232,320 acres of land ceded by them under the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. 358), less $12,433.63 received by the Indians as royalty under mining permits, the sum of $277,966.37 to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the San Carlos Apache Indians, and to be available for expenditure for the benefit of such Indians: Provided, That none of the funds herein authorized to be appropriated shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, or demands against the San Carlos Apache Indians accruing prior to the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. The lands referred to in the first section of this act are hereby reopened to location and entry under the public land and mineral entry laws of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, beginning in line 4, strike out the word "That" and all of lines 5, 6, and 7 and the words "prior to the approval of this act" in line 8, and insert: "That no part of the amounts authorized in this act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services heretofore or hereafter rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Page 2, line 17, after the figure "2", strike out the word "The" and insert "Upon appropriation and deposit to the credit of the San Carlos Apache Indians of the amount herein authorized the."

Page 2, line 20, after the word "act", strike out "are hereby" and insert "shall be."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Indians", strike out "at the rate of $1.25 per acre", and on page 2, line 1, strike out "$277,966.37" and insert "$33,725."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAPATO SCHOOL DISTRICT, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3824, to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTION 344 OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5911, to amend subsection (h) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. PACE, and Mr. KEAN objected.

PAYMENT OF EXPENSES OF CERTAIN INDIANS ON QUINAIELT RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2654, authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT LIBRARY

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 268, to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was not this bill passed last week?

The SPEAKER. A similar Senate resolution was passed.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that House Joint Resolution 268, to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes, be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO WASHINGTON COUNTY, UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2184, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain property to Washington County, Utah, and for other purposes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 1860 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1116, to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (48 U. S. C. 1460), to permit retired officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard to hold civil office in any Territory of the United States.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth clause of section 1860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (48 U. S. C. 1460), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"Fourth. No person belonging to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard shall be elected to or hold any civil office or appointment in any Territory, except officers and enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Coast Guard on the retired list."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 2, line 2, change the period to a comma, strike out the quotation marks and insert thereafter: "And except officers of the Coast Guard who heretofore have been or hereafter may be appointed as United States commissioners or United States deputy marshals in and for the Territory of Alaska."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE AND THE FOREIGN SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 431)

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval, H. R. 3537, to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States.

This bill opens up a wholly new field of Government medical and dental care for Government servants. Up to the present, with a few minor exceptions, hospitalization and medical and dental care by the Government has been confined to the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard.

I do not believe that the Congress wishes to start the practice of extending such assistance to a large class of civilian representatives and employees. There seems no reason why such facilities should be extended to officers and employees in the Foreign Service within the State Department without including all the other employees within the State Department. If this is done for the State Department, it should logically be done for the employees of other departments.

The estimate that it would cost only $21,000 per annum to extend these facilities to 1,600 officers and employees is absurd. With an average of three dependents for each one of them the total would run to about 6,500 individuals, and the cost for this one branch of the Government alone would be excessive.

Incidentally, to establish such a Government policy would in a short time involve setting up dispensaries and bed facilities in every place in the country where there are many employees of the Government.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 17, 1939.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

SIERRA NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4635, to transfer certain lands from the Sierra National Forest to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES OPERATION OF RAILROADS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4868, to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill wherein it is proposed that the Government buy the equipment of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., which consists of several pieces of moving equipment, busses, horses, tents, and so forth.

This bill would project the Government into the private business of hauling tourists from the entrance of Mount McKinley Park, a distance of about 90 miles, into the interior.

The reason for the introduction of this bill is said to be an effort to correlate train schedules with bus schedules. I am of the frank opinion, however, that the matter could be handled by the terms of the license at the time the Government issues the license. The minority views filed with the committee report point out the fact that the concessionaire has operated over a period of 10 years and has shown some small amount of profit. The passage of this bill would be for the obvious purpose of buying out the concessionaire's equipment and goodwill after the United States has fulfilled its obligations under the terms of the contract. When the contract expires the concessionaire has no goodwill to sell.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5409, to authorize certain officers of the United States Indian Service to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I dislike very much to object to any bill that comes to us from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but this particular piece of legislation comes without any definition of the term "reservation" and would certainly be very questionable in its operation. It proposes in effect to make both Indians and white persons subject to arrest by tribal officers or by junior special officers for violation not merely of law but of any regulation having the force of law anywhere within the outer boundaries of any Indian reservation.

To make these Indians and whites subject to arrest by tribal officers would be to make them subject to trial by courts where they cannot have the benefit of counsel, where they are denied the right to consult an attorney, and where they are denied the right to a trial by jury. It means that citizens would be subject to punishment on the complaint of some tribal officer for the violation not merely of laws, but of regulations supposed to have the force of law. In what it attempts to do it is directly contrary to an opinion rendered by the attorney general of my State.

The bill is protested by the Indians on the ground that it is a violation of the constitutional provision against involuntary servitude.

For these reasons I ask that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from South Dakota certainly has not given a great deal of consideration to this bill. It was considered in some detail and at some length by the Indian Affairs Committee of the House and was reported out unanimously. It is a good bill and I shall object to its going over. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have considered this bill thoroughly. I object to its consideration at this time.

CLAIMS OF YAKIMA TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2390, conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment on any and all claims which the Yakima Indian Tribes may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, as the committee has not seen fit to accept the recommendations of the Attorney General and as there is a minority report on this bill, I object.

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. TABER, and Mr. RICH objected.

OUTBOARD RACING MOTORBOATS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6273, to amend certain sections of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910, the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, the act of Congress approved February 8, 1895, and section 4412 of the Revised Statutes, with respect to boats equipped with detachable motors and other motorboats.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4 and 6 of the act of June 9, 1910 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, secs. 514 and 516), shall not apply to motorboats propelled by outboard motors while competing in any race previously arranged and announced, or if such boats be designed and intended solely for racing, while engaged in such navigation as is incidental to the tuning up of the boats and engines for the race.

SEC. 2. Motorboats as defined by section 1 of the act of June 9, 1910 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, sec. 511), the act of June 7, 1897 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 33, ch. 3), the act of February 8, 1895 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 33, ch. 4), and by section 4412 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 33, ch. 5) shall not be required to carry on board copies of the pilot rules.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to exempt certain motorboats from the operation of sections 4 and 6 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910, and from certain other acts of Congress, and to provide that certain motorboats shall not be required to carry on board copies of the pilot rules."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to exempt certain motorboats from the operation of sections 4 and 6 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910, and from certain other acts of Congress, and to provide that certain motorboats shall not be required to carry on board copies of the pilot rules."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING A RIGHT-OF-WAY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 504, to provide a right-of-way.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant to the Stanolind Pipe Line Co., its successors and/or assigns, an easement for a right-of-way for an oil pipe line over, across, in, and upon the Ellington Field Military Reservation, in the State of Texas: Provided, That such right-of-way shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that the same will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected thereby: Provided further, That all or any part of such right-of-way may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes or for failure to comply with the terms or conditions of any grant hereunder, or for nonuse or for abandonment of rights granted under authority hereof: And provided further, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "hereof", insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASE IN SALARY FOR CARRIERS IN VILLAGE DELIVERY SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2001, for the equalization of letter carriers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was on the calendar previously, I asked that it be passed over without prejudice due to the fact there were objections voiced in a letter from the Post Office Department. Although the committee report shows the amendments to the bill, the report does not indicate what the effect of those amendments actually would be on the bill. After further considering the bill, we find that the cost of the bill has been considerably reduced over the amount estimated by the Post Office Department. That Department had estimated the cost would be pretty close to $500,000. In view of the committee amendments, I understand the cost will be reduced to approximately $150,000 as the maximum cost.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I withdraw any objections I had previously to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 106), is hereby repealed, and all post offices now having village delivery service shall have City Delivery Service instituted in lieu thereof, and such village delivery carriers and substitute village delivery carriers shall receive the compensation paid letter carriers and substitute letter carriers in the City Delivery Service: Provided, That such village delivery carriers and substitute village delivery carriers shall receive the same salary, hours of labor, and other benefits accorded letter carriers and substitute letter carriers employed in the City Delivery Service.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect the first day of the month following its approval.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "(106)", strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, and 11, and lines 1 to 7 on page 2, and insert the following: "is amended to read as follows:

"'That the pay of carriers in the Village Delivery Service, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, shall be from $1,300 to $1,500 per annum. The pay of substitute letter carriers in the Village Delivery Service shall be at the rate of 60 cents per hour.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO ACT ESTABLISHING CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2990, to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] what his objection to this bill is? It does nothing but extend the date. The men in charge of the operations of the Civilian Conservation Corps are very anxious to get this matter settled so that they may go ahead with their plans for next year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand from several Members who have spoken to me that the question of date is highly controversial and there are certain other highly controversial subjects in the bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There was no controversy in the committee. The gentleman from California is here, and I think he will verify my statement that this was a compromise agreed on in committee and that the action of the committee was finally unanimous.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the purpose of section 3 of the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That simply gives them the right to have a seal to put on contracts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It says—

This act shall be immediately effective.

That is the procedure followed in State legislative bodies, but I have never seen that done in the Congress of the United States before.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know that there is any particular purpose in that section. The bill would be effective on the date it is signed anyway and that would not change the situation at all. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am asking that it go over without prejudice because of certain controversial matters involved in the bill. I think they can probably be worked out if we had some debate on the bill. It is a rather important question and an important matter.

Mr. RAMSPECK. We will have to go to the trouble of trying to get a rule for it, which will take a lot of time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is a matter of sufficient importance so that you should get a rule, or at least bring it up under suspension so we can talk about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. MOSER, Mr. TABER, and Mr. RICH objected.

MOTORBOAT ACT, 1939

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6039, to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do so for the purpose of getting information, in this bill an attempt is made to make less stringent the regulations with reference to small motorboats, as I understand.

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. A reading of the bill, however, does not show that anything in particular is being done to remove some of the restrictions against smaller motorboats. I note there is a class A, which covers all small motorboats under 16 feet in length. Each of these boats is required to have lights, life preservers, fire extinguishers, and such other equipment as may be specified. It seems to me that as most of these boats are used during the daytime for fishing purposes and pleasure purposes and are not for hire they should not be required to observe the stringent regulations that apply to other boats.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will pardon me, he will find there has been considerable relief afforded in that respect. I have had an analysis made of this bill and the former motorboat bill, and I find that the smaller motorboats are relieved of many of these burdens. This bill relieves a motorboat under 16 feet in length of the duty of carrying other than the white light at the bow or stern showing all around the horizon. It relieves boats under 15 feet of the statutory requirement of carrying a whistle. There is no requirement for foghorns on motorboats. The bill relieves the outboard motorboats of certain restrictions while competing or tuning up; that is the other bill that passed. It relieves motorboats of the burden of having pilot rules on board. Another very important point is that there is in existing law a provision as to fire extinguishers and that sort of thing, and the requirements of that provision cannot be remitted by the Secretary of Commerce. This bill gives the power to the Secretary of Commerce to remit everything except the negligent operation of boats.

I believe the gentleman will find upon reading the bill that there is a considerable advantage to the protection of the smaller boats.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I wanted to get an explanation of the operation of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the word "motorboat" where used in this act shall include every vessel propelled by machinery and not more than 65 feet in length except tugboats and towboats propelled by steam. The length shall be measured from end to end over the deck, excluding sheer: Provided, That the engine, boiler, or other operating machinery shall be subject to inspection by the local inspectors of steam vessels, and to their approval of the design thereof, on all said motorboats which are more than 40 feet in length and which are propelled by machinery driven by steam.

SEC. 2. Motorboats subject to the provisions of this act shall be divided into four classes, as follows:

Class A. Less than 16 feet in length.

Class 1. Sixteen feet or over and less than 26 feet in length.

Class 2. Twenty-six feet or over and less than 40 feet in length.

Class 3. Forty feet or over and not more than 65 feet in length.

SEC. 3. Every motorboat in all weathers from sunset to sunrise shall carry and exhibit the following lights when under way, and during such time no other lights which may be mistaken for those prescribed shall be exhibited:

(a) Every motorboat of class A shall carry a bright white light, mounted either at the bow or on the stern, so placed as to show all around the horizon.

(b) Every motorboat of class 1 shall carry the following lights:

First. A bright white light aft to show all around the horizon.

Second. A combined lantern in the fore part of the vessel and lower than the white light aft, showing green to starboard and red to port, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on their respective sides.

(c) Every motorboat of classes 2 and 3 shall carry the following lights:

First. A bright white light in the fore part of the vessel as near the stem as practicable, so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 20 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light 10 points on each side of the vessel; namely, from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side.

Second. A bright white light aft to show all around the horizon and higher than the white light forward.

Third. On the starboard side a green light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 10 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the starboard side. On the port side a red light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 10 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the port side. The said side lights shall be fitted with inboard screens of sufficient height so set as to prevent these lights from being seen across the bow.

(d) Motorboats, when propelled by sail and machinery, or by sail alone, shall carry the colored side lights, suitably screened, but not the white lights prescribed by this section, except in the case of motorboats of classes A and 1, which shall carry, ready at hand, a lantern showing a white light which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision.

(e) Every white light prescribed by this section shall be of such character as to be visible at a distance of at least 2 miles. Every colored light prescribed by this section shall be of such character as to be visible at a distance of at least 1 mile. The word "visible" in this act, when applied to lights, shall mean visible on a dark night with clear atmosphere.

SEC. 4. Every motorboat of class 1, 2, or 3 shall be provided with an efficient whistle or other sound-producing mechanical appliance.

SEC. 5. Every motorboat of class 2 or 3 shall be provided with an efficient bell.

SEC. 6. Every motorboat subject to any of the provisions of this act and also all vessels propelled by machinery other than by steam more than 65 feet in length shall carry at least one life preserver, or life belt, or ring buoy, or other device of the sort prescribed by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, for each person on board, so placed as to be readily accessible: Provided, That every such motorboat and every such vessel propelled by machinery other than by steam more than 65 feet in length carrying passengers for hire shall carry so placed as to be readily accessible at least one life preserver of the sort prescribed by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, for each person on board.

SEC. 7. No such motorboat, while carrying passengers for hire, shall be operated or navigated except in charge of a person duly licensed for such service by a local board of inspectors. Whenever any person applies to be licensed as operator of any motorboat carrying passengers for hire, the inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character, and shall carefully examine the applicant as well as the proofs which he presents in support of his claim, and if they are satisfied that his capacity, experience, habits of life, and character are such as to warrant the belief that he can safely be entrusted with the duties and responsibilities of the station for which he makes application, they shall grant him a license authorizing him to discharge such duties on any such motorboat carrying passengers for hire for the term of 5 years. Such license shall be subject to suspension or revocation on the same grounds and in the same manner and with like procedure as is provided in the case of suspension or revocation of licenses of officers under the provisions of section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. III, title 46, sec. 239): Provided, That motorboats shall not be required to carry licensed officers except as required in this act.

SEC. 8. Every motorboat and also every vessel propelled by machinery other than by steam more than 65 feet in length shall be provided with such number, size, and type of fire extinguishers, capable of promptly and effectively extinguishing burning gasoline, as may be prescribed by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, which fire extinguishers shall be at all times kept in condition for immediate and effective use and shall be so placed as to be readily accessible.

SEC. 9. The provisions of sections 4, 5, and 8 of this act shall not apply to motorboats propelled by outboard motors while competing in any race previously arranged and announced or, if such boats be designed and intended solely for racing, while engaged in such navigation as is incidental to the tuning up of the boats and engines for the race.

SEC. 10. Every motorboat and also every vessel propelled by machinery other than by steam more than 65 feet in length shall have the carburetor or carburetors of every engine therein (except outboard motors) using gasoline as fuel, equipped with such efficient flame arrestor, backfire trap, or other similar device as may be prescribed by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That this section shall apply only to such motorboats or vessels, the construction of which or the replacement of the engine or engines of which is commenced subsequent to the passage of this act.

SEC. 11. Every such motorboat and every such vessel, except open boats, using as fuel any liquid of a volatile nature, shall be provided with such means as may be prescribed by regulations of the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce for properly and efficiently ventilating the bilges of the engine and fuel tank compartments so as to remove any explosive or inflammable gases: Provided, That this section shall apply only to such motorboats or vessels the construction or decking over of which is commenced subsequent to the passage of this act.

SEC. 12. Motorboats shall not be required to carry on board copies of the pilot rules.

SEC. 13. No person shall operate any motorboat or any vessel in a reckless or negligent manner so as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person.

SEC. 14. Any person who shall operate any motorboat or any vessel in a reckless or negligent manner so as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof by any court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not exceeding 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 15. Any officer of the United States authorized to enforce the navigation laws of the United States or designated by the Secretary of Commerce, shall have power and authority to swear out process and to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who may commit any act or offense prohibited by section 13, or who may violate any provision of said section: Provided, That no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of some one of the aforesaid officials: Provided further, That whenever an arrest is made under the provisions of this act, the person so arrested shall be brought forthwith before a commissioner, judge, or court of the United States for examination of the offense alleged against him, and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in cases of crimes against the United States.

SEC. 16. If any motorboat or vessel subject to any of the provisions of this act is operated or navigated in violation of this act or any regulation issued thereunder, the owner or operator, either one or both of them, shall, in addition to any other penalty prescribed by law than that contained in section 14 of this act, be liable to a penalty of $100: Provided, That in the case of motorboats or vessels subject to the provisions of this act carrying passengers for hire, a penalty of $200 shall be imposed on the owner or operator, either one or both of them, thereof for any violation of section 6, 7, or 8 of this act or of any regulations pertaining thereto. For any penalty incurred under this section the motorboat or vessel shall be held liable and may be proceeded against by way of libel in the district court of any district in which said motorboat or vessel may be found.

SEC. 17. The board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce shall establish all necessary regulations required to carry out in the most effective manner all of the provisions of this act, and such regulations when approved by the Secretary of Commerce shall have the force of law. The Secretary of Commerce or any officer of the Department of Commerce authorized by the Secretary of Commerce may, upon application therefor, remit or mitigate any fine, penalty, or forfeiture incurred under this act or any regulation thereunder relating to motorboats or vessels, except the penalties provided for in section 14 hereunder. The Secretary of Commerce shall establish such regulations as may be necessary to secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act by any officer of the United States authorized to enforce the navigation laws of the United States or designated by him.

SEC. 18. The proviso contained in the last paragraph of section 2 of the act of May 11, 1918 (40 Stat. 549), and the proviso contained in section 4399 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (48 Stat. 125), are amended by striking out "June 9, 1910," and inserting in lieu thereof the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 19. This act shall take effect on and after 1 year from the date of its approval, and will then repeal the Motor Boat Act of June 9, 1910 (Public, No. 201, 61st Cong.; 36 Stat. 462): Provided, That nothing in this act shall be deemed to alter or amend section 4417a of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 391a), the act of August 26, 1935 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, ch. 7A, secs. 178 and 179), the act of June 20, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 367), or repeal acts of Congress or treaties embodying or revising international rules for preventing collisions at sea.

SEC. 20. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 12, after the word "applicant", insert "orally."

Page 6, line 2, after the word "Act", insert "And provided further, That licenses herein prescribed shall not be required of motorboats engaged in fishing contests previously arranged and announced."

Page 8, line 10, strike out "or designated by the Secretary of Commerce."

Page 10, line 7, strike out "or designated by him."

Page 10, line 8, after "SEC. 18.", strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and insert the following: "The proviso contained in the last paragraph of section 2 of the act of May 11, 1918 (40 Stat. 549), shall apply also with like force and effect to motorboats as defined in this act.

"Motorboats as defined in this act are hereby exempted from the provisions of Revised Statutes 4399, as amended (48 Stat. 125)."

Page 10, line 20, after "SEC. 19", strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 20 to 25; and on page 11, strike out all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive, and insert the following: "This act shall take effect upon its approval as to all of the sections hereof except sections 6, 7, and 8, which sections shall take effect 1 year from the date of said approval, and for a period of 1 year from the date of approval of this act sections 5, 6, and 7 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910 (Public, No. 201, 61st Cong.; 36 Stat. 462), shall continue in full force and effect except that from and after the date of the approval of this act the Secretary of Commerce shall have authority to remit or mitigate all fines or penalties heretofore or hereafter incurred or imposed under sections 5 and 6 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910. Except as hereinabove expressly provided, the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910, above referred to, is repealed upon the approval of this act and as to sections 5, 6, and 7 of said act hereinabove continued the said sections are hereby repealed effective 1 year from the date of approval of this act. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to alter or amend section 4417a of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 391a), the act of August 26, 1935 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, ch. 7A, secs. 178 and 179), the act of June 20, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 376), or repeal acts of Congress or treaties embodying or revising international rules for preventing collisions at sea."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARDEN: On page 12, line 7, insert a new section to be known as section 21, and reading as follows:

"SEC. 21. The provisions of section 210 of title II of the Anti-smuggling Act, approved August 5, 1935, requiring a certificate of award of a number to be kept at all times on board of the vessel to which the number has been awarded shall not apply to any vessel not exceeding 17 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck, excluding sheer, or to any vessel whose design of fittings is such that the carrying of the certificate of award of the number on such vessel would render such certificate imperfect, illegible, or would otherwise tend to destroy its usefulness as a means of ready identification."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 3, line 24, strike out subsection (d) on page 3, lines 24 and 25, and on page 4, lines 1 to 4, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) Motorboats when under sail alone or being towed shall carry the colored side lights, suitably screened, but need not carry the white lights prescribed by this section, except that such motorboats of classes A and 1 shall not be required to carry any of such lights: Provided, That all motorboats shall carry, when under sail alone or being towed, ready at hand, a lantern showing a white light, which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to make a statement on this amendment. I always desire to have amendments such as this considered by the committee, but this came in as a recommendation from the Secretary of the Treasury as late as last Friday for clarification.

Upon examination I found there was confusion about the language and I am going to ask to insert in the RECORD at this point the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury so that the reasons for this amendment may appear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 8, 1939.

Hon. S. O. BLAND,
Chairman, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your letter of May 29, 1939, enclosing a copy of H. R. 6039, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a bill "to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes," and requesting an expression of the views of this Department on the proposed legislation.

This bill has for its purpose the amending of the Motorboat Act of 1910 (36 Stat. 462). The need for such legislation is appreciated by this Department and the change as proposed by H. R. 6039 is deemed both wise and necessary.

You are advised that this Department concurs in the views expressed by the Secretary of Commerce on the proposed legislation and recommends that H. R. 6039 be enacted. However, there is set forth below a suggested amendment to the bill which it is hoped will receive due consideration by your committee, since it is felt that by its adoption a greater measure of protection will be afforded life and property.

Section 3 (d) of the bill appears ambiguous. It would seem that any vessel required to carry the red and green side lights and the white lights when propelled by machinery should also be required to exhibit such lights when propelled by both machinery and sail. The regular white lights could properly be dispensed with when any such vessel is proceeding under sail alone or is being towed, but there should be at hand ready to show a white light to be exhibited in sufficient time to avert possible collision. Therefore, it is suggested that section 3 (d) be amended to read as follows:

"(d) Motorboats when under sail alone or being towed shall carry the colored side lights, suitably screened, but need not carry the white lights, prescribed by this section, except that such motorboats of classes A and 1 shall not be required to carry any of such lights: Provided, That all motorboats shall carry, when under sail alone or being towed, ready at hand, a lantern showing a white light which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision."

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Very truly yours,

STEPHEN B. GIBBONS,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection thereon of the Columbian Fountain in Washington, D. C.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR, 1939

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 278) to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $851,-111.59 for Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939.

Mr. KRAMER, Mr. RICH, Mr. SHAFER of Michigan, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF POLAR EXPLORATION

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 291) authorizing and requesting the President to accept the invitation of the Government of Norway to the Government of the United States to participate in an International Exhibition of Polar Exploration, which will be held at Bergen, Norway, in 1940, and authorizing an appropriation to cover the expenses of such participation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLOOM. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. RICH objected.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1821, to provide for the payment in full of the principal of awards of the special Mexican Claims Commission.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, 1939

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $606,650 for Federal participation in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question. If we objected to the joint resolution for New York, why should we not object to the one for California on the same ground; that is, to give them an opportunity to complete 1 year of operation and see whether or not they receive sufficient money to pay for their fair. If so, they will not have to come here for more money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that the resolution be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BLOOM. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICH, Mr. KRAMER, and Mr. HOOK objected.

MEXICAN CLAIMS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 9, 1923, United States and Mexico.

Mr. FISH and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

VALIDATING CONVEYANCES HERETOFORE MADE BY SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3560) validating a certain conveyance, heretofore made by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain portions of right-of-way in the town of Indio, in the county of Riverside, State of California, acquired under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. L. 489), as amended by the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. L. 356).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the conveyance hereinafter particularly described and heretofore executed by Southern Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain lands or interest therein, in the town of Indio, in the county of Riverside, State of California, and forming a part of the right-of-way of said Southern Pacific Railroad Co., granted by the Government of the United States of America by an act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes" (12 Stat. L. 489), and by said act as amended by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes', approved July 1, 1862" (13 Stat. L. 356), is hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed with the same force and effect as if the land involved therein had been held at the time of such conveyance by the corporations making the same under absolute fee-simple title.

The conveyance, recorded in the office of the county recorder of Riverside County, Calif., in book of official records, which is hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed, is as follows: December 15, 1937: Volume 351, page 351, A. L. Wood, John Clinton Estate, Indio Fire Protection District, C. W. Walker, Jane Walker, and Faye Massey: Provided, That such legalization, validation, and confirmation shall not in any instance diminish said right-of-way to a width less than 50 feet on either side of the center of the main track or tracks of said Southern Pacific Railroad Co. as now established and maintained: Provided further, That nothing herein contained is intended or shall be construed to legalize, validate, or confirm any rights, titles, or interests based upon or arising out of adverse possession, prescription, or abandonment, and not confirmed by conveyance heretofore made by Southern Pacific Railroad Co. and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co.: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out all after the word "by" to and including the parentheses on line 15 and insert in lieu thereof "section 23 of the act of March 3, 1861 (16 Stat. 573)."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill validating a certain conveyance, heretofore made by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain portions of right-of-way in the town of Indio, in the county of Riverside, State of California, acquired under section 23 of the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 573)."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2728) to add certain lands to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. RICH. I reserve the objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, this is for the purpose of acquiring land in order to take in some hot springs for the purpose of saving the medicinal properties of the springs for children who are suffering from the aftermath of spinal meningitis. Originally in the Seventy-fifth Congress $75,000 was asked for this land, and we have had that amount reduced to $45,000. I think the gentleman ought to reconsider this.

Mr. RICH. They are asking $50,000 in the bill, and it is going to cost $2,500 a year to administer it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Forty-five thousand dollars is the purchase price. We worked last session of Congress for 2 months to get that reduction.

Mr. RICH. I have read the report and it states $50,000, and further, it will require $2,500 a year to administer it. We do not know whether the medicinal properties of the springs are going to do what the gentleman thinks they will. I think we ought to make further investigation of the mineral qualities of that water before we spend $2,500 a year to look after it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman is in error, because I talked with six of the outstanding physicians of the State of California and they said beyond any question of doubt that there are very material medicinal qualities in the water.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the passage of this bill result in conflict with the so-called Warm Springs Foundation which has collected millions and millions of dollars?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; in no way.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2418) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act, as amended, to certain lands, so that they may become parts of the Whitman, Malheur, or Umatilla National Forests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would reserve that request. What is the objection to this?

Mr. RICH. We are adding too much to our national forests. In the last 2 or 3 or 4 years we have added so much that the people of this country do not realize what is being done, and when they come to figure what it will cost to administer it they will be astounded. You want 263,000 acres to be added to this proposition. In 3 or 4 years from now when the people settle down they will realize that we cannot continue to increase the size of these forests. We will have to have so many people in the Forest Service that we will wonder where we are going to get the money to operate the thing.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. May I reply for just a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore? Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. The only object of this bill is to put this forest on a continuous cutting or sustained-yield plan. Part of this land is in the public domain and part is under private ownership. The private owners wish to trade their lands for ripe timber within the forest. It is a good trade for the Government because it gives us growing young forests. Then the lumbermen agree to cut only the ripe timber on their own land, the Government takes the land and pays for it in ripe trees on the forest reservation. There is no money involved. If you could see the bare hills today in the forest you would not object to a selective logging plan in an attempt to make these forests perpetual. These three counties and their county courts have all petitioned for this bill. This is most important, and the only object is to make the forests of some value and of continuing value.

Mr. RICH. I will say to you that in the State of Oregon the Federal Government owns more land which they are using as an excuse to get the Government into the logging business. You have practically every other cross section of your State in that category. I think it is time we got the Government out of the logging business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON H. R. 5409

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 5409, to which I objected when called on this calendar, and to include therein a ruling by the attorney general of my State and certain correspondence with Indians and with officials of the Indian Bureau on the proposed legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

H. R. 5409 WILL PRODUCE CONFUSION AND RESENTMENT BY DENIAL OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as I stated earlier this afternoon, I dislike very much to object to any bill reported by my friends, the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. This bill, however, contains provisions which, in my judgment, based on a fairly intimate and personal observation of conditions in the Indian country, would create strife and arouse bitter resentment both among Indians and whites. Any attempt to enforce it would produce confusion and the Congress would be besieged with petitions and delegations seeking its repeal.

The bill, in its present form, would violate fundamental American rights by making American citizens, Indian and white, subject to arrest and trial without benefit of counsel and without the right to trial by jury, and this not for alleged violations of statutory law, but for alleged violation of regulations having the force of law, or what some special tribal officer thought was a regulation having the force of law.

Let the facts speak for themselves.

PROPOSES TO INCLUDE ALL PERSONS

This bill, in section 1, proposes—

That the chief special officer, special officers, junior special officers, and deputy special officers, appointed or deputized by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are empowered to serve warrants and subpenas issued under authority of the United States and to make arrests for any violation of law, or regulation having the force of law, relating to or pertaining to the protection or welfare of Indians, or where Indians or Indian property are involved.

And originally, it proposed that these officers should have the power to make searches and seizures "with or without a warrant." But the Committee on Indian Affairs has properly proposed to strike out that language.

Section 1 concludes with this sentence:

Arrest of all persons for the violation of any regulation or tribal ordinance applying to the conduct of Indians and all other persons on an Indian reservation may be made by the Indian police or the tribal police any place within the outer boundaries of any such Indian reservation.

As originally drawn the bill did not propose to place white persons under the jurisdiction of the Indian tribal officers, but that is proposed in the bill before us as a committee amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize some of the problems that have led to the proposal of this legislation, but I predict with all sincerity that I can that the troubles that have existed prior to this time in the application of law and order codes on the Indian reservations will be small compared with the trouble ahead if this bill should be enacted in this form.

Let me enumerate the specific objections to this legislation.

CONFLICTS WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL'S RULING

First is the question of jurisdiction.

I quote the first and the concluding paragraphs of an official opinion by the present attorney general of South Dakota, the Honorable Leo A. Temmey, given to Hastings Robertson, states attorney of Bennett County, S. Dak. Under date of April 27, 1939, the attorney general writes:

In your letters of March 16 and April 1 you have submitted the following statement of facts: A patent-in-fee Indian residing in Bennett County, S. Dak., was arrested by the officers of the Indian Tribal Court of the Pine Ridge Reservation for an alleged offense committed in Bennett County, S. Dak., on land held by the individual in fee simple. You state that the Indian defendant is part white, a competent Indian, having received his patent-in-fee to his allotment.

There follows, then, a review of the authority under which the Indian Tribal Court was established under the act of June 18, 1934, and the manner in which a code of offenses was adopted pursuant to powers in the constitution and bylaws of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, adopted pursuant to that act.

The Attorney General then reviews several leading cases on the question of jurisdiction in State and Federal courts pertaining to Indians, and concludes with this opinion:

From a reading of all of these decisions it is my opinion that such jurisdiction as the Pine Ridge tribal court may have would not extend beyond the boundaries of the reservation, and further, that such court could not have jurisdiction of offenses committed on such reservations by white people or by patent-in-fee Indians, and that if such court has any jurisdiction at all, the same would only extend to offenses committed by trust patent tribal Indians within the boundaries of the reservation.

Now, it must be apparent, that the intent of the proposed bill is to do exactly what the Attorney General says cannot be done under the established rulings on jurisdiction in Indian affairs.

It is true that the bill says "within the outer boundaries of any such Indian reservation," but it also says "any place" within those boundaries, and that of necessity includes patent-in-fee land within the outer boundaries of the reservation, whatever that may be.

ENTIRE DISTRICT IS WITHIN RESERVATION

Mr. Speaker, if Indian tribal officers may arrest both Indians and whites on patent-in-fee land within the boundaries of a reservation, they may make arrests on any land in the Second Congressional District of South Dakota, for all of the patent-in-fee land in the western half of the State is within the outer boundaries of the Great Sioux Reservation established by the treaty of 1868 and acts of Congress pursuant thereto.

Every foot of patent-in-fee land within the so-called boundaries of diminished reservations has been on exactly the same footing from the standpoint of the jurisdiction of State and Federal courts as the patent-in-fee land outside those reservations.

For the Federal Government now to attempt to assert a jurisdiction for Indian tribal officers over the person and conduct of both Indians and whites, with power of arrest on patent-in-fee land and trial in tribal courts is a violation of the good faith given to Indians who were issued patents-in-fee and to whites when they were permitted to buy that patented land.

If the Federal Government can now assert that jurisdiction for Indian tribal officers on patent-in-fee land within the reservations, tomorrow, it can assert that jurisdiction on every foot of land in the adjoining counties in defiance of State and Federal courts.

Indeed, in principle, it will already have done so, for the patent-in-fee lands within the diminished reservations are in so-called unorganized counties but, by State law, "attached" to specified adjoining counties for judicial purposes. The officials of those adjoining counties are now paid salaries for attending to the duties of their office for these patent-in-fee lands in the attached unorganized counties. The State's attorney and the sheriff have authority there. The county commissioners levy taxes there. The treasurer collects taxes on this patent-in-fee land or sells it at tax sale. This patent-in-fee land is on all fours with patent-in-fee land just over the line in the adjoining organized county to which it is attached. Indeed, these unorganized counties can organize whenever a majority of the voters in them decide to do so.

DENY FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

And what is this jurisdiction that it is proposed to assert? It is to make all Indians and all whites who violate "law, or any regulation having the force of law" subject to arrest by the Indian tribal officers, and to try them in courts where they are denied the right to consult an attorney, and where they are denied the right of trial by jury. Those are the second and third objections to this legislation.

Second. Denial of the right of counsel.

Third. Denial of the right of trial by jury.

Both of these objections are illustrated in the case of Joe Fred Thin Elk, a Sioux Indian on the Rosebud Reservation. His case was brought to my attention by C. F. Manson, State's attorney in Mellette County. I referred the matter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who in turn asked the superintendent of the Rosebud Reservation for a report. I need only quote the final paragraph from the superintendent's letter to reveal the accuracy of the two objections cited:

Under date of February 17, 1939, Supt. C. R. Whitlock reported to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as follows:

Our records do not show any information as to his demand for a trial by jury or that he had been denied the right of an attorney. However, our Law and Order Code does not provide for jury trial.

Furthermore, our Law and Order Code specifically states in section VII, chapter 1, that: "Professional attorneys shall not appear in any proceedings before the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Court unless rules of court have been adopted as set forth in section 4 of this chapter prescribing conditions governing their admission and practice before the court." However, no rules of court have been set up providing for admission of attorneys to practice before the court.

The Commissioner, in transmitting the report to me, under date of April 22, 1939, observed:

Unfortunately, the Law and Order Code, as adopted by the council, makes no provision for trial by jury. Whether in the absence of such a provision a jury trial could be had by Thin Elk, I am not prepared to say, but I do feel that the desirability of specifically recognizing jury trials should be brought to the attention of the tribal council and am asking Superintendent Whitlock to do so.

COMMISSIONER BELIEVES IN THESE RIGHTS

Commissioner Collier has been one of the most ardent of Americans in his fight for civil liberties, and I am sure that, as the paragraph cited shows, he believes in the right of trial by jury; yet, this legislation proposes to extend the jurisdiction of courts that deny that right. This legislation proposes to put all Indians, patent-in-fee or trust, and all whites under the jurisdiction of those courts and make them subject to arrest for alleged violations of regulations prepared in the Department of the Interior, or ordinances adopted by a tribal council, neither of which are generally circulated.

The whites who would be made subject to arrest by tribal officers have not been heard from, of course, because they have not heard of the amendment that is proposed in the committee print. Indians who have heard of the original bill have voiced their protest. Let me quote this paragraph from a petition received by me and signed by 33 members of the Standing Rock Reservation:

It infringes our rights as citizens of the United States (act of June 2, 1924) and is contrary to article XIII, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude except as punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

Their fears on this score are founded upon the unhappy experiences that have taken place in the past few years in the operation of these tribal courts with the law and order codes. Testimony before the Indian Committees of the House and Senate have related instances such as these:

SOME INSTANCES OF PROTEST

American Horse, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses because he received $4.75 in donations to help pay his expenses to Washington to appeal to Congress for help in solving problems on the Pine Ridge Reservation. The allegation was reported to be that he falsely held out the idea that he might secure repeal of the Wheeler-Howard Act as an inducement to get contributions.

Ben Chief, charged with larceny because he had possession of a copy of a letter written in the Commissioner's office to the superintendent, reciting the way money had been handled by a tribal officer. The letter had been given him by an office employee. The tribal officer whose conduct was reviewed was head of the council whose officers made the arrest and sat in judgment.

Another case recited at Senate hearings alleged that one Indian was arrested and held in jail for several days because he disagreed with the tribal officers politically. Several instances were alleged where parties selected for arrest and trial were those who had funds on deposit at the agency who could be made to pay fines in order that money would be put in the tribal treasury.

WHY EXTEND THEIR JURISDICTION?

These cases may or may not be representative. No doubt a large proportion of the arrests made by these officers and a large share of the cases tried in these courts would be upheld if appealed to or tried in regular State or Federal courts, but the measure of justice is not a percentage proposition.

The quality of justice is measured by its freedom from error.

It is true that there is little to distinguish the trust Indian from the patent-in-fee Indian today. Both have attended the same schools. Both have served in the same army. Both are citizens under the act of 1924. The reason that some of the trust Indians are not patent-in-fee Indians is that the present policy is against issuing patents-in-fee; or, that the allotment land was exhausted before the Indian was born; or, that allotments are not being made under present law.

But because the trust Indian is held to be subject to arrest by tribal officers when on trust land, is there any reason to make him subject to arrest anywhere? Or, to place the patent-in-fee Indian under the jurisdiction of courts that deny the right of counsel and the right of trial by jury? Or any reason at all to put whites under the jurisdiction of such courts?

Indeed, would not the better logic be to give the Indian who is a trust Indian by the accident of the place or time of his birth the right to the same justice that extends to whites and Indians on patent-in-fee land?

The record of the tribal courts does not justify the extension of their jurisdiction. The attempt to do so means a conflict with State authorities and increasing confusion, trouble, and resentment in the Indian country.

I have no objection to giving these tribal officers the protection of regular officers proposed in sections 2 and 3 of H. R. 5406, but their jurisdiction should not be extended to patent-in-fee lands, nor should any more persons, white or Indian, be brought under the authority of courts that deny the right of counsel and the right to trial by jury.

CONSENT CALENDAR

OCHOCO NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5404, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act, as amended, to certain lands so that they may become part of the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM JENKINS WORTH MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 283) to establish the Major General William Jenkins Worth Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Maj. Gen. William Jenkins Worth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PORTRAYING THE STORY OF AVIATION

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 123) to provide for the utilization of a part of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray the story of aviation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the completion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol is most desirable both from an artistic and educational standpoint; and

Whereas the remarkable achievements in the field of aviation of citizens of the United States, beginning with Wilbur Wright and Orville Wright, of Ohio, who on December 17, 1903, made the first successful mechanical airplane flight, have been a major contribution to the progress of air transportation; and

Whereas it is most appropriate that the frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol should be completed, in part, with the story of the invention and development by citizens of the United States of the heavier-than-air flying machine: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Joint Committee on the Library is authorized and directed to provide for the utilization of a part of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray the story of aviation in the United States. For that purpose the joint committee shall select a design which appropriately depicts such story, including the portrayal of the all-important achievements of Wilbur Wright and Orville Wright, and shall employ such artists as may demonstrate to the satisfaction of the joint committee their ability to perform the work in a proper manner.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the whereases at the beginning of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF SITE FOR POST-OFFICE BUILDING IN POPLARVILLE, MISS.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1725, relating to the acquisition of the site for the post-office building to be constructed in Poplarville, Miss.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 3741 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 22) and sections 114 and 115 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, secs. 204 and 205) shall not be applicable with respect to any contract or agreement entered into by or on behalf of the United States for the acquisition of any part of the site for the post-office building to be constructed in Poplarville, Miss.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING POSTAL ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4932, to amend the act of March 3, 1879, "Postal Laws and Regulations."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 3, 1879, "Postal Laws and Regulations" (20 Stat. 359, sec. 520, third paragraph), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Paragraph third: It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish books for preservation from periodical publications. (The paper cover of the publication may have a coating or cover of thin transparent sheeting of cellulose derivative or it may be laminated to a film of cellulose derivative.)

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "distinguish", insert the word "printed".

Page 2, line 1, after the word "periodical", strike out the balance of the line, all of lines 2 and 3, and in line — strike out the words "film of cellulose derivative" and insert: "publications: Provided, That publications produced by the stencil, mimeograph, or hectograph process or in imitation of typewriting shall not be regarded as printed within the meaning of this clause: Provided further, That the paper cover of a publication may have a coating or cover of thin transparent sheeting of cellulose derivative or it may be laminated to a film of cellulose derivative."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the act of March 3, 1879, as amended."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KLAMATH INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2738, providing for the disposition of certain Klamath Indian tribal funds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TRANSFER OF ACCUMULATED SICK AND ANNUAL LEAVE TO POSTMASTER APPOINTEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5784, to provide for the conservation and transfer of accumulated sick leave and vacation time due classified civil-service employees who succeed to the position of postmaster, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have somebody explain why such a bill as this should be taken up?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The reason for it is that when a civil-service employee is promoted to the position of postmaster, under the present law he loses his accumulated sick leave. Under existing law an employee has a right to accumulate sick leave up to 60 days as a back-log to take care of a serious illness.

This simply would do justice to those employees who may be fortunate enough to be promoted; it puts them on the same basis with other employees.

Mr. TABER. But it gives those who are appointed postmasters opportunity to take long vacations when they are supposed to be on the job with a moderate vacation each year to look after things. It looks to me as though it would upset the operation of the Post Office Department.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has approved the bill. It does not add anything to what the employees generally have. It simply cures a defect in existing law and applies the same rule to these people that is now applied generally in the Federal service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BESTOWAL OF MEDALS UPON CIVIL EMPLOYEES OF UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1582, to authorize the President to bestow a Meritorious Service Medal upon civil-service officers and employees of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this measure, it proposes to create a bemedaled class in this country. Anyone who has rendered outstanding service involving great physical bravery, or heroism, or performance of service to the Government, or for humanity characterized by exceptional merit and involving a high degree of labor or effort above and beyond the ordinary and usual requirements of his office shall be decorated with this medal.

I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to accept an amendment that would also include bureau chiefs who have a surplus on hand at the end of the fiscal year which they cover back into the Treasury? I think these heroes should be suitably recognized, yet this bill absolutely ignores them. Napoleon understood the value of conferring medals. He said it was cheaper to give a man a medal than it was to raise his pay. Now, if we could have assurance that when a civil employee of the Government had rendered some outstanding service, such as accumulating a surplus at the end of the fiscal year, or perhaps rescuing a stenographer as she was falling into a water cooler, if he would agree that after he had received the medal he would not come before Congress and ask for an increase in pay because of the fact that he belonged to the bemedaled aristocracy, this measure would not be very objectionable.

I can see some merit in this measure, of course. We might be able with the vast army of employees we now have to use a considerable portion of the gold and silver we have stored in Kentucky and at West Point in casting medals.

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. VAN ZANDT demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object until I can ascertain where we are going to get the metal from which to cast the medals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

TERM OF COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6672, to amend the act entitled "An act to create a new division of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas," approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 747).

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the membership to the fact that whenever we create one of these new judgeships we are under the impression that the only monetary outlay involved is the $10,000 a year salary. It was brought out by the Treasury Department on the last appropriation bill, Mr. Speaker, that it costs $110,000 a year for every one of these new judgeships set up. I do not know whether this one is necessary, but I am not going to object to it. I do feel it my duty, however, to call attention to the cost involved in creating new judgeships.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides that the court shall meet in November rather than in December for its term. The judgeship has already been created.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to create a new division of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas, approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 747), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there is hereby created, in addition to those now provided by law, a new division of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas, which shall include the territory now embraced in the counties of Bailey, Borden, Lamb, Floyd, Kent, Motley, Hale, Dickens, Crosby, Lubbock, Scurry, Hockley, Cochran, Yoakum, Terry, Lynn, Garza, Dawson, and Gaines, which shall constitute the Lubbock division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Lubbock division shall be held at Lubbock on the third Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November.

"The clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy, in addition to the places now provided, at Lubbock, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE, WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6167, to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7096, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

TRIAL OF FEDERAL JUDGES ON THE ISSUE OF GOOD BEHAVIOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5939, to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5999, to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LICENSING OF CIVILIAN MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5138, to make unlawful attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States; to require licensing of civilian military organizations; to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army and Navy; to require registration and fingerprinting of aliens; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in certain cases; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 342) relating to section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, the determinations under subsection (c) may be proclaimed at any time prior to September 15, the result of the referendum under subsection (d) may be proclaimed at any time prior to October 10, and the marketing percentage under subsection (b) shall be 100 percent.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 335 (C) OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938 AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 343) to amend section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The farm marketing quota for any farm for any marketing year shall be a number of bushels of wheat equal to the sum of—

"(1) A number of bushels equal to the normal production or the actual production, whichever is the greater, of the farm acreage allotment; and

"(2) A number of bushels equal to the amount, or part thereof, of wheat from any previous crop which the farmer has on hand which, had such amount, or part thereof, been marketed during the preceding marketing year in addition to the wheat actually marketed during such preceding marketing year, could have been marketed without penalty.

"(3) Any farmer who does not market wheat in excess of the normal production or the actual production, whichever is the greater, of the farm acreage allotment shall not be subject to penalty under the provisions of section 339. Any farmer who stores, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, an amount of wheat which is less than the amount subject to penalty, shall be presumed to have marketed the amount of such wheat subject to penalty which is not so stored."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CEMETERY WITHIN CRAB ORCHARD CREEK DAM PROJECT, ILLINOIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5764, to provide for the establishment of a cemetery within the Crab Orchard Creek Dam project, Williamson County, Ill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to the provisions of section 2, the Soil Conservation Service, Department of Agriculture, is authorized and directed to remove the bodies buried within the area of the Crab Orchard Creek Dam project, Williamson County, Ill., from their present location and reinter such bodies in any land within the area of such project which may be available for use as a cemetery. The cemetery so established shall be designated a national cemetery, but shall not be under the supervision of the Department of War.

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 shall not be carried out until after the formation by private interests of a corporation for the operation and maintenance of such cemetery on a nonprofit basis.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "cemetery", strike out the balance of line 9 and all of lines 10 and 11.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2170, to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted., etc., That section 9 of the act approved June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. 538; U. S. C., title 33, sec. 716), is amended to read as follows:

"The Commissioner of Lighthouses is authorized to employ temporarily at the seat of government, draftsmen and engineers for the preparation of plans and specifications for tenders, light vessels, lighthouses, aids to navigation, and other works for the Lighthouse Service that may be authorized or appropriated for by Congress, to be paid from the appropriations applicable to such work."

SEC. 2. Section 4661 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 727) is amended to read as follows:

"No lighthouse beacon, public pier, or landmark shall be built or erected on any site until cession of jurisdiction over the same has been made to the United States: Provided, That cession of jurisdiction shall not be required in the case of sites lying under navigable waters of the United States."

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to acquire by purchase and/or lease the necessary land for locating a lighthouse depot at or in the vicinity of St. Louis, Mo., and he is authorized to erect thereon such wharves, docks, buildings, or other structures as he may determine to be necessary or suitable for the purposes of the lighthouse depot.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to purchase a site for a servicing base for the Lighthouse Service at or in the vicinity of Atlantic City, N. J.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of War is authorized to transfer to the Department of Commerce for lighthouse purposes the tract of land no longer needed for military purposes and comprising the whole of tract No. 2 of the United States Military Reservation on Yerba Buena Island in San Francisco Bay, State of California, containing 26.51 acres, more or less, exclusive of the two parcels, together containing 2.69 acres, now under the control and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, all as shown on map No. 6797–101, entitled "Yerba Buena Island, Calif. (Goat Island) Reservation Map," dated December 1935, revised to May 21, 1938, on file in the office of the Quartermaster General, War Department, Washington, D. C., the specific tract of land to be more fully described by metes and bounds at the time of transfer.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and empowered to lease for a period not to exceed 25 years to the New York Central Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York and other States, its successors and assigns, for railroad-track purposes, that portion of the Rochester Harbor Lighthouse property at Charlotte, N. Y., now occupied by wye track of said railroad company under the terms and provisions of a revocable license granted by the Department of Commerce, which license expires by limitation during 1939, or such modification thereof as may be deemed to be in the public interest. The New York Central Railroad Co. for such use of the property in question shall pay the same yearly rental as stipulated in stated existing revocable license or such yearly rental as may be hereafter determined by the Secretary of Commerce, at his discretion: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall grant or convey or be held to grant or convey to said railroad company, its successors or assigns, during such time as it or they may hold, said land under the lease hereby authorized nor any right or privilege to take or remove any of such land or structures other than the property of the said railroad company: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce may at any time during the said lease period of 25 years, at his discretion, terminate and cancel said lease, in case said company shall fail to comply with the stipulated terms or conditions. It shall also be stipulated in the lease hereby authorized that upon termination or expiration the said railroad company shall promptly remove from the land all of its property and restore the same to the condition when first taken or condition otherwise satisfactory to the Government.

SEC. 7. That so much of sections 1 and 2 of the act approved July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 549), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic of the State of New York, certain portions of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation, Rockland County, N. Y., including certain structures, and for other purposes," as reads in the enacting clause "to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic of the State of New York," and in section 1 "to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park" is hereby amended to read "to convey to the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, a body corporate and politic established by compact between the States of New York and New Jersey, authorized by joint resolution of Congress approved August 19, 1937" (50 Stat. 719), and so much of section 2 as reads "In exchange for the property to be transferred to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park shall transfer title to the United States to" is hereby amended to read "The Secretary of Commerce is also authorized to accept on behalf of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "That" insert the words "the last clause of."

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "The Commissioner of Lighthouses" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and the Commandant of the Coast Guard."

"SEC. 6. Section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic of the State of New York, certain portions of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation, Rockland County, N. Y., including certain appurtenant structures, and for other purposes,' approved July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 549), is amended by striking out 'the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, a body corporate and politic established by compact between the States of New York and New Jersey, authorized by joint resolution of Congress approved August 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 719)'; and section 2 of such act of July 30, 1937, is amended by striking out 'In exchange for the property to be transferred the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park shall transfer title to the United States to' and inserting in lieu thereof 'The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to accept on behalf of the United States.' "

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to improve the efficiency of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO CONVEY AN EASEMENT IN CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6880, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey an easement in certain lands to the city of New York, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York and Mr. RUTHERFORD objected.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point and to include a letter addressed to me July 15, 1939, by Albert S. Bard, vice chairman of the Central Committee of Organizations Opposing the Battery Toll Bridge, which letter is in opposition to the bills H. R. 6880 and S. 2662; also an editorial which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune of yesterday, July 16, in opposition to these two bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH]?

There was no objection.

The matters referred to follow:

CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF ORGANIZATIONS OPPOSING THE BATTERY TOLL BRIDGE,
New York, July 15, 1939.

HON. RALPH E. CHURCH,
Member of Congress, New House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHURCH: I gladly respond to your request for facts concerning the Battery Bridge project. My statement relates principally to the following points:

1. The Federal Government is involved. The matter is not just a local one. National interests are damaged.

2. The bridge is a new proposal. For 10 years it was supposed that we were to have a tunnel and the War Department approved of that.

3. This spring the War Department refused its consent to the first plan for a bridge, holding it to be an obstruction to navigation. The War Department has not yet passed upon the present revised plan. The bridge briefly described.

4. The bridge would irreparably damage little historic Battery Park and the neighborhood, ruining famous views of and in lower Manhattan. Senator WAGNER's assurance that there are no objections to the plan is greatly mistaken. Both the bridge itself and the plan to carve out of the park an additional building site are widely objected to in New York. Senator WAGNER is also mistaken in saying that the city has promised to cede to the Government a new water-front site in the park.

5. The existing situation briefly summarized; also a warning as to well-known local sentiment concerning invasions of New York parks for other than park purposes.

6. Attention is called to this committee's "Open Letter to the President" (a printed pamphlet) stating its position in opposition to the bridge. New York experience demonstrates that this type of bridge always blights the neighborhood and property values. The cost figures put out by the proponents of the bridge omit this factor and are therefore misleading.

7. Financing the bridge. Skepticism concerning earning power as claimed.

8. Other alternatives should be studied.

9. The matter should be turned back to the City Planning Commission. An appeal to Congress not to pass the Wagner-Cullen bill.

The statement below follows the paragraph numbering above.

1. The project affects the Brooklyn Navy Yard and Governors Island in the Upper Bay, and therefore national defense; also the barge office in Manhattan, above which it is proposed to build the bridge; also the Battery Park facade of the customhouse in front of which it is proposed to erect a gigantic sloping ramp wider than Broadway, on stilts. This construction is condemned with practical unanimity by the architects and landscape architects as seriously damaging to the appearance of lower Manhattan, both from the water and the land, and by other experts as ruining the famous and characteristic "gateway" to the city. As one artist says: "This bridge, if built, would destroy the most noble aspect of the island of Manhattan and in doing that destroy also the most noble aspect of the principal entrance to our country." At the point where now projected the bridge is hopelessly incongruous with its site and neighborhood.

The project raises questions of access to and from the Brooklyn Navy Yard; of possible destruction, complete or partial, by act of enemies, external or internal, and of possible obstruction to East River at a critical moment, to say nothing of ordinary obstruction of navigation; of a new argument for the removal of Brooklyn Navy Yard to another location, with the consequent Federal expense; of the undesirability of such a lofty structure upon the edge of the Governors Island military post, overlooking it and almost overhanging it; of the interference of its four lofty towers with military aviation; of the changes in Governors Island piers to avoid the obstruction created by the two large anchorages on the edge of Government land and by the two new towers adjoining, with the consequent expense of such pier changes; and of damage to the barge office and the customhouse, to say nothing of the damage to the Nation's commercial capital and chief seaport.

All these considerations emphasize the fact that the project has important national aspects. It is not just a question of a local bridge.

2. As a public question, the matter goes back only to January 25, 1939, when the proposal was first broached by Commissioner Robert Moses, who is not only park commissioner of New York City but also head of the Triborough Bridge Authority, to which it is proposed to entrust the construction of the bridge and its administration until it is paid for out of its expected (or assumed) tolls.

Prior to January of this year it had been the assumption for 10 years that an East River crossing from the Battery to Brooklyn would be by tunnel, and the War Department had approved of that.

3. The original proposal brought forward in the spring was for two suspension bridges of equal size placed in tandem in a straight line from Battery Park, Manhattan, to Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn, having a combined length of a mile and a quarter and passing across East River 600 feet northeast of Governors Island. This plan located a large double anchorage and two great towers in the middle of the waterway between Manhattan and Brooklyn.

The city was assured by the Triborough Bridge Authority that this would have "no adverse effect upon the navigation of vessels in the East River, the Battery, or Manhattan Channel, Buttermilk Channel (between Governors Island and Brooklyn), or the balance of the waterway in that vicinity."

At a hearing before the local district engineer of the Army, Col. C. L. Hall, on April 25, 1939, this assurance was strenuously combatted by navigational interests, and the War Department later agreed with them and refused its consent to the project, holding that the proposal would be an unreasonable obstruction to navigation.

Thereupon the Triborough Bridge Authority brought forth its present project, which is still pending undetermined before the War Department.

The new plan retains the two suspension bridges, but gives a longer span to the Manhattan member of the pair. The end towers and anchorages are placed approximately where the first plan placed them, but the central anchorages (now 2 instead of 1) and the central towers are moved to points just off Governors Island, some 500 or 600 feet from their original positions, and close to the piers of that military post. The existing piers will accordingly have to be relocated by the Government. The two bridges are now planned in a dog-leg arrangement, with the Manhattan member considerably taller and bigger than its Brooklyn mate. The angle between them comes, of course, at the two central anchorages.

The Triborough Bridge Authority claims that the new plan has led to a withdrawal of all navigational objections. But the organizations represented by this committee have not withdrawn their objections upon that ground, although they admit that the second plan is less objectionable from that point of view than the plan which the War Department rejected. Aesthetically, of course, the dog-leg bridge, with unequal spans and towers, will be uglier than the original design.

4. The main aesthetic objection, however, is the invasion of historic little Battery Park by the huge Manhattan approach to the bridge.

The city of New York at long last is getting rid of the blight of its ugly, darkening, obstructive, and noisy elevated railroads. It has also just cleared out of City Hall Park the old Federal post-office and court building which another planning mistake had placed there. It ought not now perpetrate another mistake by submerging Battery Park under a giant ramp 85 or 90 feet wide, running the whole length of the park on huge, ugly stilts. This argument is more fully developed in the "open letter to the President" referred to in 6 below.

For many, many years New York has resented attempted invasion of her precious and inadequate parks for other than park purposes. This is known to all men. So it is difficult to conceive how in the Senate on July 13 Senator WAGNER, of New York, asking for unanimous approval of the Wagner-Cullen bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the bridge to pass above the Barge Office, could say to his colleagues, "I cannot imagine any objection at all to the bill." If Senator WAGNER is led to believe that there is no objection to the bill he is being badly misinformed, for there is widespread and militant objection on the part of individuals, organizations, and business institutions. And it is doubly inconceivable how he could say what he is recorded as saying in view of the fact that the permission to carry the bridge above the Barge Office, and so through the park, was coupled with a proposal to carve from Battery Park and convey to the Federal Government an additional 105 feet of water-front property for an extension of the Barge Office, to offset the damage the bridge would be to the present Barge Office.

Senator WAGNER, as quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (p. 12612), made still another surprising statement. He told the Senate that the city of New York, in consideration of the granting of the easement to carry the bridge above the barge office, "has agreed to convey to the Federal Government certain properties," meaning the 105 feet of water-front land to be carved out of Battery Park. The fact is very different. So far from the city having made any such agreement, the matter had not even been publicly suggested until the idea was published in the newspapers this week in connection with the Wagner-Cullen bill. Neither the mayor nor the park commissioner has the power to make any such agreement, and there is, furthermore, a serious legal question whether under the charter of the city this particular land is not inalienable.

5. The present situation seems to be as follows:

This proposed bridge cannot be located where now suggested unless the Manhattan end passes above the barge office. The Federal Government will not consent to that easement unless it receives a grant of an additional site to be carved out of Battery Park. There is grave doubt if the city of New York will stand for that. A very large body of public opinion will be opposed to it.

The responsible organizations represented by this committee will certainly regard that plan as an additional offense to the city and to Battery Park, only increasing the original blunder in planning.

6. This committee has prepared a printed pamphlet containing "an open letter to the President and his advisers, requesting further study of the Battery toll-bridge project." This went to the President very recently and copies were sent afterward to all the Senators and Members of Congress.

That pamphlet presents our arguments against the proposed bridge more adequately than I have attempted here to state them. It calls attention to the fact that the press generally is opposed to the project and favors further study as requested by this committee before action is taken.

The pamphlet also refers very briefly to the experience of New York City in connection with the disastrous effect of high-level bridges built through and above developed property. The fact is that in the case of every such bridge in New York the property in the neighborhood of the bridge approaches, and for a considerable area around, has suffered a blight. Bridges with plenty of open space at the bridgeheads—like the George Washington Bridge across the Hudson River—are a different proposition. Tunnels also are different. In the case of the Holland Tunnel (the only local tunnel with portals in developed areas and having as yet a sufficient experience to base a judgment upon), the neighborhoods of the portals have appreciated in value. These facts indicate the close relationship between the amenity of a neighborhood and its money value, and are proof, if any were required, of the blighting effect of high-level viaducts over developed areas.

The Battery Bridge would seriously impair land and building values in lower Manhattan. In making comparison of the costs of bridge and tunnel, respectively, the Triborough Bridge Authority wholly omits this factor and the resulting loss of taxes to the city. In consequence its figures are misleading.

Confessedly the local authorities in charge have made inadequate studies of a highly complicated and difficult matter.

7. The proponents of the bridge claim that it will be a self-sustaining enterprise—paying for itself out of the tolls to be charged. The figures disclosed by them are somewhat sketchy. They have not replied to inquiry concerning the origins and destinations of the traffic they assume; nor concerning their estimate of traffic which will abandon the nearest free bridges to patronize a toll bridge. In one breath they urge the necessity of providing new trucking facilities for the Brooklyn water front, but in the next admit that all such commercial traffic plus an undefined percentage of local passenger vehicles will be only 25 percent of the estimated bridge traffic. In other words, considerably more than 75 percent of the estimated bridge traffic will be passenger vehicles having nothing to do with the commercial interests of the Brooklyn water front.

It is a fact that vehicular ferry service between Manhattan and Brooklyn was recently abandoned because of insufficient patronage, so much of the traffic prefers to use the free bridges.

In spite of this uncertainty as to traffic the bridge proponents proclaim their ability to sell enough bonds either to the Federal Government or its agencies or to private bankers, or both, to finance the bridge. Of course, there is no guaranty by the city that either the Government or the public will get its money back. The city assumes no obligation in that connection. In fact, the city of New York has about exhausted its credit. Like so many other municipalities, debt, depression, emergency taxes, and other commitments have brought the city to its legal and practical limits.

8. Other alternatives to the bridges have been proposed. As yet they have received insufficient study. With time for more consideration still other solutions of the problem might be suggested. The only objection raised, even by Commissioner Moses, to the ideal solution—a tunnel—is the financial problem involved. He claims his bridge would cost only half as much as the tunnel, but omits figures as to indirect damage and cost, as well as public commitment to many details of his proposal.

9. As a result of the above situation the committee I represent has asked that the project be returned to the city planning commission for further study, and that meanwhile the whole matter be held in abeyance.

This also is our appeal to Congress. No emergency exists for precipitate present action. The existing proposal is highly objectionable to large classes of citizens and responsible organizations and should be shelved for the present.

The Merchants Association of New York, the Real Estate Board of New York, the West Side Association of Commerce, the New York Building Congress, the Central Mercantile Association, the Broadway Association, the Fine Arts Federation of New York, with its 17 auxiliary organizations, and their colleagues, the various neighborhood, architectural, civic, and other organizations represented by this central committee of organization opposing the Battery Toll Bridge, are well-known and influential organizations. For their views they respectfully request and are entitled to serious consideration.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT S. BARD, Vice Chairman.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of July 16, 1939]

MR. MOSES IN BATTERY PARK

It appears, from the report of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that Mr. Moses is prepared to give away part of Battery Park to the Treasury Department, so that he can build his bridge to Brooklyn. A vote on this plan—technically, a vote to permit the Treasury to grant an easement on the existing barge office property in return for a piece of park land of equal size immediately adjoining it to the west—is scheduled for tomorrow in the House, and it is reported that unanimous consent for immediate passage will be asked.

We suppose it is all right for Mr. Moses to want park lands; he is the master of parks in this city as well as in the State. He has promised to make Battery Park bigger, better, and more beautiful when his bridge is completed. His plans involve filling in 2 acres of land beyond the present bulkhead line, new planting, grading, and landscaping. But, regardless of Mr. Moses' undoubted abilities as a builder and planner, it would seem that the public might have some right to know what is happening to its property.

The first knowledge of the gift to the Treasury—land which is a part of the old Quigley grant, originally established for the exclusive use of the Whitehall boatmen—came in a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the House committee, in which the offer of the new site for the barge office was "informally represented" by Mr. Moses. Even if the House permits the granting of the easement, the city planning commission and the board of estimate will still have to ratify Mr. Moses' gift, and it is not unlikely that the State legislature will have to be consulted. Perhaps it is just as well that we have heard about it.

Explicitness in public life is a wonderful thing, and no less important than foresight. Mr. Moses certainly has the latter virtue; let us hope he will soon acquire the former.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, referring to this editorial, Mr. Bard points out:

First. That no application has been made to the War Department to fill in the 2 acres of land beyond the present bulkhead line, and so forth.

Second. That navigation interests are opposed to it.

Third. That wholly insufficient money is available, were it advisable.

Fourth. That a promise by Mr. Moses commits no one.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be plenty of opposition to the bill (Consent Calendar No. 354) that justifies objection to its consideration on the Consent Calendar.

MENOMINEE INDIAN DELEGATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4831, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay salaries and expenses of the chairman, secretary, and interpreter of the Menominee General Council, members of the Menominee Advisory Council, and official delegates of the Menominee Tribe.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTANCE OF EASEMENT TO CERTAIN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1558, to provide for the acceptance of an easement with respect to certain lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no very enlightening committee report on this bill, and I do not know what it is about. The committee report merely calls attention to the bill and recommends its passage. Inasmuch as we do not have time to dig into the statutes and read the hearings on this bill, I thing the committee should bear in mind that it is going to be the policy of the official objectors to have these bills go over long enough to find out what they are all about, and I refer to the bills wherein an adequate committee report does not accompany the bill. We have done this several times before, and I hope the Public Lands Committee will not fall into the habit of reporting bills with reports such as this. Just what is this bill about?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Michigan that this bill provides that the State of New Mexico may give to the Federal Government an easement to this project which has already been completed in New Mexico, in order that it can cooperate in the development at that point. It does not involve a cent of additional expense. We are just giving an easement to the Federal Government on the promise of the Government to accept that easement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Public Works Administrator is directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such lands and interests in land as he may deem necessary. How does he hold that land?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There are no other lands to be acquired, as far as I know.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the necessity of section 2 of the bill, then?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I really know of no necessity, unless it is land that the State government has out there that it is able to put in this project; but we are not asking for any appropriation in connection with this matter, and we are not going to ask for any.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This authorizes the Public Works Administrator to take by condemnation lands for use in connection with the maintenance of the dam and reservoir and to carry out the purposes of the act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman it is my understanding that the project is entirely completed. I know of no reason for acquiring any additional lands out there. The Department suggested this measure just as it is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In section 3 of the bill we authorize the use of the W. P. A. money in acquiring land. This is rather unusual. I believe this procedure has been followed in but very rare instances. I understand that it may be justifiable in the case of a works project where a large number of men may be employed, but it is not customary to authorize the W. P. A. to acquire land.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This is a project that is unlike most other projects in that when they are completed they belong to the county or the State, but in this instance the Federal Government is retaining a permanent easement, and that is the reason for this provision.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN RECORDS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6585, to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any agency of the United States Government has in its custody an accumulation of records that are not needed by it in the transaction of its current business and that appear to it to have no permanent value or historical interest, the head of such agency shall submit a written report thereon to the Archivist of the United States in which he shall state the location and describe the character and volume of such records so as to enable the Archivist to identify them. Said report shall be submitted in triplicate and shall be accompanied by samples of the several kinds of records listed therein.

SEC. 2. When used in this act, the word "records" means originals or copies of motion-picture or other photographic records in any form whatsoever, sound recordings, correspondence, papers, indexes, maps, charts, plans, drawings, punch cards, tabulation sheets, pictures, and other kinds of records belonging to the United States Government.

SEC. 3. The Archivist, with the approval of The National Archives Council, shall submit to Congress, at such times as he shall deem expedient, lists of records reported to him in the manner prescribed by section 1 of this act that appear to him to have no permanent value or historical interest to the Federal Government.

SEC. 4. Whenever the Archivist shall submit to Congress, in compliance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, lists of records that appear to him to have no permanent value or historical interest to the Federal Government, it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of the Senate to appoint two Senators who, with the members of the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers of the House of Representatives, shall constitute a joint committee, to which such lists shall be referred, and said joint committee shall meet and examine said lists and submit to the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, a report of such examination and their recommendation.

SEC. 5. If such joint committee report that any of the records described in the lists referred to them are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of the agency by which they were reported to the Archivist and have no permanent value or historical interest to the Federal Government, then it shall be the duty of the head of said agency to dispose of said records by one of the following methods:

(a) By sale, upon the best obtainable terms after due publication of notice inviting proposals therefor;

(b) By causing them to be destroyed;

(c) By transfer (without cost to the United States Government) to any State or dependency of the United States of America or to any appropriate educational institution, library, museum, historical, research, or patriotic organization therein, that has made application to him therefor, through the Archivist of the United States. All moneys derived from the sale of such records shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States by said agency.

If said joint committee shall fail to make a report during any regular or special session of Congress on any list of records that has been submitted to Congress by the Archivist not less than 10 days prior to the adjournment of such session, the Archivist may empower the agency by which such records were reported to him to dispose of them by any of the methods prescribed in this section.

If it shall appear to the Archivist that any records, that bear form number or form letters, or that are of the same specific kind, reported to him in the manner prescribed by section 1 of this act, while Congress is not in session, have no permanent value or historical interest and have the same form numbers or form letters or are of the same specific kind as other records of the same agency previously authorized for disposition by Congress, he may empower said agency to make disposition of said similar records by any of the methods prescribed in this section.

The Archivist shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each session a descriptive list of all records authorized for disposition by him during the preceding recess of Congress.

SEC. 6. When any records of the United States Government have been disposed of in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of this act, the head of the agency making such disposition shall submit a written report thereon to the Archivist of the United States in which he shall describe the character and volume of such records and state when and by what method the disposition thereof was accomplished. If any of the records described in a particular report are shown thereby to have been sold, such report shall give the amount of the purchase price received therefor and the total cost of effecting such sales. Said report shall also give the names and post-office addresses of all institutions, associations, or other organizations to which any records therein described have been transferred.

SEC. 7. The Archivist of the United States shall transmit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a concise summarization of the data contained in the reports filed with him by heads of agencies of the Government during the preceding fiscal year in compliance with the provisions of section 6 of this act.

SEC. 8. Whenever the Archivist shall determine that any records in his custody, or which have been reported to him by any agency under the terms of section 1 of this act, are a continuing menace to human health or life or to property, he shall cause such records to be destroyed immediately at such place and by such method as he shall select: Provided, however, That if said records have been transferred to his custody, he shall report the disposition thereof to the Congress and to the agency from which they were transferred.

SEC. 9. Whenever it shall appear to the Archivist that there are in his custody any records that are without permanent value or historical interest to the Federal Government he shall submit lists thereof to Congress in the manner provided by section 3 of this act: Provided, however, That the Archivist shall not report to Congress, under the provisions of this section, records of any existing agency of the United States without the written consent of the said agency.

SEC. 10. The procedures herein prescribed to be followed are exclusive, and no records of the United States Government may be alienated or destroyed except by authority sought and obtained under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "character" strike out "and volume."

Page 4, line 4, after "records" strike out "that bear form number or form letters, or that are of the same specific kind."

The Committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO FATHER PIERRE GIBAULT

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of the patriot priest Father Pierre Gibault.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2185, to authorize the addition to Glacier National Park, Mont., of certain property acquired for the establishment and operation of a fish hatchery, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, for the present I will have to ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. The right to determine matters with respect to fish hatcheries is in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I understand there is an amendment that is intended to be added to the bill. I do not believe bills with regard to fish hatcheries should be considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and therefore ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I have the amendment prepared, so I object to the bill's being passed over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state the purpose of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The bill is for the purpose of establishing a fish hatchery near Glacier National Park and it is now in the course of construction. An allotment of about $56,000 has already been made by P. W. A. to buy the land and build the hatchery.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it in Montana?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is in Montana. I might add that it is the only available place where fish can be produced for miles around.

Mr. McCORMACK. That satisfies me, as I have the utmost faith in the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I understand that the amendment will place the operation of this fish hatchery in the hands of the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLAND. But whether these fish hatcheries are in public parks or otherwise, in the future I am going to object to the consideration of bills such as these unless they come to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which is charged with jurisdiction over fish hatcheries. I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill at this particular time, but I do not want it to be taken as a precedent in the future.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman. This hatchery is badly needed, and will effect a large saving in restocking with fish the waters in the Glacier National Park, one of Nature's wonderlands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an identical Senate bill, S. 770, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to administer as a part of the Glacier National Park, in the State of Montana, subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto, the lands, or interests in land, within the State of Montana, in township 28 north, range 20 west, Montana meridian, which may be acquired by the United States for the establishment and operation by the National Park Service of a fish hatchery for restocking the waters of the said park.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 1, line 9, strike out "and operation".

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An Act to authorize the addition to Glacier National Park, Mont., of certain property acquired for the establishment of a fish hatchery, and for other purposes."

A House bill (H. R. 2185) was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF THE FISHERIES OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the resolution (H. Res. 162) to provide for an investigation of the fisheries of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Delegate from Alaska what the size of the committee will be that it is intended to send to Alaska, and what it will cost for the expenses of this committee?

Mr. DIMOND. I may say to the gentleman I am not able to answer his question. I presume that matter will be left to the Committee on Accounts when we ask for an allotment to pay the expenses of the committee. This investigating committee will be a subcommittee of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I have not even consulted with the chairman of that committee to determine the number of members the subcommittee will have, and I do not expect he will be able to answer that inquiry now. We intend to take the matter up later with the Committee on Accounts and determine then just how much ought to be expended for this purpose.

The fisheries of Alaska embrace salmon, halibut, herring, cod, crabs, and shrimps, as well as the trout, grayling, whitefish, and other species to be found in the inland waters.

But the salmon fishery is by far the most important. In the year 1938 the total value of the fish packed in Alaska was approximately $45,000,000. This included salmon of the value of approximately $41,000,000. The average number of people employed in all of the Alaska fisheries in any year would be not far from 30,000, and of those approximately 25,000 are employed in the canned-salmon industry. The fisheries of Alaska constitute by far the most important industry of the Territory and the fishery resource with proper conservation ought to continue in perpetuity.

Most of the salmon-packing industry of Alaska is owned by people who reside in the several States. Very little of the ownership is in Alaska. As a consequence most of the profits from the industry do not remain in the Territory but come to the States, where the stockholders of the packing companies reside. The industry is, however, of the utmost importance to Alaska because approximately one-third of the Territorial income is derived from that industry. The livelihood of many thousands of the residents of Alaska entirely depends upon the industry; and it is, therefore, of great consequence both to the people of the United States and those who reside in Alaska that the fisheries of Alaska should be adequately conserved and thus be perpetual, and that there should be a fair and just balance of the economic benefits derived from the fisheries.

By an act passed by Congress in 1924, commonly called the White Act, because one of the bills which resulted in the passage of the act was sponsored by Representative—now Senator—WHITE, of Maine, the Secretary of Commerce was given extremely broad powers in the control of the fisheries of Alaska, including the authority to prescribe the type of gear that might be used in taking fish and the seasons during which the fish could be taken. Though the White Act was amended on several occasions, the general broad powers of the Secretary of Commerce with respect to the fisheries of Alaska were left unimpaired and these powers are now transferred to the Secretary of the Interior.

The principal controversies which have arisen in Alaska concerning fisheries, aside from the offshore fishing of foreign nationals for salmon in the waters adjacent to the coast of Alaska, have been (a) the use of traps which are large frame structures covered with wire net set in the seaways for the catching of salmon; and (b) the taking of large quantities of herring and the conversion of same into oil and meal.

Salmon traps are used in a large part of the Alaska waters where salmon run, but they are not used and are not permitted to be used in one of the most important salmon fishing districts in Alaska, Bristol Bay, and in the waters adjacent thereto. In the Bristol Bay region all salmon are required to be caught by gill net and no trap is permitted to be operated. But in most of the remainder of the salmon-fishing areas of Alaska, traps are permitted to be used by the regulations of the Secretary of Commerce, although numbers of small areas are closed to trap fishing. The fishermen of Alaska, who use seine and gill nets, feel very strongly that the use of traps in the taking of salmon should not be permitted or, in any event, their use should be much more severely restricted than is the case at present. And the fishermen say that to permit any person to operate a trap in the waters of Alaska is to grant a type of special privilege that ought not be permitted and that the fisheries of Alaska ought to be available to all fishermen within such limits as may be required for conservation of the species. Some of the traps set in favored locations take as many as a million salmon in the course of the season. The operators, on the other hand, who use the traps, say that they are an efficient machine and therefore their use should be permitted and, in fact, enlarged and expanded. My own considered judgment is that all salmon traps should be eliminated at the earliest possible date.

Several hundred of the fishermen of Alaska catch salmon by hook and line. They are called trollers. Most of the salmon they take are sold fresh or mild cured and the product usually brings a good price. The trollers generally, as well as the other fishermen, are a valuable part of our citizenry. They are sturdy, independent, and self-reliant. Many of them are married and have children. The trollers claim without exception that the salmon which they take feed upon herring and that the well-nigh unrestricted taking of herring and the conversion of the same into oil and meal is likely to exhaust the salmon that are caught by trolling and thus the trolling part of the salmon industry will be entirely destroyed.

Several bills have been introduced in the House of Representatives for the elimination of salmon traps in Alaska waters and other bills to prohibit the conversion of herring into oil and meal in that part of the Alaska waters where salmon trolling is carried on. Hearings have been had upon some of those bills but it has not been possible to give to the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries a full, true, and complete picture of the existing situation in Alaska concerning the subjects of the proposed legislation. And so the committee has not taken any action on the measures mentioned.

Alaska is so far from Washington and the income of the fishermen is so meager that it is not practicable for the fishermen to appear before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in this city. The only way in which their views can be developed is through having a Congressional committee or subcommittee visit Alaska and take testimony on the ground. The temper of many of the fishermen, particularly with respect to salmon traps, is at the present time extremely bitter. In 1937 and in 1938 the regulations permitted traps to be operated in a number of areas in southeastern Alaska that had theretofore been closed to trap fishing and so had been available to the fishermen who fish with seines and by trolling. The fishermen considered that action to be an outrage upon them as tending to deprive them of their livelihood, an opinion with which I wholly agree. Thus to deprive the fishermen of their means of earning a living is just cause for their resentment and anger.

While, as before stated, the Secretary of the Interior has almost full control over the mode and manner of fishing in Alaskan waters and therefore undoubtedly has it within his power to prohibit the use of all fish traps in those waters, the question is really one of economic policy and therefore ought to be determined by Congress and not by an administrative officer. The same principle holds true with respect to the taking of herring and the conversion of the same into oil and meal. The only way in which the facts can be adequately developed is through an investigation or inquiry held on the ground by a committee or a subcommittee of Congress.

At the recent session of the Alaska Territorial Legislature held at the capital of the Territory, Juneau, Alaska, a resolution, called House Concurrent Resolution No. 1, was unanimously adopted by both houses requesting an investigation of the Alaska fisheries by a committee of Congress. That resolution petitions Congress to create and appoint a congressional committee for the investigation of the Alaska fisheries.

The resolution further provided that a committee of the Alaska Legislature, composed of five members from the house and senate, be selected by the members of the house and senate in joint session for the purpose of facilitating and assisting the congressional investigation. The members so selected are Senator Henry Roden, Senator J. S. Hofman (now deceased), and Representatives A. P. Walker, James V. Davis, and Harvey J. Smith.

After this resolution was adopted, the Alaska Legislature appropriated $10,000 to defray the expenses of the legislative committee which was so selected by the legislature itself to facilitate and assist in the congressional investigation. The Alaska Legislature thus expressed not only its intense interest in having a congressional investigation but has actually appropriated $10,000 in order to assist in and facilitate that investigation.

The fishermen of Alaska generally are eagerly looking forward to having the investigation made by a disinterested and impartial committee of Congress and I have received numerous telegrams and letters from fishermen and from fishermen's organizations in Alaska asking of the progress of House Resolution 162 and urgently requesting that the speediest possible action be taken thereon and the investigation be carried forward at an early date.

What is proposed is definitely not a junket. The work involved in making the investigation will be laborious and some of it unpleasant. It will be necessary to visit a number of the fishing districts of Alaska, following a coastline of more than 1,000 miles. While some conditions are practically the same in all districts, in other respects conditions in one district differ widely from those to be found in another, and, therefore, it is highly advisable that hearings be held at the centers of the more important fishing areas or regions.

The investigation proposed, if properly carried out and conducted as it doubtless will be, is bound to result in direct financial benefit to the people of the United States and of Alaska because Congress, thus more intelligently informed and with a wider knowledge of the conditions and circumstances existing with respect to the fisheries of Alaska, will be able the more surely to preserve and protect the fisheries of the Territory and by general laws provide fair opportunities to all to share in the great natural wealth of Alaska which is embraced in the fisheries.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. This resolution authorizes an investigation by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries or a subcommittee. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries approved this investigation because many times matters pertaining to fisheries have come before the committee that have involved considerable opposition. The feeling on the part of the people of Alaska is that a committee of the Congress should come up there and personally study the problem.

Mr. RICH. There is only one point about which I wanted information, and the gentleman is the proper one to answer my question. When we establish these committees sometimes they want a committee of 10 or 12 members to make the investigation. This turns it into pretty much of a joy ride. I thought if the gentleman who is chairman of the committee would say that he wants to limit the membership on the committee to three members it might be a good business proposition.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Ordinarily I would object to a resolution of this kind being considered by unanimous consent; but I want to tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we authorized the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to make an investigation of this character in another place and we gave them $10,000, and I may say, to the credit of the chairman of the committee, Mr. BLAND, of Virginia, that they performed an excellent job and spent only $500, returning $9,500 to the contingent fund, which is a record.

Mr. RICH. And I am sure that when the chairman of the committee states that he will have a committee of a limited number, that will not mean that there will be a lot of members on the committee to have a joy ride. I know the gentleman will do exactly what he states and will keep down the expense and we are pleased to know that he is going to limit the membership on this committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. I repeat, $500 is all the gentleman spent in the other instance when he could have spent $10,000. We certainly can be assured very little will be spent in this investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 162

Resolved, That the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the fisheries of Alaska with special reference to (a) the use of traps in the catching and taking of salmon in the waters of Alaska, whether or not the use of traps should be prohibited for that purpose, and if prohibited the mode and manner and time thereof; (b) the advisability of maintaining or changing the season prescribed at the present time for the catching and taking of salmon in the several fishing areas or region in Alaska; (c) the effect of fishing for and taking of herring, as at present operated, upon the salmon fishery and particularly that part carried on by trolling, and whether or not the taking of herring for conversion into oil and meal in any part of Alaska should be further restricted or entirely prohibited; (d) the offshore fishing by foreign nationals for both crabs and salmon; and (e) any other matters concerning the fisheries of Alaska which the committee or the subcommittee may think it desirable to investigate with a view to the conservation and preservation of the fishery and a reasonable development of the Alaska fishing industry.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the Territory of Alaska and the United States, whether the House is sitting or has recessed or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or subcommittee, or having been required to produce necessary books or papers or documents or vouchers by authority of said committee or subcommittee, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the study and investigation heretofore authorized, or who fails to produce such books or papers or documents or vouchers as required by subpenas, shall be held to the penalties provided in section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations for the enactment of desirable or necessary legislation.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, insert before the word "an" the figure "1" in parentheses.

Page 2, line 10, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "(2) to make such inquiry as said House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof may consider in relation to the merchant marine in Alaska; and (3) such inquiry as said committee or said subcommittee may consider important or pertinent to the merchant marine or fisheries of the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR APPLICATION OF BENEFITS UNDER ADJUSTED COMPENSATION ACT

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5450, to extend the time within which applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, may be filed.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of this bill the necessity for the passage of this legislation at the present time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for its passage at the present time is that the law will expire on January 2, 1940, and unless we extend the expiration date in this session, then the rights of between 143,000 and 150,000 veterans and their dependents will be taken away from them. Therefore it is absolutely essential, if we intend to extend the expiration date, that this should be done now.

Mr. COSTELLO. This pertains only to their application for World War adjustment compensation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Which is something the veterans earned as a result of their services during the World War.

Mr. McCORMACK. This relates to adjusted-service-compensation certificates.

Mr. COSTELLO. Does not the gentleman feel that the date should be eliminated entirely if we are going to extend these benefits?

Mr. McCORMACK. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, and, as far as I am concerned, when the compensation law was first passed, you will recall there was a time limit, and then the Congress extended it and then eliminated the time limit. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but in order to avoid any difficulties, in view of the lateness of the present session, the bill I introduced extended it 10 years and we compromised on 5 years. I am fearful that if there is no time limit it might interfere with its passage during the remaining days of this session. I am in complete agreement with the gentleman from California that there should be no time limit, but I am fearful if that is put in now it might tend to delay the passage of the measure.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the organized veterans' groups are heartily in favor of this amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. All veterans' organizations appeared before the subcommittee and they are absolutely in favor of this bill. I am pleased to hear the observation of my friend from California [Mr. COSTELLO], because I am in absolute agreement with him that the time limit should in the future be completely wiped out.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2, 3, and 4 of Public Law No. 312, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 23, 1935, are hereby amended by striking out "January 2, 1940" wherever it appears in such sections and inserting in lieu thereof "January 2, 1950."

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7, strike out "1950" and insert "1945."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JUDGMENT FUND OF SHOSHONE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5377) to provide for the distribution of the judgment fund of the Shoshone Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the bill. If it is accepted, I will not object to the consideration of the measure. I talked with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON] this morning and he was of the opinion all the amendments suggested had been accepted. I notice, however, in looking through the report, that all of the amendments recommended by the Department have not been accepted.

It seems to me it might be beneficial in the future if I have something to say about this case. Here is a situation where we amended the original Jurisdictional Act, something I have been contending we should never do, taking away from the Government the right to place its defense properly before the Court of Claims. The result was a judgment in a few weeks against the Government of over $4,000,000, and approximately $2,800,000 of that was interest, dating back about 50 years. The taxpayers are now suffering as a result of the passage of the resolution amending the jurisdictional law, because the millions to pay the claim came out of the Treasury. I would like to see the case where some citizen of this country was awarded, in a private suit, interest on the principal dating back nearly 50 years. You just cannot find one, but the Congress made it possible for these Indians to recover interest that far back by changing the original jurisdictional law. Now they are back here to dispose of the money, and the Bureau of the Budget makes certain suggestions with reference to some amendments, one amendment being that the cost of the Federal administration shall come out of this fund. Why should it not come out of that amount? Why should it come out of the Treasury of the United States?

My amendment is the one suggested by the Bureau of the Budget which the committee did not accept.

I have repeatedly called this case a Treasury raid, and I repeat it today. There is another bill on the calendar in which the same situation exists, the Klamath case, where the committee did not accept the amendments offered by the Department. The amount in the Klamath case is about the same. The money was appropriated to pay these two claims in the last deficiency appropriation bill passed in the last Congress, and it is in the Treasury of the United States. The attorneys have already received theirs, and I placed their names in the RECORD, the amount being about $800,000. Quite a nice fee, especially when the Government was required to furnish all the evidence. They are gone with theirs, and the Indians may just as well get their money, now that it has been appropriated. Now I insist that the amendment of the Bureau of the Budget be added, and if the gentleman wants to accept it, well and good. The amendment I refer to is on page 13 of the bill, line 3, to strike out the words "to defray the cost of Federal administration over the Shoshone Tribe except as herein authorized."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to offer that amendment to the Senate bill, which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON] will ask to have substituted for the House bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming accept that amendment?

Mr. HORTON. Yes; that is exactly the amendment already agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Very well, if you agree to accept that amendment and insist that the Senate accept it, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Let me express the hope these two bills will be a lesson to the Congress and that we will not pass any more resolutions taking away from the Government the right to properly defend such a suit in the Court of Claims. Nearly $10,000,000 is a lot of money to pay for a mistake, but that is just what we did in the two cases on the calendar today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 1878 for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, with the advice and consent of the business council of the Shoshone Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, to prepare a roll showing the members of said tribe living on the date of the approval of this act, and such roll shall form the basis for the distribution of the judgment fund of said tribe created as the result of the passage of the act of June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1114–1156), and accrued interest thereon.

SEC. 2. That there shall be credited on the books of the Office of Indian Affairs the sum of $2,450 to each member of said tribe whose name appears on the roll provided for in section 1 hereof; and out of such sum so credited the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make available immediately to each individual member of the tribe the sum of $100; and, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the sum of $1,350 to each adult and the sum of $500 to each minor for the following purposes: Purchase of land, improvement of lands to be acquired or already held by the Indian, for the erection and improvement of suitable homes, the purchase of building material, farming equipment, livestock, feed, food, seed, grain, tools, machinery, implements, household goods, bedding, clothing, and any other equipment or supplies necessary to enable the Indians to fit themselves for or to engage in farming, livestock, industry, or such other pursuits or vocations, including education, as will enable them to become self-supporting: Provided, however, That the funds of the aged, infirm, decrepit, and incapacitated members may be used for their proper maintenance and support in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The remainder of the share of each adult individual Indian, including accrued interest, shall be made available under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the remainder of the share of each minor Indian shall, with accrued interest, be held intact until such Indian reaches the age of 18 years, when it shall be available under the same conditions as herein provided for adults. As herein used the term "adult" shall include the members of the tribe 18 years of age or over, and the term "minor" shall include all members less than 18 years of age. On the death of any enrolled member, adult or minor, the sum on deposit to his credit shall be available for expenditure for the benefit of his heirs for the purposes herein authorized.

SEC. 3. (a) Not to exceed $1,000,000 of said judgment fund, or interest thereon, shall be available for expenditure upon the request of the tribe and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of lands in the manner prescribed in section 6 of this act.

(b) The sum of $125,000 of said judgment fund, or interest thereon, shall, at the request of the tribe and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be set aside as a loan fund for making loans to individual members, or groups of members, of said tribe under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) The remainder of said judgment fund, including interest thereon, after making the segregation provided for in section 2, and after setting aside the respective amounts authorized by this section, shall be available for appropriation, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, and with the consent of the tribe, for purposes of benefit to the tribe, including the establishment and administration of productive enterprises for the benefit of said tribe, and any income derived from such enterprises shall be credited to the Shoshone tribal judgment fund: Provided, That should such enterprises also benefit the Arapaho Tribe repayment proportionate to the benefit of the Arapaho Tribe shall be made into the Shoshone judgment fund by the Arapaho Tribe out of such tribal income as the Arapaho Tribe may enjoy.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish land-use districts within the diminished and ceded portions of the Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo., and, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to effect the consolidation of Indian and privately owned lands within said districts through exchange, relinquishment, donation, assignment, or purchase of lands or interests therein, including water rights or surface rights to lands, improvements thereon and improvements on undisposed-of ceded lands to the end that the respective Indian and non-Indian land holdings may be consolidated for more beneficial use. Exchanges of lands hereunder shall be made on the basis of equal value, and the value of improvements on lands to be relinquished to the Indians or by Indians to non-Indians shall be given due consideration, and allowance made therefor in the valuation of lieu lands. This section shall apply to tribal land, and trust or otherwise restricted Indian allotments, whether the allottees be living or deceased. In all transactions involving tribal Indian land, the consent of the Shoshone and Arapaho Tribes shall first be obtained. Title to all lands or interests therein acquired by the Government through exchange of tribal land shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Shoshone and Arapaho Tribes of Indians of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo. Title to lands exchanged for individual Indian allotments, or purchased for individual Indians with restricted funds, shall be taken by the United States in trust for the individual Indian allottee or heir. The right herein granted individual Indians to acquire lands by purchase with restricted funds or by exchange shall not extend to lands on the ceded or opened portion of the reservation.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to restore to tribal ownership all undisposed-of surplus or ceded lands within the land-use districts which are not at present under lease or permit to non-Indians; and, further, to restore to tribal ownership the balance of said lands progressively as and when the non-Indian-owned lands within a given land-use district are acquired by the Government for Indian use pursuant to the provisions of this act. All such restorations shall be subject to valid existing rights and claims: Provided, That no restoration to tribal ownership shall be made of any lands within any reclamation project heretofore authorized within the diminished or ceded portions of the reservation.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $1,000,000 authorized in section 3 for use in carrying out the land-purchase and consolidation program hereinbefore authorized shall remain available until expended and any amount expended shall be reimbursed with interest at 4 percent per annum to the Shoshone Tribe of Indians of the Wind River Reservation from joint funds to the credit of the Shoshone and Arapaho Tribes of the Wind River Reservation or from future accruals to said joint fund, as and when said funds accrue. Title to all land purchases made hereunder shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Shoshone and Arapaho Tribes of Indians of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo. All purchases of lands or interests therein made pursuant to this section shall receive the approval of the Shoshone and Arapaho Tribal Councils or of the business committees thereof.

SEC. 7. That in no event shall any portion of the Shoshone judgment fund become liable, payable, or subject to any debt or debts contracted prior to the passage of this act by any Indian of the Shoshone Tribe except debts to the United States or to the tribe, and in no event shall any portion of the Shoshone judgment fund be expended to defray the cost of Federal administration over the Shoshone Tribe, except as herein authorized.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 7, line 2, after the word "tribe", insert a period and strike out "and in no event shall any portion of the Shoshone judgment fund be expended to defray the cost of Federal administration over the Shoshone Tribe, except as herein authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5377) was ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5906) to repeal the prohibition against the filling of a vacancy in the office of district judge for the southern district of New York.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of subsection (d) of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges for certain United States district courts, circuit courts of appeals, and certain courts of the United States for the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 585; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 4j–1), which reads: "Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the southern district of New York by the retirement, disqualification, resignation, or death of judges in office on the date of enactment of this act shall not be filled", be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2150, to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" (38 Stat. 730), approved October 15, 1914, as amended, is further amended by substituting the words "February 1, 1944" for the words "February 1, 1939" in the second paragraph thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike "1944" and insert "1941."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.
